Second, That we bow in humble submission to the will of our Heavenly Father, who is too wise to err and too loving to be unkind, and who has said in His Holy Word, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

It is sad and hard to part from those we love so dearly, but let us not mourn too greatly, for our loss is their eternal gain. "For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also."

ALLEN.

Simon E. Allen, of Ramseur, N. C., was born February 24, 1844; died March 11, 1924; age 80 years and 16 days. He leaves a wife and three sons, five grandchildren, two great-grandchildren, and one brother and many friends to mourn his going. He professed faith in Christ in 1885 and joined the Church at Pleasant Ridge, and continued to the end. He was laid to rest in the cemetery at Pleasant Ridge, and the grave was covered with flowers. One has gone that will be missed by many. Funeral conducted by J. M. Allred and T. J. Green.

ALLRED.

William Asbury Allred was born February 27, 1857; died February 27, 1924; age, 97 years. He was a son of George Allred. He leaves a wife and two sons and one daughter, and one grandchild to mourn his going. He lived near Pleasant Cross Church, on Asheboro R. F. D. Route 1. He professed faith in Christ when young, and held on to the end. He had lingered a long time, but was patient during his long illness. His body was laid to rest in the cemetery at Pleasant Cross to await the resurrection. The funeral was conducted by the writer.

No remedy can cure all ailments of the human body, but an immense number of people suffer from aches, pains and disease symptoms when their real trouble is lack of iron in the blood. It is the iron in your blood that enables you to get the nourishment out of your food. Without iron your food merely passes through you without doing you any good; you don't get the strength out of it. There is one universally known tonic that has helped thousands because it contains iron like the iron in fresh vegetables and like the iron in your blood.

IN REMEMBRANCE.

In loving remembrance of my friend, Annie Lee Bowden, who departed this life about two years ago. "Gone, but not forgotten."

Those merry words no more I hear,
No jolly Annie Lee I can see,
No little arms around my neck,
No whisper upon my ear—
These lips are sealed to me.

Dear Lord, how could I give Annie up
To any one but Thee?
A Annie dear, a Annie kind
Has gone and left us all behind.
Cease to weep, for tears are vain;
Annie dear is out of pain.
Farewell, Annie Lee, dear.

Serve thy God with filial fear,
And meet me in the land above,
Where all is peace, and joy, and love.
He can all our sorrows heal.

An anxious care now sends the thorn
Still deeper in our aching heart.
A tear within her father's eye,
Her mother's aching heart,
Can only tell the agony
How hard it is to part.

NINA JOYNER.

Fortebee

AN EXTERNAL TREATMENT FOR TUBERCULOSIS.

Speedily restoring patients to normal health and strength. Use it yourself. Be your own doctor. Treatment absolutely harmless. A great discovery. Here's what W. T. Woolfolk, Atlee, Va., says about it: "About eleven years ago I developed tuberculosis in both lungs. I went to Colorado twice, and stayed there about three years, but got no relief, and I spent a while in Western North Carolina, but got no relief. About six years ago I got hold of a bottle of Fortebee and used it, and within three days I was greatly improved, and in about three months I was practically well, and have enjoyed excellent health ever since. Fortebee is the greatest remedy for tuberculosis I have ever seen or heard of. It saved my life."

There are others who endorse this remedy as highly as does Mr. Woolfolk. Price per bottle, $2.50; large size, $4.50.

HAND.

Roy Madison Hand was born September 20, 1907, and departed this life on March 17, 1924. He joined Enigma Christian Church in September, 1916. He was a Christian member of Vanceville Christian Church. He gave the first $5 on the Church building at Vanceville, and his sister the second $5. He was faithful and loyal to the Church. He leaves to mourn his loss, father, mother, brother and three sisters. His funeral was conducted from the Vanceville Church by his pastor, assisted by the Baptist preacher of Tifton, Bro. McConnell. A large concourse of people attended the funeral. The following acted as pallbearers: John Hall, Lee Vickers, Duke Mullis, Harry Morgan, Frank Bennett, and Everett McCrea. The pallbearers were his high-school mates. The floral offering was beautiful and elaborate.

May God comfort and keep the bereaved. H. W. ELDER.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By Rev. S. M. Lynam.

The oldest building in the world still standing above ground is said to be a small square temple, built by the Sumerian king, Aannipadda, of Ur, about 4500 B. C. It is nearly twice the age of the relics found in the tomb of King Tut-ankh-Amen.

German Children Suffering.—

Reports from the relief agencies state that suffering among German children is widespread. Tuberculosis is much increased, and living conditions are deplorable. There is a milk shortage of from 6 to 20 per cent for the babies, and none can be had for the children over four years of age. Appeals are being made in behalf of these children, and it would mean much to American children in world relationships to come, could they become saviours of German babies.

House Passes Bonus Bill.—

The adjusted compensation bill has been passed by the House, by a vote of 355 to 54, in the shortest possible time, the rules being suspended so as to limit debate to forty minutes and prohibit amendments. Party lines disappeared in the balloting, and of the opposing votes twenty were cast by Democrats and thirty-four by Republicans. The Senate also was expected to rush the bonus bill through, and plans were laid to put it ahead of the tax revision bill, over which the finance committee still is wrangling.

Everybody's Share.—

If everybody had an equal portion of the nation's wealth, every man, woman and child in the United States would have two thousand nine hundred and eighteen dollars. To divide the wealth of the country into such lots would be impractical, and also it would avail nothing. The nation must have financiers; there must always be labor, and there must always be capital. It is the business of the Church to teach the right use of money. It must teach, too, that the man who works must give an honest day's work for an honest day's wage. In this way only can everybody share in the nation's wealth.

A Significant Act.—

J. Pierpont Morgan is now touring the countries about the Mediterranean. He was met on the steps of his hotel in Athens the other day by Henry Morganthau, former ambassador to Germany, who is now director of the relief work in the Near East, and requested to meet some Greek men prominent in politics and finance at a banquet. Mr. Morgan explained that he was traveling for a rest, and had no time for banquets or public meetings. He dined later with a thousand orphan children who are cared for by the relief agency. This millionaire had no time for the great men of Greece, but he took time for the unknown orphan children. It is a significant act, demonstrating as it does the greatness of the heart of the man. Slowly, it is true, but most certainly the principles of Christ are coming to triumph in the hearts of men.

The Test of Moral Solvency.—

The recent developments of the oil scandal in Washington have made us think that a President should consider moral solvency in considering a man for a public office. Mr. Daugherty has resigned his cabinet position at last. The President has found his successor. The test of moral solvency ought somehow to have been applied, along with the other requirements which the man who is to be Aatorney General should have. "He must know the law, and have administrative ability," Mr. Coolidge says, and the American people ought to insist that he should be a man of high ideals and moral integrity.

If the present exposition of graft in high places is a result of the natural tendencies of our national life, as many insist that it is, we are in a sad plight. The Church has a right, and is in duty bound, to deal with questions of public import, and the message of clean citizenship, as taught by Jesus, should be taught to our boys and girls. The world is turning to the Church for salvation, not alone for its soul, but for its institutions as well. We must not fail, and, looking steadfastly into the face of the Christ and hearing and heeding His words in our hearts, we will not fail. Out of the dark, the Church of the living God will lead the world into the fullness of light.

The Caliphate Falls.—

For many years it has been the custom of the caliph, who is head of the Mohammedan religion, to worship at some mosque each Friday. This scene of pomp and splendor was probably witnessed for the last time on February 29th. On March 3rd, the Turkish Assembly voted to abolish the caliphate, and the caliph, Abdul Medjid, with two of his wives, was hurried out of Turkey during the night. He has taken up his residence in Switzerland.

In 1922, Mohammed VI. was about to be deposed and killed, and to save himself fled the country. On November 24th, Abdul Medjid was chosen caliph and exalted to the highest position in the Moslem world with a brief ceremony. He would have naturally been the successor to the refugee caliph, and he was chosen by the Nationalists in order to save themselves embarrassment. His deposition on March 3rd was the first time it has been necessary for them to reverse their action during the five years during which they have had control of the government.

Kemal Pasha declared at the time of the deposition that the fall of the caliphate would not change the Mohammedan faith; but it is believed in higher political circles in many countries that it will mean the shattering in a large degree of the faith of Islam.

Religious Books Selling.—

Religious books are at last coming into their own. The people of the United States are buying and reading more religious books than ever before. The publication of religious books shows a marked and constantly rising increase. In 1922, there were 595 religious books published in this country. In 1923 the publication rose to 730. Where ten people thought it worth their while to pay for and read a Bible in 1922, eighteen also thought the same thing in the first nine months of 1923, and the proportional increase is expected to be in excess. These figures are significant. As one writer remarks: "Since the great war, the American people are turning their attention to their souls."

Many publishing houses which once thought the publication of religious books impossible are now finding it profitable. The devotional books were once the only sellers, but now books on disputed points of theology are coming into prominence. Religious books are no longer sold alone to ministers. Laymen are buying and reading them.

Pointing out reasons for this, a representative of the Fleming H. Revell Company says that the attention given by the newspapers to the religious controversies is causing the lay mind to inquire into them. All these books are causing the minds of the American people to turn to the Bible itself for help and strength.

Another bookman points out that the unprecedented increase in the sales of religious books cannot be due solely to advertising. Were this true, he declares, they would have sold long ago. It is a significant fact that a life of Christ is a best-seller on the non-fiction list, leading all other books.

All this means that men and women are seeking to know what they believe and why they believe it. They want to know the meaning of Christianity, and to make it a basis for their daily living. It is a hopeful sign when people begin to inquire. Let us be glad that men are turning their attention to their souls, for in these trying days they need the strength and help that can come from God alone through faith in Christ and unceasing prayer translated into action.

The week which has been set aside during the Lenten season for promoting the reading of religious books in each of the past three years has been this year increased to five weeks. There is yet time to buy and read a religious book before Easter, if you have not read yours.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Dr. J. O. Atkinson was with Pastor Ledbetter, at Reidsville, on Sunday last.

Prof. J. W. Fix, Palmer College, has accepted the pastorate of the Lincoln, Kans., Church. We understand that his work is growing in his hands.

It is less than a month now till the Southern Christian Convention meets. It is to be a record-making occasion. Let the Church be much in prayer for the Spirit's leadership.

One of our earnest, faithful laymen from northern Alamance died Sunday afternoon, March 30th—Mr. Charles Maynard. He was a member of Union Church, and devoted to his Church. His many friends will deplore his loss.

Our Church in Columbus, Ga., is without a pastor. This ought to be a strategic point for our cause. We trust they may soon secure a pastor and that a sufficient length of time may be served to guarantee a fruitful ministry.

Mr. W. M. McCauley has just returned to his home at Elon, following a serious operation in the Rainey Hospital, of Burlington. Mr. McCauley has been quite sick for about two months. His friends will rejoice that he is now improving nicely.

The "Elon Catalogue" for 1924-25 comes from the press of the Central Publishing Company, Richmond, Va., this week. Write for one. It shows our college endeavoring to keep right up with the times, yet not deserting the ancient landmarks.

The "International Journal of Religious Education" is to be issued this September for the first time. With Dr. W. E. Raffety as editor, it bids fair to achieve a large distinction. The price is $2.00 the year. It begins with a guaranteed circulation of 35,000.

Rev. R. F. Brown is doing an excellent work as pastor at Pleasant Hill, Ohio. His articles in the Herald of Gospel Liberty have been attracting wide attention. We are glad to include an Easter message from his pen in this issue of THE SUN.

Dr. C. H. Rowland is planning for a great ingathering at Easter in the First Church, of Greensboro. He will begin a series of meetings, with himself as preacher and Mr. Alfred Shumate as song leader, to culminate at Easter. He is pleased with the outlook in Greensboro.

Messrs. P. J. Carlton, Richmond, Va.; H. A. Carlton, Raleigh, N. C., and Luther Carlton, of Kinston, N. C., were pleasant visitors to the college. Elon has no stauncher friends than these three brothers, nor has the Christian Church any members more loyal and devout than these splendid Christian laymen.

We understand that our Burlington and Greensboro Churches are planning to employ all-time directors of religious education next year. We are more than pleased to see these contemplated forward steps. Suffolk, Raleigh, Durham, Richmond and other Churches will soon be taking such steps, we trust.

Dr. E. H. Bowling, Durham, was a visitor to the college Sunday. He is a tither of thirty-three years' standing, and says he derives more benefit and pleasure from tithing than from any other ministry of the Church. It is good for a layman thus to testify.

We understand that President M. W. Hook, of Bethlehem College, has resigned. He has done a fine piece of work for Bethlehem, and we hope he may be prevailed on to remain as president. He is a most consecrated layman, and his wife is one of our most capable women workers.

Hon. J. Elmer long, an Elon man and son of the late Jacob A. Long, is a candidate for the lieutenant-governorship of North Carolina. From his previous record in the General Assembly and his high standards as a gentleman and Christian, we feel sure he would make a faithful and efficient official.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN is not in politics, but we are glad when men of the personal integrity of President Coolidge and Josephus Daniels offer themselves for the presidency. These gentlemen are able men, to be sure; but what we like most about them is their old-fashioned moral rectitude. With the choice between two such gentlemen, the country would be assured of honest and moral administration.

Mr. Samuel McPherson, a loyal member of the Pleasant Hill (Alamance) Church, died last week. He is the father of Drs. S. D. and C. W. McPherson. Mr. W. W. McPherson is another son. Mr. Ed. McPherson, former superintendent of the Christian Orphanage, is still another son. Bro. McPherson is a type of citizen the country needs—modest, diligent, reverent. We extend our sympathy to the bereaved.

Beginning with this issue, Rev. S. M. Lynam will supply the department which is known as "THE SUN'S Observatory." If his first installment is representative of his work in this direction, we may well congratulate ourselves on what is in store for us. Bro. Lynam graduates from Elon this May. He is a very promising minister and writer.

Dr. Barrett has decided to enter the Lawrence Hospital, Winston-Salem, N. C., where Dr. Staley had much excellent attention and success. It is much nearer home—a great convenience to Mrs. Barrett and his friends here. All mail should be addressed to him at Elon College. Mrs. Barrett will attend to it promptly. Let the brotherhood remember our beloved editor in prayer.

The Baptist State Convention for North Carolina has done two forward-looking things. It has appointed five leading business men as trustees for a fund to be perpetually administered for the good of the Church, and it has voted to issue $750,000 of bonds for Meredith College, giving its own note and paying both bonds and interest over a term of years. This frees the college from debt and enables it at once to go forward.

We notice that the Greensboro Daily News each Monday morning carries an impressive resume of Dr. C. H. Rowland's Sunday morning sermon. We are glad to see this. Some layman in every Church should take it on himself to furnish the Monday's papers of his city with such a resume of the pastor's Sunday discourse. If well written and if worthy, the press will gladly accord space for such messages. More people than you would think will read such accounts.

The Christian Church has some of the best people on earth. It may be some feel, like Elijah, that they are the only ones not gone after Baal; but the Lord told Elijah that there were 7,000 that had not bowed the knee to Baal. These good people are the salt of the earth. Many, many, in sending in their renewals of subscription to THE SUN have expressed their wishes for its success—"$5.00 to pay up my back dues, and please continue paper"; "$6.00 enclosed, will send more soon"; "$10.00, and when this is cut, notify me." Do you suppose such people do not love the Lord and their Church and its enterprises?

One of the standing committees of the Southern Christian Convention should be charged with the consideration of memorials from the Conferences. Quite a number of such items have been referred to the Convention for its judgment at this session. Some of these questions are the relation of the Southern Christian Convention to the General Convention financial program; the merging of the Education and Religious Education Boards; provision for a special Conference board on the education of the ministry, etc. Some of these proposals will require amendments to the Principles and Government. Notice is hereby given that these proposals, as printed in the 1924 issue of the "Christian Annual," will be presented to the Southern Christian Convention, and that the notice therein will be insisted upon as ample for urging the adoption or rejection of these measures by the Convention at its approaching session.

ITEMS REFERRED TO S. C. C.

From Eastern Virginia Conference.

Financial support for the General Convention's Board of Christian Education.

From North Carolina Conference.

The pooling of the home mission funds in the bounds of the Convention Mission Board.

Provision for a committee on public welfare and relief in place of the committee on moral reform, both for the Convention and for the several Conferences.

Provision of a board of Christian education having to do with Sunday Schools, Christian Endeavor, and colleges; and also provision of a board of the Christian ministry, having to do with all questions pertaining to the ministry, both for the Convention and for the several Conferences.

Provision for a budget committee in place of the present apportionment committee of the Convention and of the several Conferences.

Notice.—Notice is hereby given that amendments to the Principles and Government will be offered covering these items at the approaching session of the Southern Christian Convention.

NOTICE.

The Executive Board of the Southern Christian Convention has accepted the invitation to hold the next session of the Convention in the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., April 29th to May 2nd, inclusive, 1924. All chairmen of Convention boards and committees are hereby requested to send to Dr. L. E. Smith, president, Norfolk, Va., any suggestions for the Convention program. The program committee wishes to have the co-operation of every department in making out the program for next session.

THE PROMISE OF JESUS REALIZED.

The fact that God would glorify Jesus, through the Holy Spirit—that is the promise of Jesus realized. The Holy Spirit is abroad in the world. When two or three meet in the name of Jesus, some definite thing is done for the betterment of the human race. It has been proven thousands of times. In Acts 6:8, we read: "But ye shall receive power after the Holy Ghost is come upon you and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem and in all Judea, and in Samaria and unto the uttermost part of the earth."

That is the great promise on the strength of which we labor. That is the basic impulse that makes us go everywhere to evangelize. That is the logic of missionary endeavor. No Christian, whether he makes an individual fight for power or throws himself into the battle for world conquest, need go without that power which enables him to succeed. This at once takes away our discouragement. This puts the iron in our blood and the steel in our determination.—Ex.

THE BUDGET SYSTEM.

The budget system as proposed by Dr. Harper may not be practical in every detail, but it is getting at the thing we, as a Church, need to do. I believe this system can be worked without becoming mechanical. I believe that if there is an institution on earth that should have a systematic way of doing things, it is the Church of Christ. A workable financial system should not, I think, interfere with the spiritual growth of the Church; but, on the other hand, help the Church to become more ideal and Christ-like.

Wherever the budget system has been given a fair chance in the local Church, it has worked fine, and has increased Church activities along other lines. I think Dr. Harper's plan, after some modifications, can be carried out in every local Church. It may not work so well for the first two or three years, but I believe with each passing year the results would be more gratifying.

I would suggest that the plan be simplified as much as possible, and then let our people understand what we are trying to do and what we want, and I believe they will respond, and do so cheerfully. I am in favor of the plan, or something similar. W. L. Wells.

A CHURCH AND PASTOR ADDED.

For many years now there has been at Havre de Grace, Md., an independent congregation known as the Webster Community Church, affiliated with the Methodist Protestant Conference of Maryland, and served by one of its ministers.

The Church has a membership of 116, and is situated in one of the finest farming sections of Maryland. The membership consists of prosperous, progressive farmers, and bids fair to experience a rapid increase.

Without knowing it, this Church was organized on our platform, and when Dr. R. C. Helfenstein explained our position to them, having been invited to do so by the congregation, they voted unanimously to become a Christian Church, changing their name to the Webster Community Christian Church.

On March 27th, the Church passed the following resolution, which it addressed to the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference:

"Greeting,—In behalf of the trustees of the Webster Community Christian Church, the official board and congregation, this petition is presented to you, praying that the executive board will take favorable action to ordain our pastor, Rev. Milton W. Sutcliffe, as early as possible, owing to the circumstances connected with our Church declaring its independence from the Methodist Protestant Church.

"Mr. Sutcliffe has served us faithfully, and we recommend him very highly as a pastor and preacher of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

"Trusting that this petition will be given immediate attention, and that for the work's sake you will grant the prayer of this congregation and officials, we are,

Faithfully yours in Christ,

(Signed) "Irvin H. Preston,

"Secretary of Trustees of Webster Community Christian Church."

Eastern Virginia Acts.

The People's Church, of Dover, upon receipt of this resolution, forwarded it, with the urgent approval of its official board, to the Executive Committee of the Eastern Virginia Conference, and on Monday evening, March 31st, in Norfolk, Milton W. Sutcliffe was duly ordained to the gospel ministry in our Church. The Webster Community Christian Church was also at that time received into full fellowship by the Eastern Virginia Conference.

Rev. Milton W. Sutcliffe graduated from the Philadelphia High School, spent two years in Temple University, one year in the Philadelphia Divinity School, and one year in the Episcopal Seminary at Alexandria, Va. He began his ministry as an Episcopal rector, but being unable to find himself in accord with the organization of the Church, after seven years, withdrew. He has had wide experience in rural Church work, as city missionary among Italians and Chinese, in hospital work, and for the past two years as pastor of the Church which has now come, with him, into the fellowship of our denomination. Dr. Helfenstein writes: "He has for years held the conviction which possessed the founders of the Christian Church—that of religious democracy." And now thinks he has found the haven of his heart's quest and soul's desire. We can easily believe it, and we wish for him and his congregation every joy in the service of the Lord, as well as in the fellowship of our brotherhood.

HOW IT WILL WORK—NO. 3.

This is the third article in the series on the proposed budget plan. In the first article it was shown how the sum of money we propose to raise would be allocated to the several regional Conventions, local Churches, and general enterprises. In the second, the administrative features were treated; and in this final one of the series, the educational features are to be discussed.

But before we take up this discussion, let it be said that it will be at least two years before the proposed plan could become operative. It will, therefore, interfere in no way with Men and Millions. It is designed to give us an ample income when the extraordinary money that comes from that source shall have ceased its beneficent flow. When Men and Millions are over, no doubt the missionary secretary and our college presidents can get in the field and raise money for their necessities. They have done it so far, and can do it again. But what about superannuation? What of the Board of Religious Education? What of THE CHRISTIAN SUN? What of the other causes? If we are ever going to have a well-thought-out, consistent policy, now is the time to move. Two years from now will be too late. It is now, or a crippled Church; a Church crippled in all its departments.

Merely to increase the apportionments as Dr. Staley's plan proposes will not likely raise the necessary funds. Unless we can couple with the increase ample administrative and forward-looking educational features we cannot reasonably hope for success. We are raising about the maximum by the apportionment method as such. An examination of the "Christian Annual" for the past eight years shows no increase to encourage us. Apportionments as such are lacking in motive and are mechanical. It is the educational method that brings the warmth and the possibility of spiritual growth through giving that is otherwise mechanical. This method we now purpose briefly to discuss.

The general budget board for the Christian Church will carefully consider every cause and will then make what, for the lack of a better term, we may call "The Church Year." This year will include proper and proportionate emphasis for every cause, such as missions, home and foreign, evangelism, superannuation, Christian education, publications, etc., assigning periods of the year to each. This would then be passed down to the regional Conventions, to the local Conferences, to the local Churches for ratification and adaptation. It is conceivable that community conditions would occasionally necessitate changes in the Church year of many a local Church. The privilege of such adaptation should always be recognized, though so far as possible, every reasonable effort should be made to co-operate with the general denominational program or at least at some time in the year to incorporate all its features in the schedule of each particular local Church.

The general budget secretary of the General Convention would be charged with gathering the necessary information for a consistent and constructive educational campaign for all the departments participating in the budget. In many cases, he would rely on the department secretaries for the preparation of literature. In some cases, he would collect the facts and prepare the literature. In any event, he would be responsible, acting in accordance with the wishes and plans of the regional and Conference budget secretaries for getting this literature in the hands of pastors, superintendents, and the other local leaders with definite suggestions as to how best to use it for educational purposes.

The real test of the educational method is in the local Church. The pastor and other leaders must make use of the information furnished them in their public messages, notices, announcements, etc., or the literature need not be sent. Should the Sunday School enter into the budget, using envelopes for payment, the person receiving the envelopes in the class or divisional offering periods would have to make the enterprises supported by the budget live for the children. Some one should be appointed by each class to take its offering to the Church service and there deposit it. For very young children when there is no junior Church, the teacher would naturally be the one to do this. Beginning with the primary age, the child elected should do it, the class sitting in a body with the teacher where practicable at the Church service. If there is a junior Church, the giving exercise may be postponed to this Church or conducted in the individual class or division, as is preferred, the person appointed in case of the latter taking the offering to the junior Church service.

If we need systematic giving on the part of the adults, we need it all the more on the part of the children. They are our hope. An auxiliary organization in a local Church has the same right to use spasmodic methods of giving to benevolent enterprises that a Church has. Each such organization should be encouraged to say, through its delegated officials, how much it wishes to give for benevolence and also for current expenses of the Church. It should then subscribe through the budget, pay through the envelopes, and be kept thoroughly enlightened as to all the enterprises of the Church through the educational method. The budget secretary of the local Church is of course the key-person to see that all the Church officials and departments really keep functioning educationally, because upon the success of this method locally administered, the whole financial future of the kingdom hinges.

As to how the pastor or a teacher or other leader would bring the causes represented in the budget home to the hearts of the givers, there would be a possible wide range of variety. One method that is employed with splendid response has been to say in connection with the offering that "today we make our offering through the budget, keeping our minds fixed on our mountain work." Then follows an enthusiastic and gripping account of the achievements and needs of that cause. Likewise, with reference to any other cause. With children of tender years, the budget need not be referred to, but merely a story relative to the cause of the period and a statement that we now will give for this purpose through our envelopes.

One thing is absolutely certain—we must have a financial system, incorporating all the excellencies of our present apportionment plan, plus proper administrative agencies, plus educational features, that our giving may be intelligent, warm, spiritually uplifting and exhilarating, and not, as now, all too often spasmodic, cold and mechanical. The Southern Christian Convention is under necessity to face this issue and due answer to its challenge make. So mote it be. Amen.

TESTING THE MATTER IN A PRACTICAL WAY.

It is easy to make a claim, but to prove the claim is to be true—that is quite another thing! The claims which modernism makes to bringing forth fruit for the cause of Christ are quite strong, and if they could be shown to be true, would, in a large measure, tend to give that cult a strong place in the Lord's work; but they find it practically impossible, as we believe, to establish the claims they make.

Only a little while ago, great claims were made for the great things the preaching of Dr. Fosdick is supposed to be accomplishing. One of his admirers undertook to put the claims to a test; and he did it, but the results almost shut his mouth. What he found will prove an interesting study, especially for the men and women who are leaning toward modernism. Friends, face the facts as we find them given in an editorial in the Presbyterian Standard, of Charlotte, N. C. The following is the editorial—read it and study it with care:

"Fosdick and Figures.

"You cannot put the total fruits of a preacher's work into statistics. 'One sows and another reaps,' and the sowing which does not lend itself to tabulation is just as important as the reaping. Yet when a preacher has gained nation-wide popularity, and is credited with preaching the gospel in a wonderfully forceful, attractive and effective manner, you reasonably look for many conversions. Such a preacher is Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, the Baptist preacher who occupies the pulpit of the First Presbyterian Church of New York City. His preaching is of such a remarkable character that the Presbytery of New York feels in duty bound to defy the mandate of the General Assembly rather than deprive the congregation of the First Church the benefit of his sermons. The special charm of his preaching is that he interprets the gospel in terms of present-day thinking; and in this way, it is contended, he wins for the cause of Christ multitudes on whom the old traditional views of the gospel have lost their hold.

"If the current estimate of his preaching by his admirers and defenders is correct, we would naturally expect to see large additions to the communion roll. One who writes himself down as an admirer of Dr. Fosdick and a believer in his orthodoxy, has subjected his preaching to the test of figures. Here is the result: A group of ten Churches were chosen, the average membership of which was about the same as the membership of the First Church of New York. The test covers the five years from 1919 to 1923, inclusive. In 1919, the group of ten Churches averaged 60 additions on examination; the First Church, 27. In 1920, the group average was 75; the First Church, 44. In 1921, the group average was 117; the First Church, 36. In 1922, the group average was 94; the First Church, 34. In 1923, the group average was 105; the First Church, 40. The aggregate group average for the five years was 451; for the First Church, 181. That is to say, each of the ten Churches averages during the five years exactly two and one-half times as many members on examination as the First Church.

"The writer who applies this test, adds the following comment: 'The cost of maintenance of the New York First was the greatest of all the Churches under review by tens of thousands of dollars annually. The student of the figures is led then to the conclusion that whatever work may be done by the great Church of which the venerable and altogether saintly Dr. George Alexander is pastor, and Drs. Fosdick and Speers the preachers, the additions to the kingdom is pitifully small, and secured at the highest cost.'

"The writer, while impressed with the barrenness of Dr. Fosdick's preaching, does not suggest any explanation. We venture to offer an explanation, an explanation in harmony with views we have frequently expressed, namely: the broader the liberalism, the less spiritual power. Liberalism utterly fails to present the scriptural teaching as to the enormity of sin, Dr. Fosdick scornfully rejects the doctrine of substitutionary atonement. The expiation of the sinner's guilt by the blood of Christ is abhorrent to the modern mind; and so Dr. Fosdick will have none of it. But if sin can be forgiven without expiation, then sin is a slight matter. Rob God of vindicatory justice and He is not a God to be dreaded. Preaching that fails to unveil the deadly, damning nature of sin, and that presents a God who has no justice to be placated, and however beautiful and eloquent it may be, it has nothing in it to arouse the conscience, to prick sinners in their hearts and make them cry out: 'Men, brethren, what must we do to be saved?' Paul: 'Knowing the terror of the Lord, we persuade men.' Dr. Fosdick, a typical liberal, does not know the 'terror of the Lord,' and consequently does not make sinners know it. Jesus pointed sinners to a God whose justice was to be feared: 'Fear not them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do. But I will forewarn you whom ye shall fear: fear Him who after He hath killed, hath power to cast into hell. Yea, I say unto you, fear Him.' We recall that Dr. Fosdick once spoke disparagingly of Jonathan Edwards' religion. If he wishes to see sinners converted, he would do well to take lessons from Jonathan Edwards as a preacher."

SOME HARD QUESTIONS IN CHRISTIANITY.

Have you found some of that kind in your life and experience? Well, most of us have; and if you have, that only proves that you may be in good company.

The United Presbyterian has some good things to say along this line, and we wish you would read the following for yourself and see if some of your hard questions are not answered in the following:

"Let God Explain Himself.

"When we cannot understand a person's conduct, we ask him for an explanation. No fair-minded person will condemn any one until this privilege has been accorded. Our laws guarantee to even the most immoral the right to testify in their own behalf. Why do we not do as much for God?

"We instinctively feel that there is an obligation resting upon God for His creatures. Man feels responsible for the animals he owns and the children he brings into the world. Is God less moral? Jesus settled this. He said that not a sparrow falls to the ground without His notice, and that man is of more value than many sparrows.

"But the sparrow 'falls'—that is the difficulty. Why did not God prevent its fall? More still, why did God's wind blow it out of the nest? A great many people want that question answered. That was the problem discussed by Job and his friends.

Three things God said to Job in reply. They do not furnish a complete answer, but they point out the way.

"(1) 'Why are you finding fault with me? I did not send this trouble. Satan is its author.' The answer still holds. This is not the world God made. He made it perfect. Neither sickness nor sorrow were in the original program. He made all things 'very good.' Its discords and sorrows were introduced by Satan. If man had not sinned, there would have been no problem of this kind. When you permit some one to tamper with the strings of your priceless violin so that it gives forth discords instead of harmony, you do not blame the maker. When you carelessly expose yourself and contract pneumonia, do not blame it on God. His laws are all beneficent, but when violated they necessarily bring suffering. We blame a great many 'providential dealings' on God for which we alone are responsible. The sooner we learn this truth, the better.

"(2) But God permitted Satan to afflict Job! Why? The second thing God said to that suffering man was, 'Wait until I am through. Wait until you see how it turns out.' When one interrupts you in the middle of a sentence with a contradiction you indignantly say, 'Wait until I finish the sentence. I am only half through.' This is a semi-coln, not a period.' Let God do His own punctuating. The complete sentence may contradict and certainly will make clear the unfinished half. You take your friends to the studio of the artist who is painting your picture. He at once begins to criticise—"The colors are dull, the curves are not well rounded.' You say, indignantly, 'Wait until he has finished. He has just gotten the rough outline. It will not be nearly so handsome as I am for several sittings yet.' Why not be as fair with God? The splendidly developed, the richly rewarded Job was the perfected sentence, the finished picture.

"(3) Job's problem was not perfectly solved, but the voice from the whirlwind revealed the divine wisdom and power and love in such measure that Job was speechless with shame that he had dared to doubt the care of a God so good and great.

"We have a knowledge of the incalculable magnitude of the universe and of the infinite wisdom and power that rule it, beside which that which silenced Job was as nothing. But we have infinitely more. God's revelation of Himself in His Son and of His love in Calvary, should make us silent and trustful when we cannot understand —even when life seems a stark contradiction to all that seems kind and wise.

"Let God explain Himself!"

"MAY CHRISTIANS TELL LIES?"

Such a suggestion is an abomination, as we believe, and ye there are people who claim to believe that a Christian may tell lies—not the mere "white lies," as they are sometimes called, but lies in a religious service. The thought is repulsive, and yet the Sunday School Times tells us hat one of the bishops of the Episcopal Church takes the stand that one may tell lies under certain conditions, and not do wrong in telling them. The Times says that Bishop Lawrence, of Massachusetts, says it is not wrong to tell certain lies. Bishop Lawrence puts it this way: "There is no essential connection between the virgin birth and the incarnation. And so, if one believes in the incarnation and is sincere, and since the virgin birth is not essential to it, such a one may say the Creed, even though unable to accept the doctrine of the virgin birth. Of course, evangelical Christians cannot agree with the bishop that the virgin birth of Christ, plainly declared in God's Word, is not essential.

No matter how many bishops say it is not wrong to tell a lie by repeating in a religious service a creed which you do not believe, it is still not true, as we see it, and we hope our readers may never yield to this sort of talk. Some people, it seems to us, do not receive the love of the truth, but to such there is a fearful day awaiting a settlement with them. Let us not tell lies in what we say in a religious service. We should certainly take as much care to tell the truth in what we say in a religious service as anywhere on the top of this green earth.

"LOVE."

I have been thinking for some time that I would write a few lines to THE SUN for publication, but have neglected it so many times until I can hardly start this morning. I have undertaken to write on a great subject, but a poor scholar like myself cannot do it justice, though I will try and "break the ice," and let a more qualified man carry the subject on.

We remember back at Moses' birth that motherly love kept Moses hid from Pharaoh; and mother loved Moses so well that when she had kept him hid as long as she could, that she made a basket and placed her dear son in it and placed him in or near the river. Don't you imagine that that mother's heart almost melted within her breast? And when Pharaoh's daughter found Moses, and little Moses' sister went and called for mother to nurse little brother, at the request of Pharaoh's daughter, I am sure that was the happiest mother in the whole world. It took love and faith in God for that mother to place that child at the river, not knowing what would become of her child.

Likewise, it grieved Jesus' mother to come from heaven to this old sinful world to die for our sins.

But Jesus so loved the world that He died for the remission of our sins. And God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever would believe on Him would have everlasting life.

How much better are we than Christ? Could we forsake home, children, wife and loved ones and die for our Saviour? If we have any of the love and faith in God that Jesus had, I dare say we would do anything for the salvation of some poor sinner who knows not Christ in the free pardon of these sins. Let us hear from some brother who can handle this subject and give it justice, and also remember me in your prayers.

FROM WALTERS, VA.

We have at this time moved to Walters. We did live one or two miles from the village. The pounding spoken of some time ago has not come to an end as yet. We trust and truly believe the work of the Church and Sunday School is growing in interest.

As to the pounding, a few days ago Bro. and Sister James B. Bland gave us fresh sausage. Bro. S. A. Barrett gave us a nice shoulder of fresh pork. Sister Nannie V. Bradshaw gave us a nice lot of fresh meat. Bro. A. L. Holland, a bag of sweet potatoes. Bro. and Sister E. W. Beale, Irish potatoes and sausage. Bro. and Sister Elihu Lankford, a nice shoulder of fresh pork, etc. The people have been very kind in helping us move. Many kind things have been done that I have not time or space to mention, but they are appreciated just the same, and make the writer more anxious to serve for the glory of God and the best interest of the people.

As to the work, it seems to be taking on renewed interest in both Sunday School and Church. We have organized a Christian Endeavor Society in which the young people appear to be very much interested. We are having good congregations at the Sunday night service, and a good deal of interest is being shown.

Sunday, March 3rd, we had 186 in Sunday School, and a very large congregation at preaching service. We are working and praying that this may grow into a great work to the glory of God, the strengthening of the Christians, and the salvation of the sinners. Let us do our best and trust God for results.

We had a good congregation at Johnson's Grove Sunday, March 3rd. They have some faithful people at Johnson's Grove, and I believe God will bless the efforts put forth in His name.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Mr. S. E. Everett and I went to Zion (colored) Christian Church, near Box Elder, in Nansemond County, on Sunday, March 23rd, to be present at the morning service. It was a program called "Installation Services," continued for eight days, and ending on Sunday evening, March 30th, with the installation of Rev. J. B. Jones as pastor. Rev. Geo. D. Eastes, Rev. J. H. Lightbourne and I were the white ministers on the program for different days, and colored ministers occupied the pulpit on other days. Rev. S. A. Howell, D. D., of Newport News, preached the final and installation sermon. It was a great week for Zion, and Zion is a splendid Church, in a fine neighborhood not far from Holy Neck Christian Church, of which Rev. Geo. D. Eastes is pastor; and it is not far from Holland, where Rev. J. H. Lightbourne is pastor. Bro. Everett, who was born in that community and who has been Commonwealth's attorney for Nansemond County, and knows everybody in that district, was called upon to pray, to speak, and to take the offering; and he responded heartily and made a fine speech. I preached for the congregation at the morning service, which lasted three and a half hours. I was impressed by the length of the service and the close attention given throughout the whole time by the congregation. The contrast between the length of services in colored Churches and white Churches furnishes food for thought.

Human society usually runs to extremes, and it may do so in worship. Perhaps, colored people protract their services too long; perhaps white congregations contract their time in Church too short. The races differ. The negro race is more religious than the white race. The white race is more intellectual than the negro race. No one has ever known a negro skeptic or atheist. They all believe in the Christian religion, and worship is joyous to them. Among white people, there are many infidels, skeptics, atheists, agnostics, and all sorts of intellectual attitudes toward God, toward Jesus, and toward the Bible. These opposite, inherent characteristics need opposite treatment. It is safe to assume that the weakest point in any sphere should receive greatest care and most careful development. Physicians work on the weakest spots in physical life. Farmers put their greatest efforts on the poorest spots in the land. Government dredges the harbors that need it most. All repair work is in the line of helping the weakest spots. White folks need heart training as well as heart change most of all. Negroes need mind training most. They are naturally religious.

White worshipers need to wait on the Lord. "Wait, I say, on the Lord" (Ps. 27:14). The age in which we live and worship suggests brevity rather than length, certainly in sermons; but impatience in the house of God does not suggest worship. It takes time to separate the mind and heart from secular things and to commune with God through Christ. A revival always breaks out by protracted services. It is that last prayer, that last song, that last testimony, that witnesses a manifestation of spiritual presence and power. Expressed in terms of hymns, the colored people would have their praise written in long meter, and the white people would write theirs in short meter. The hymn book contains both long and short meters and special meters. Variety is not only the spice of life, but it is the heart of worship. A fixed schedule as to the length of time for worship crystalizes emotion, kills spontaneity in expression, robs worship of its soul, chills the atmosphere of God's house, and dismisses the unconverted without spiritual conviction—the very thing they most need. THE RESURRECTION OF JESUS—AN EASTER MESSAGE.

By Rev. R. F. Brown, M. A.

What is the resurrection? It is not reanimation, which simply means the restoration of physical life. Lazarus was reanimated, but Jesus was resurrected. Lazarus returned to life in the same natural, weak, corruptible body of the grave, and in order to live again in the same body it was required that the stone be rolled away from the tomb. Out of the tomb he brought the cerements that were about him. To be resuscitated, it was required that an external power be brought to bear. He could not live unless the spirit were reunited. But in the resurrection of Christ it was not required that the stone be rolled away to let Christ out, but the angel rolled the stone away to let the outsiders in. His resurrection was more than resuscitation, reanimation. It was the reunion of the spirit with the new and different body. But while it was a new and different body, it was also the same body. Christianity is noted for its paradoxes, and this is one of them. Christ came from the tomb without the cerements, without the marks of the natural body. He proceeded through the walls of the sealed tomb, leaving all natural elements behind Him, and He entered into the atmosphere of a new life. The natural elements which He left behind Him bore eloquent testimony to His entrance into this new life, just as the empty, broken shell of the chrysalis announces the new life of the butterfly. The resurrection of Christ was effected by His own volition. It was divinity in action. It was a thoroughfare through which immortality journeyed. It is God's method of cultivation. It is the divine means of accomplishing an end. It is a tenet of Christianity, a Christian revelation, a disclosure of the naturalness of the supernatural, a history of the rising soul, a treatise on soul-perpetuation, the perfection of a spiritual body for eternity.

Unbelief in the Easter message of the empty tomb is one of the saddest facts of the twentieth century. The false exegesis of certain present-day theologists distinguishes between the Easter message on the one hand and the Easter faith on the other. By the Easter faith, they mean that Jesus still lives, but that the tomb was not opened, and that Jesus did not appear as the gospel narrative indicates. This was the doctrine of the Sadducees in Christ's time. "The Sadducees say that there is no resurrection, neither angel nor spirit; but the Pharisees confess both," according to the Apostle Paul. These babblers believe in immortality, but do not believe that the resurrection sustains any relation to immortality. No one experiences any difficulty in believing in immortality. It was taught and believed by pagans. That the soul is immortal is not a tenet of Christianity only. It is an ancient doctrine, receiving the attention of the Egyptians five thousand years before Christ, and was discussed by Plato five centuries before the Christian era. But the resurrection is the tenet of Christianity; yet there are many who will not accept it. But they can and do accept other facts less pivotal and less vital to the Christian system. It is evident that a good reason for unbelief in the resurrection is absent. On the other hand, the grounds for acceptance of the resurrection as a cardinal fact of Christianity and an appropriate action in the light of that fact are upheld by Paul as being most substantial. I am heartily in sympathy with scientific research, and I shout for the advance of knowledge, but of some of the new theories and new knowledge I am not at all sure. I do not think that science and Christianity are enemies, but I do think that science is overstepping its rights when it tries to explain the resurrection on a scientific basis. There ase two ways to approach any problem. One method begins with the mystery and works backward, denying the facts until the mystery is resolved. The other method begins with the facts, holding the mystery in abeyance until the evidence is assembled. There would be no occasion for confusion if the person who does not believe in the resurrection would approach the mystery through the facts given in the Bible.

While the resurrection of Jesus Christ is the pivotal point in the gospel story, and challenges man's faith as no other story does, and is the best substantiated by undeniable facts of any event in all history, it has an application that is stupendous, gratifying, and far-reaching. If the historical truthfulness of the resurrection is all the miracle of the ages could mean to mortal man, the significance of the oft-repeated Easter story would have paled into insignificance as an annual spring fastival centuries ago. But it has a meaning that is far more valuable, and sweeter, and more important than the historical facts can ever portray. Its spiritual value is far-reaching. It brings a comfort to man that nothing else can bring. It reacts upon man with an ever-profound and growing conviction that Jesus still lives as conquering, redeeming Lord; that His enemies could not defeat Him; that the living, conquering Christ leads us on to the glorious consummation of immortality. It is not His scars, nor His dead body that claims our attention, but His ever-living spirit that calls forth sincere confession and reverent devotion. His life today is a distinct rebuke to the spookology taught by some people. Christology is far better than the spookology practiced by those who would communicate with departed spirits. A belief in and a communication with the Spirit of all spirits is the great need of the Church today. Such an act of faith would be the spring of a new life in the world.

The resurrection teaches another important lesson. It is a confirmation of the fact that immortality is the universal birthright of humanity. Jesus took immortality for granted. He said: "God is not the God of the dead, but of the living." The doctrine of immortality and the resurrection occupied a leading place in the teaching of the apostles, and they staked their lives and the success of their mission upon it. They made it plain that it was a heritage into which every mortal should enter. And I believe that God would be defeated if there were no resurrection of the dead. No one with any degree of sanity could think of God building His spiritual kingdom out of dead people. The resurrection is an announcement that God will not permit death to destroy life. The thing we call death is God's way of imparting life. The central tenet of Christianity is that man is not born to die eternally. The resurrection of Jesus Christ is a rebuke to the loathsome idea that the function of Christianity is to prepare people for death. Its chief function is to prepare people for life. Death is introduced only as a means to an end. "That which thou sowest is not made alive except it die."

"Dressed in her tender green,
I viewed the sweet earth lying,
When smoth my heart the cry,
'But living leads to dying.'

"Then came a trumpet call,
Through hill and dale replying,
'Though life lead on to death,
We come to life through dying.'"

It was Paul who said: "If the dead rise not, then is our preaching vain and your faith is vain, and we are yet in our sins and we are false witnesses of God if the dead rise not." By dying, we enter into the universal heritage of humanity —immortality.

The resurrection and immortality are necessary to make life worth living. There is more to life than that which we experience in this mortal body. I cannot advance a prophecy as to how this enlarging life, this fuller joy, this great triumph is to be accomplished. I would not undermine the temple of hope that I have or barter the comforts of a living faith for the passing joy of knowing how God does it. I am satisfied to know that God does it, and I am satisfied to wait for this great consummation and listen to His voice who says: "I am the resurrection and the life; as I live, ye shall live also."

THE COMING CHURCH.

The Church today is a congregation of faithful people organized for the worship of God and the service of man; and we cannot think that the coming Church will be essentially different, for should it cease to do either or both it would die. The Church is simply organized religion, and so long as man remains religious, the Church will continue. At present we are too apt to go to the extremes, both in the pulpit and in the pews; but the Church of the future will strike a reasonable balance between the two functions of worship and service. Speaking broadly, the pews declare that they want spiritual preaching, sermons that deal with the great fundamental spiritual realities of the universe and of life, with God and man, with the imitation of Christ, with duty, righteousness, holiness and immortality. On the other hand, many ministers are declaring, in effect if not in words: Yes, that is what you want, but this is what you ought to have, and they give them the ethics of the single tax, the fight against tuberculosis, wife desertion, child welfare, socialism, housing, capital and labor—rightly emphasizing the obligation to work as well as pray. In one Church, the minister preached against the tariff, and the Standard Oil Company, and a deacon left the Church because, he said, he did not like a creed which included the price of oil and the eight-hour day; but it is a thousand times better to divide on such a question as this than it is on whether baptism shall be by sprinkling or immersion. Any live question is better than a dead one.

Now we must sympathize with both of these opinions respecting the Church's functions, for we all feel the pressure of current materialism. The struggle for a living, for wealth, for power, for social position is common to all. It is not strange that some are overwhelmed by it and lose their interest in whatever lies beyond the range of physical vision; neither is it strange, man being what they are, sons of the living God, that many who are in the thick of the conflict should have a great heart-hunger for something which this world and this life cannot give.

Furthermore, the vast majority of the thirty-four millions of Church members in this country are not forgetful of the claims of service, they are not oblivious of the sufferings of humanity, nor oppressors of the poor, nor robbers of the communities in which they live. Most of these are just plain men and women who are trying to do their duty and who will gladly do all they can to make humanity happier and the world better. Of course, there are some within the Church, "malefactors of wealth," and malefactors of poverty, who would like to climb up into the other class, who no doubt deserve castigation. It is salutary now and then to point out the ethical implications of business and social practices and abuses, and on occasion to uncork the vials of wrath, but even so the right perspective in these matters should always be maintained.

The social gospel is being preached today from every sort of pulpit; it is attacking the old enemies of mankind—ignorance, disease, and sin—with such sledge-hammer blows that they are weakening visibly; but these agencies are too material, and social work needs unspeakably the poetry, the passion, the inspiration, and the interpretation of its message which the Church is able to give. The Church cannot escape responsibility for the personal conduct of its members; neither can it avoid responsibility for the way in which are fulfilled its functions of social service. Any Church having declared that it exists in part to serve men must see to it that it actually renders service—useful, efficient, many-sided; that is, it must see to it that its members render such service, for a Church is made up of its members. If it fails, it is because its members are failures; if it succeeds, it is because its members have nobly done their duty. The service which we, the Church, are bound to render is as broad as human need.

The coming Church will preserve the balance between the functions of worship and service; neither will be permitted to over-ride or crowd out the other, but will safeguard the office of worship with its insistence upon the spiritual, the ideal, the eternal.

It will not suffer it to degenerate into a mush of piety and mysticism, but will make it satisfy the needs of the mind and heart, reason and emotion. The future Church will develop greatly the function of service, it will extend the field of its operations, and will seek to moralize business and politics and society in a way which no doubt they will bitterly resent, but which is necessary if the interests of all the people are to be advanced. Personally I believe the Sunday morning service will be in the future very much what it has been in the past. It will remain the hour set apart for worship, for communion with God and for discourse upon the great themes of the eternal world. It is the only hour in the week devoted to this purpose, and its importance cannot be minimized without danger. The hour in which God is remembered and our relations to Him emphasized must be preserved.

But the coming Church, having spent its hour with God, will, I believe, with equal faithfulness, meet for another hour in the week, and perhaps for a longer time, to plan how it may best serve humanity and the community in which it is established. The social service committee will be necessary in order to render efficient service. While the minister is the moral and spiritual leader of his people, speaking to them in the name of God, calling them to a higher level of spiritual achievement, it is not fair for the congregation to ask him to inspire them to service and also to direct the work which they shall do. This committee should be made up of men and women who are broad-minded, public-spirited, and Christian; to this committee should be entrusted the work of planning and directing the service, which it is the duty of the Church to render.

The range of service in the coming Church will undoubtedly be much wider than it has been in the immediate past, for a quickened conscience is demanding that Christian principles of living be applied in all directions, especially to the labor questions, to measures of social reform, and to the larger work for the common good.

I know full well the grave charges that can be brought against organized labor, the bitter conflicts, the intimidation, the violence, the outrages, the murders of which directly or indirectly it has been guilty; and I remember, too, that we who criticise have done little to acquaint ourselves with the ideals of the labor movement. If we have not won the confidence of the workers and have not suggested to them a better way, then we cannot be surprised if they have listened to dangerous agitators and enemies of the social order. If, now, we wish to win to our Churches the great body of unchurched labor, it can only be by showing an interested sympathy with the purposes and aims of labor and a genuine brotherliness for laboring men. Hitherto, business has been business, with small regard for the human element entering into it; in the future, business must become a profession, and, like medicine and the ministry and teaching, its aim must be the greatest service to humanity. The time will come when business and commerce will be brought under the sway of the same ideal, and when human interests shall become their first concern. This can be effected when Church members get into closer touch with workingmen and cultivate a cordial sympathy with their hopes and ideals.

So with the measures of social reform and reconstruction. No one can pretend that our present social order is what we would like to have it. Something is wrong when there is involuntary poverty in the midst of plenty, when in this great country, with its vast and undeveloped resources, it should be difficult for many industrious men to find jobs when wives have to go into the factory and little boys and girls of tender years are driven to labor when they ought to be at play, when human beings are herded together like animals in miserable dwellings where there is no provision for the common decencies of life and where health and morals suffer, and yet until you have made the effort, you have no conception of the difficulties which surround any attempt to secure betterment.

The Church must take a broader view of social service than it has done in the past—it has given alms to the poor, cared for the sick, provided for the orphan child, and has striven to stem the tide of intemperance and lust and crime. But we are learning now that the number of unfortunates appealing for help are beyond our resources, and that if we are really to reduce the volume of human misery rolling through society we must get back to the causes and check the stream at its source. What I have said is nothing more than a hint of the great variety of service to which the coming Church will be called through its different congregations to address itself, but they serve to indicate the directions in which religion will find practical expression. The coming Church, then, may be expected to preserve its present constitution and more highly develop its functions of worship and service. It will emphasize the value and importance of worship in keeping open the line of communication with the eternal spiritual realities of the universe, the source of moral power and of inspiration to noble and courageous living. It will equally emphasize the necessity of service to man in every direction, in the spheres of business and politics and all social relations as the one unmistakable proof of the sincerity of religious profession and of faithfulness to the ideal of the kingdom of heaven which the Master gave His life to establish on the earth.

PLACES OF LEAKAGE.

Rev. J. E. Franks had a most timely and interesting article in THE CHRISTIAN SUN of March 27th, entitled "Are We Laborers?" Bro. Franks certainly gets at the heart of the situation in saying that we must keep our mind and heart on the central theme of our labors, namely: the winning of souls to Christ and the building up of the kingdom of our Lord. Unless the Church does this, it hardly has an excuse for being.

However, it is doubtful if the figures quoted would in any measure indicate the work now being done by the Christian Church, particularly in the South. There is a constant migration going on through the whole country, from the farm and the rural districts to the towns and cities. Now, every town and city without a Christian Church to receive those who move us from the country, are sources of leakage to our denomination. For example, we have many Churches in the country surrounding Harrisonburg, Va. We have no Christian Church in Harrisonburg. Yet people are frequently moving from the rural districts into Harrisonburg, and they are, in large measure, lost to us as a denomination and a Church.

The same may be said of a score of other towns and cities. Winston-Salem, N. C., is a notable example. We have Churches in the country out from Winston, from which many members have moved into Winston-Salem, and after a few years are lost to us. Ashboro, N. C., is another example. We have Churches all through Randolph County. Ashboro is the county seat, and is a rapidly growing center. Ashboro is a source of constant drainage from our membership, and place of perpetual leakage to the denomination. It will always be so until a Christian Church is built in Ashboro. We had lost for all practical purposes, and in many instances for all other purposes, more than one hundred members of the Christian denomination in Richmond, Va., until we went into that source of leakage and placed a Church there for the constant flow of our membership into that city.

A small denomination stands to lose because there are so many cities and centers where they have no Churches, but to which their members are constantly moving. If we are to conserve the membership that we gain, we will have to do so by stopping the sources of leakage, as well as by increasing the sources of gain. Every year we gain several hundred through our evangelistic efforts. We should gain several thousands. In turn, we lose hundreds by not having Churches to receive those who move from one place to another.

The mission secretary is just in receipt of an appealing letter from a very deeply interested brother in Atlanta, Ga. This letter states that we have a number of members in Atlanta, with which fact the mission secretary was already acquainted. Now, as long as we have Churches in Georgia and Alabama, Atlanta will be a source of constant drainage upon our denomination until a Christian Church is placed there. It will certainly be the part of strategy, as well as of kingdom growth and development, for us of the Christian Church to give good heed to saving what we get, if we have a desire to grow strong in the matter of upbuilding the kingdom of our Lord on the earth.

We must not neglect our rural Churches, nor ignore the great good work they are doing. These are constant sources of growth, power and influence. But we need also to build in cities which are draining us.

LETTERS AND MESSAGE BY SAME MAIL.

One is from a Supreme Court judge of the State of Virginia, as follows:

"Rev. J. O. Atkinson, Missionary Secretary: My dear Dr. Atkinson,—Following the suggestion contained in your letters to me on that subject, the Waverly Sunday School has voted to donate to missions the collections taken on the third Sunday in each month, beginning with the year 1924. If you have not already heard from him, I am certain that you will receive a check from Mr. E. M. Lilly, treasurer of the Sunday School, covering the third-Sunday collections for the first three months in the year. With kindest regards, J. F. West."

The check came all right and has been acknowledged in THE SUN and receipt sent.

The other is from another one of our loyal and devoted Sunday School superintendents, whose great love is for his school:

"Youngsville, N. C., March 31, 1924. My dear Dr. Atkinson,—It gives me much pleasure to send this message to you. We have adopted the plan in Pope's Chapel of giving one Sunday's offering to the Orphanage, one to missions, and keep the other two Sundays' offerings each month for our current expenses, and we find ourselves still to the good. Enclosed find a check of $2.94. Though small, it is a start. We hope to climb the mountain along the line you have started us. Though we have some who oppose, sooner or later they will be gone or will be our best sympathizers. We were so glad to have had Dr. Fletcher with us last week. He was interesting, encouraging and inspiring. I hope we can get some of his ideas into practice real soon, especially the grading of the Sunday School. Do you have any plan to suggest? How are we to get our folks to work the idea he suggested? It would help us. May God's blessings rest upon you, strengthen and keep you and yours, for a greater service and to carry on the work you are now doing. And may God bless our efforts, though feeble. We are trying. We will send to you at the end of each quarter what we collect on the fourth Sundays. And to Superintendent Johnston on the second Sundays, and keep the rest for our school. So you get $2.94; Johnston, $1.39, and we keep $5.33—total collection, $9.66. Our literature cost $4.45, so we still have a balance. We have about sixty on roll. Best wishes. I am yours, B. P. Hinton, Secretary."

And the message is from Fuller's Chapel, Vance County: "Our Sunday School has voted to give one offering each month to missions, and the first one is sent you herewith."

All of which is along the right line, and is most encouraging indeed. Missions in the Sunday School is getting the thought and message lodged at the right place—in the minds of our youth.

Total for month of March, 1924, $462.62.

We are grateful to these good schools for their liberal offerings to our mission cause. We trust that this number shall greatly increase, as funds are so much needed now to carry forward our missionary work at home in Carroll County, Va., and abroad in Japan. We are happy to add several new schools to the list, these having voted since January 1st to give one offering a month to missions, as most of our active, wide-awake schools are now doing, and as our Convention has asked all schools to do. Gratefully,

J. O. ATKINSON, Mission Secretary.

MAY HER KIND BE INCREASED.

The following breathes such a fine Christian spirit from a good sister, who has the interests of the kingdom at heart, that I feel like others than myself will enjoy it:

"'Ruffin, N. C., March 31. Dear Bro. Atkinson,—Your statement on the card received as to the amount of my Men and Millions is correct. I pledged $50.00. I have paid $20.00. There are $30.00 now due. I want to pay $10.00 now soon. I hope to be able to pay in full by 1925. I pledged $100.00 on the Elon Christian education fund. I have paid $60.00, and am now due $40.00 on that pledge. I want to finish my Men and Millions and then finish the other, as I cannot pay both at the same time. My income is so very small it is quite a struggle to support my children and pay my pledges too, but I am going to do the best I can. I am real glad to have a part in the good work of the kingdom. I have not forgotten my pledges by any means. I think of them often and pray over them much, and of course I have to help keep up my home Church, too; so I cannot pay as fast as I wish to. I want to finish all pledges soon as I can, so I can be able to take a part in other missionary work. Sincerely, ———."

This should be an inspiration to many of the rest of us, for it breathes a fine Christian spirit.

J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary.

IT IS NOT TOO SOON TO THINK.

It is already high time for every pastor and Christian Church in Virginia and North Carolina to be thinking and planning and working for the Elon Chautauqua, July 28th to August 3rd. It is not too soon for Alabama and Georgia folks to be thinking of the first summer school to be held at Bethlehem, August 11th to 18th.

Think first of what the Chautauqua will mean to you personally, and to your Church—the morning devotions with Dr. Enders, and his class for pastors; the Bible work with Rev. Hardcastle and Rev. Harrell; mission study with Dr. Atkinson and others; the classes with Dr. Staley, Dr. Harper, Rev. Lightbourne, Mrs. Bullock, Mr. Humphreys, Mrs. Walters, and others still to be planned; the opening lecture by Dr. Wade C. Smith, of Greensboro; the children's daily Bible school; the music on the campus every evening; the Christian recreation led by Mr. Hardcastle, and all the rest, which you can never know until you have spent the week there. And the Bethlehem folks are already thinking of their first session, with Dr. Atkinson and Mr. Hermon Eldredge, Miss Pattie Coghill, and Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, and others, as it may be possible for them to come, with meetings for study and for lectures on the work of the whole Church; with the Alabama Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention meeting at Wadley during the week.

It is not too soon for every Church to be making plans to send at least two to these gatherings to bring back the many good things. Send your pastor, your Sunday School superintendent, the president of the Christian Endeavor or Missionary Society, some good live young people, and introduce them all to our colleges, the new college at Wadley, and to Elon with its new buildings and fine equipment, with the Christian Orphanage ready to welcome them, with the people of Elon College glad to see them.

It is not too soon to write to Miss Pattie Coghill, Elon College, N. C., for any information about either gathering. It is not too soon to send her your dollar, and so be registered now for the greatest summer schools ever held in the Southern Christian Convention.

Think now! Act soon! Meet us at Elon, July 28th, or at Bethlehem August 11th.

Lucy M. Eldredge.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE FIRST CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The fourth anniversary of First Christian Church, Richmond, Va., was observed Sunday, April 6th, and, notwithstanding the rain, a good-sized congregation was present. Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., of Suffolk, preached the sermon, taking as his text Joshua 6:20, "They took the city," and Heb. 11:30, "By faith the walls of Jericho fell down, after they were compassed about seven days."

Taking as his subject, "The Heroic in Religion," Dr. Staley spoke, in part, as follows:

"The land of promise is not a type of heaven, as some teach, but of the unconquered world, full of giants and institutions unwilling to admit the reign of God.

Taking as his subject, "The Heroic in Religion," Dr. Staley spoke, in part, as follows:

"It is a big undertaking to capture a city for God, but that is the task of the Church then and now.

"It takes more courage to capture a city by faith than by arms; and it takes great faith to believe that it can be done.

"Cities could now be taken by faith for God, if His people would obey Him and co-operate in the task.

"It is heroic to continue God's work in silence, and wait for results. Silence is power when it expresses faith—the unspoken influence of daily Christian life is the power that overcomes the world.

"Jericho was closed against the people of God. The human heart and heathen nations are closed against the gospel; and both are strong-walled cities.

"It is heroic to believe that cities can be taken by faith. They put their faith into active obedience by encompassing Jericho seven days. All true faith trusts, obeys, and waits. The farmer does that. The business man does that. Christians do that.

"It is heroic to obey God. God gave orders to Joshua; He delivered them to the leaders, and they to the people. The march was set in motion. The soldiers led; the priests, blowing the rams' horns, followed; others followed with the ark of God; the people brought up the rear. The gates of the city were closed. The great host marched around the city once a day for six days; then seven times on the seventh day. On the seventh time on the seventh day, the host shouted, and the walls fell down.

"It is heroic to shout. People are afraid to shout in these days of form and supereducation. Silence is power. Influence is great. But a shout in obedience to God's work in the soul brings results.

"To have voices and keep silence is a great test of faith.

"To have arms and not to use them tries faith.

"To have plenty and use it for God marks the truest faith. The spoils of victory were to go into the treasury of the Lord.

"Christianity has captured the cities in part for God, but has not turned the full spoils into the Lord's treasury. The Anti-Saloon League worked for twenty-six years before it drove out the saloon; but it accomplished this great task by faith and trustful waiting.

"The task of the Church is to capture the cities for God. To fail here is to fail to take the world for God. The world is not to be taken by force, but by faith."

First Christian Church organized a Sunday School the first Sunday in January, 1920, with seventeen members. The present membership of the school is 113 active members, and, including the cradle roll and home department, is 145. The Sunday School has raised a total of $1,711.74. A Ladies' Aid Society was organized the same month. It has raised $1,508.

The Mission Board and the Woman's Home and Foreign Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention have contributed $26,293, and the total contributions from all sources for the four years has been $61,984.92. The Church was organized April 4, 1920, with forty members.

During the four years, a lot was purchased at the corner of Grove Avenue and Sheppard Street, on which a modern Church plant has been erected, which was opened for service September 30, 1923. The property represents a value of $100,000.—Reported in Times-Dispatch.

JUST HALF RIGHT!

Picked up from the International Musician, as follows: "The American Federation of Labor will not cease to fight until a child-labor law embelishes the statute books of every State in the Union or Congress has paved the way for a measure of this kind which will stand the most assidious judicial test."

This apparently has a kindly ring of humanity in it. But under the surface there is something lacking. As commonly understood, the law prevents the employment of child labor, but it carries with it, as thus used, a school of idleness.

Children must have employment, and the law provides none. The law advocated is just half right, half complete, and offtimes a half of a thing is worse than the whole which it would correct. Besides the manual or physical side to which the law looks, there is a moral or patriotic side, to say nothing of the educational and religious.

EVOLUTION VERSUS CREATION.

The subject of this, the second in a series of notable debates, has probably caused more discussion than any of the other points at issue between fundamentalists and modernists. This word-for-word record of the speeches of Dr. Straton and Mr. Potter presents a very thorough resume of the arguments on both sides of this sharply contested question. Both laymen and preachers will find it an admirable source-book of information. The subjects of the five debates to be given in this series are as follows: "The Battle Over the Bible," "Evolution Versus Creation," "The Virgin Birth—Fact or Fiction?" "Was Christ Both God and Man?" "Utopia—By Man's Effort or Christ's Return?" (the first and second are now ready). They will afford definite guidance for those wishing to use this effective method of arousing public interest in religious questions. Paper, net, 50 cents. Geo. H. Doran Co., publishers, New York.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

April 20, 1924.

Topic: "Elisha: Teacher and Statesman."

Lesson: 1 Kings 19:15-21; 2 Kings 2-10, 13:-14-21. (Print 2 Kings 6:15-23.)

Golden Text: Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good.—Rom. 12:21.

Devotional Reading: Psa. 34:1-8.

When Elijah was suffering from a violent attack "of the blues," and thought that he was the only good man in Israel, God reminded him that He "had seven thousand who had not bowed the knee to Baal." We do not know much, if anything, about the six thousand nine hundred and ninety-nine, but we do know something about one of those faithful. Our lesson is concerned with him today. Elisha is his name.

The name means "God is salvation." And he was a worthy man for a worthy name. During his active career, by his far-sightedness, his faith, his helpfulness, and his loyalty to God, he was indeed "salvation" for his beloved country. The history of Israel during those years would have been much different if there had not been an Elisha.

His call was dramatic. He was a young man of large means, and as he was plowing in the field one day, Elijah passed by and threw his mantle about him. Taking time only to bid his loved ones farewell, he followed Elijah and was his faithful minister for several years. When Elijah was called home, Elisha was with him and received a "double portion of his spirit." He showed himself fitted for the great task that awaited him.

Elisha and Elijah differed very markedly. Elijah lived in the out-of-the-way places and was rather brusque and hard in his dealings with men. He was pre-eminently a man of fire and energy. Elisha, on the other hand, lived with men and was very friendly and human in his points of contact. He was more a teacher and man of persuasion. But with Elijah, he shared a passionate devotion to Jehovah and spent and was spent in His service.

Elisha's ministry was inclusive. He seemed to be in close touch with affairs of the kingdom, and he counseled with kings and leaders with a tact and judgment that always made him a welcome adviser. At the same time he was exercising a ministry of healing and helpfulness among both great and little. He who would see an embodiment of the spirit of service would do well to read the life of Elisha. Like Him of a later day, "he went about doing good."

The lesson, as printed, is full of interest. Benhaded, the King of Syria, had been ravaging Israel. But in later days, he had found that his plots against the king had been discovered and thwarted with vexing regularity. He thought at first that it was due to a traitor, but he learned that Elisha was the one who stood in his way. Accordingly, he dispatched an army to capture the troublesome "man of God." When Elisha's servant saw the host, he was dismayed, but after a prayer by the undaunted and undismayed prophet, his eyes were opened and he saw the mountains full of horsemen and chariots of fire. He then witnessed the miraculous delivery of the Syrian army into the hands of the king of Israel, through the prayer and strategy of Elisha. The story ends with an account of Elisha's counsel of magnanimity on the part of the King of Israel toward the captured host of Syrians.

The later events of Elisha's life show him as exercising an influence over kings and their policies. He dies an old man, full of years, and with a record of worthy and far-reaching service.

Some Teaching Points of the Lesson.

1. One test of a man's greatness is his willingness to do humble forms of service, and to express the p'rit of helpfulness.

2. A man has gone far toward being useful when he, like Elisha, is willing to forsake all, and obey the call of God.

3. A "former" is more valuable than a "reformer."

4. The forces of evil are always afraid to stand "man to man." Benhadad sent an army after Elisha; the enemies of Jesus sent a mob after Him.

5. One man with God can put to rout an army of the wicked.

6. God's message to men is "Fear not." (I have been reading the gospels lately and I have been impressed with the emphasis which Jesus time and again puts on "Fear not.")

7. "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear Him, and delivereth them."

8. We fail to see our invisible allies because our eyes are holden.

9. The way to overcome enemies is to love them. The American people have an unparalleled opportunity to win the good will of Germany if they will help her, insofar as there is actual need.

10. One righteous, godly man is worth more to a nation than a hundred scheming politicians.

11. More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of.

12. "They that are with us—with those of us who are trying to do God's will—are more than they that are against us.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

April 20, 1924.

Topic: "Easter a Time of Joy."

Lesson: 1 Cor. 15:1-8, 51-55.
(Sunrise Prayer Meeting Suggested.)

Daily Readings: Sorrow banished (John 20:-11-18; Joy in immortality (Psa. 16:5-11); Joy in the Risen Lord (John 20:19-29); Joy in a secure heaven (2 Cor. 5:1-9); Joy in a new life now (Eph. 1:15-23); Joy in expanding service (Luke 10:1-2, 17-20).

Christmas is a day of joy. Everybody is happy on that day and at that season of the year. There is a spirit of good will and of joy in the air and in our hearts. And this is as it should be. For on Christmas we celebrate the anniversary of Jesus.

But Easter should be even more a day of joy, for at Easter we celebrate the resurrection of Jesus. It is an anniversary of His victory over death and His return from the grave. And the birth of Jesus would not have meant very much to the world, or to us, if He had not risen from the dead. It was because of the latter event that the former event has significance. We will do well to think about this fact at this Easter season, for unless we do, we will not appreciate Easter as much as we ought. And if we do we will have more joy at the Easter season.

People disagree as to how the resurrection took place. There has been much discussion and almost as much hard feelings over the kind of body Jesus had when He arose from the dead. But of this, one fact men are generally agreed—Jesus Christ did rise from the dead. And, after all, that is the most important fact. It does not make much difference to me how that great miracle took place; it does make much difference whether it did take place. And I believe—and I know—that it did take place.

It seems to me that there are a number of reasons why we should have joy at the Easter season. I give them as they come, and not in order of importance.

1. We ought to be glad because Easter convinces us that Jesus was the Son of God. He had told His disciples that He would be crucified and buried, but that He would rise again. And He did rise. Thus His words were fulfilled. Paul said, "He was the Son of God with power according to the resurrection from the dead." Here, then, is the point. If Jesus was able to fulfill His word in this the greatest test, how much more shall He be able to fulfill it in lesser tests? Think of this when you read your Bible. Whenever you come to some teaching or promise of Jesus, remember that He made good His prophecy of His resurrection, and then know that He will do just what He says in regard to what you have read. If He calls you to follow Him and promises to go with you even unto the end of the world, know that He will do it. If He says He will forgive you your sins if you repent, know that He will do it. Jesus was the Son of God. And the resurrection proved that fact.

2. We ought to be glad because we know that Jesus is a living Saviour. Some people think of Jesus as a man who died nineteen hundred years ago. But Jesus Christ is a living person, a living Saviour, living here and now. Think what that means.

3. We ought to be glad because Easter tells us that we have a living Saviour who has all power. He is able to exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think. He has power enough to make men new. We can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth us.

4. We ought to be glad because we know that this living, powerful Saviour is the same loving, helpful, sympathetic Saviour that He was when He was here in the flesh. Read the activities of Jesus after the resurrection and see how He manifested His love and sympathy as of other days. Jesus still looks with compassion upon us and is ready and eager to help us.

5. Easter tells us that death does not end all. It is just an entrance into another and a larger life. It is as if we should go through a door into a new and larger and better room. And of course we ought to be glad for this.

6. Easter tells us that we shall be with Jesus and with our loved ones and friends who have gone before. He went to prepare a place for us. Is it not enough to cause us to rejoice when we know that we shall be with Him and that we shall see Him and know Him, because we shall be like Him?

"Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your work is not in vain in the Lord."

A Few Questions.

1. What difference did the resurrection make in the lives of the disciples?
2. Why do we believe in the resurrection of Jesus?
3. What are some points of evidence for the resrection?
4. How can we make it easier to believe in the resurrection?
5. What difference does it make whether we believe in the resurrection?
6. How many times, and under what circumstances did Jesus show Himself to His disciples and followers after the resurrection?

WORRY.

By E. J. Blough.

Worry is one of the most disastrous evils there is in the world. It not only works disaster to the soul, but may greatly weaken the body, and may destroy the mind if a person keeps it up. It is like an acid—it eats. You put some acid on a certain material, and it may make a hole in that material, and it may, if there is plenty of acid, dissolve the whole thing. In just this way, worry works on the human body. Then worry acts on the mind and soul just like a poison taken into the system. Then worry weakens and may destroy your faith. Peter was getting along just fine while walking on the water; but when he began to worry, he lost his faith in the Master just about the same time. Lack of faith and worry seem to go right together hand in hand.

Worry is anxious care, being careful about things of this life to such an extent that we become over-anxious about them. This is what Paul forbids us doing in Phil. 4:6. To get the real true meaning of this passage, we must read it in the Revised Version, which reads: "In nothing be anxious"; or have no anxious care whatever. We need to be careful about our life and work, and not in any sense should we be careless or reckless about anything; but we should never allow anxiety to come into our life. We may study out problems in life; but this is only work, perhaps hard work, which acts like healing oil to the body if not too hard work; but this studying, thinking, or talking over the things of life need not be worry at all.

Worry itself is altogether of the devil. He seeks to destroy us by trying to get us to worry. But, thank God, no Christian need ever worry about anything at all in his life. It is God's definite command that His children should never worry. We find this command in Matt. 6:24-34. So we sin against God whenever we worry, for we break His commandment; and God never tells us to do anything that we cannot do by His grace and help. As with Paul, in order to get the thought that Christ intended to bring out, we must go to the Revised Version, which reads, "Be not anxious."

There are reasons why the real, true Christian should never worry. One reason is because we know that all things work together for his good as long as he loves God (Rom. 8:28). This being the case, why need we worry? Another reason is because God has promised to supply all our need through Christ. The cattle on a thousand hills belong to God (Psalm 50:10). What need the child of God to worry about meat or milk for his daily food (1 Cor. 10:25)? This last reference proves that the whole earth is the Lord's. But God promised more than our needs, for He has promised to withhold no good thing from the upright (Psa. 84:11). Of course, we must let God say whether a thing is good for us to have or not. We want something very badly and may not think that it would injure us at all; yet God, who is all wise, may see that it would perhaps be disastrous for us to have it, so He would withhold it from us, seeing it would not be a good thing for us to have at all.

Perhaps the greatest reason why the Christian need never worry is because God is his Heavenly Father, and He has unbounded wealth. What young child is there who has a real good, true, earthly father, who has plenty to supply his children's needs, who goes about all the time worrying about his food, clothing, or shelter? The child never thinks of worry at all, probably. Christ said that even evil fathers will give good gifts to their children (Luke 11:13); and doubtless even those children never worry. Far much less, then, should any child of God worry, especially when the Heavenly Father cares so much for His children as to number the very hairs of their head (Luke 12:7).

What are the things that we worry about mostly? One thing is our future needs. But Christ forbids this in Matt. 6:34. Just turn over your whole future to the Lord, leave it right there in His hands and never worry about it at all. If we do worry about the future, we will no doubt worry about things that will never happen at all. Then we may worry about our food, drink, clothing and shelter for our bodies. This was also forbidden by Christ (Matt. 6:25). If God takes such infinite care of even the despised sparrow, how could He neglect to provide for His own dear children (Matt. 10:29)? Surely we need to take example of the birds, the grass, and the lilies (Matt. 6:26-30). Human beings are far more valuable to God than these things. Then we may be tempted to fret about the prosperous wicked, while we may be living as truly the Christian life as we can, and may have only our bare needs supplied. But God has forbidden us to worry about this also (Psa. 37:1). Let us remember that "a little that a righteous man has is better than the riches of many wicked" (Psa. 37:16); that "godliness with contentment is great gain (1 Tim. 6:6), and that we may be poor in this world's goods, "yet making many rich" in salvation, "having nothing, yet possessing all things" (2 Cor. 6:10).

But how are we to avoid all worry? Wherein lies the cure? If I go to a doctor and he tells me I have a disease, I want him to furnish me a cure for it. God never commanded us to do or abstain from anything unless He also showed us the way to do or avoid that thing. In the first place, we are to have great faith in God that He will do these things for us; that is, supply all our need (Matt. 6:30; Phil. 4:19). We could liken heaven to a great bank, with our own Heavenly Father as president of it, and Jesus our Saviour as the cashier. Draw a check on this Bank of Heaven for all that you need.

Then Christ tells us to seek first God's kingdom and righteousness; and when we do this, "all these things" (referring to food, drink, raiment, all we need, see content) shall be added unto us. This is perhaps the greatest cure for all anxiety. Let everything you do be done for God's honor and glory, and the uplift of His kingdom on earth, then you will be seeking first God's kingdom and righteousness (Matt. 6:33).

What cure does Paul give for worry? We will find this in Phil. 4:6. He first mentions "prayer and supplication." Pray for what you need. While God knows what we need before we ask Him, yet He desires to have us pray for them. But we must pray always "in faith believing." Then Paul mentions thanksgiving as a part of the cure. Thank God for all the blessings that He gives you. You may name a few of His blessings; but they are too many to name separately. Then Paul tells us to be content in whatever state we are. This will help us to avoid all worry (Phil. 4:11). This must be learned.—Wesleyan Methodist.

Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Secretary.

Mr. Hermon Eldredge and Miss Lucy M. Eldredge may now be addressed at C. P. A. Building, Dayton, Ohio.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

How to Pray.

"When thou prayest, enter into thy inner chamber, and when thou hast shut the door, pray to thy Father."—Matt. 6:6.

We need all the help we can get when we attempt to pray, not only from outside sources, but in personal and inward preparation. A place for prayer, a time for prayer, a posture in prayer, and the putting of our petitions in audible words, all help us to pray.

The body likes regular habits, and no less in prayer than in eating or sleeping, or in any of the other habits we are daily accustomed to. To be habitual and regular in prayer and devotions is wonderfully effacacious. Have a place and a time for prayer every day.

There is much also attributed to the posture and attitude in prayer. To get on the knees helps a great deal. We naturally bend the knee when we are in quest for something. We bend when we stretch to see something afar. Thus, when we shall have read the Scriptures in the family circle and we bend in quest of our Heavenly Father's will and stretch ourselves forward to see Him, to bow upon the knees together is most natural and a great assistant to our thoughts and feelings, and petition seems more urgent and devotion more contrite. When it is practicable, let us bow.

Prayer.—(Let the head of the family lead in a prayer, and all join in the Lord's Prayer in closing.)

TUESDAY.

The Living Example.

"Study to show thyself approved of God a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."—2 Tim. 2:15.

Parents, if your children believe that your principles are high and that you are above doing anything wrong, don't do anything which will shatter this opinion.

As long as your boys and girls think you are truthful, honest and free from deceit and just, they will think of you as being ideal.

They will feel that under no circumstances would you do anything which is not right.

Other children may try to convince your children that you are not what you appear to be, but as long as they have no proof, they will not believe any wrong of you.

Once they are deceived by you in word or action, they become convinced you are not what you pretend to be, and they are quite likely to believe any stories they may hear about you.

It is a sad time in a child's life when he learns his parents do not measure up to the ideal he had established for them.

After such a conviction, there can never be just the same feeling there was before the fact became known.

Establish a high standard with your children and live up to it. (Copyright, 1924, by I. F. S., Inc.)

WEDNESDAY.

Skating on Thin Ice.

"Other foundation can no man lay than that which is layed, which is Jesus Christ."—1 Cor. 3:10-15; v. 11.

Are you doing something of which you are likely to be much ashamed in years to come?

Are some of your actions such that members of your family would be made unhappy and feel chagrined, perhaps disgraced, if they were aware of them?

Usually the wrong you do is known to one or more persons—your confidants or those who accompany you in your wrongdoing.

You may feel safe in the thought that these persons dare not make known your part in certain affairs because they might incriminate themselves.

Did you ever stop and think that these persons may have other friends in whom they confide what you consider a secret, and in this way the facts may become known.

Are you skating on thin ice?

Better give some thought to what would be the result if it should give way. (Copyright, 1924, by International Feature Service, Inc.)

Prayer.—Father, teach us how to control our thoughts and direct our souls, so that we may never be ashamed. For Christ's sake we ask it. Amen.

THURSDAY.

Co-Operation is the Key which Will Unlock Difficulties.

"Now, I beseech you, brethren, through the name of our Lord Jesus Christ . . . that there be no divisions among you, but that ye be perfect together, in the same mind and in the same judgment."—1 Cor. 1:10.

"How did you happen to select Mr. So-and-So for such-and-such a place?"

This question was asked recently, many other applicants, in some ways better fitted for the job, having been turned down.

"For two years his name has been on my desk, his youth and inexperience being against him, but each time the matter came up, his evident spirit of co-operation made such an impression that we have decided to try him," was the reply.

Co-operation was the open sesame.

Co-operation is the key to most of the difficult problems of today.

Are you big enough and broad enough in your make-up to co-operate with those around you who are trying to accomplish good things?

Every time you have an opportunity to co-operate with others for a good cause and you do not give your best, you are a weaker individual.

There is something about generous co-operation which warms into glow all those who are engaged in real co-operative spirit.

If you have a big job, you must be a big soul, or you lose the real benefits which should be yours.

If the other fellow will not co-operate, do not let it sour you, but keep right on giving your best, as it seems best, and earn your own self-respect. (Copyright, 1924, International Feature Service, Inc.)

Prayer.—Dear Father, our Creator and Redeemer, fill us with Thy spirit of brotherly love and helpfulness to others. Help us to give of our best to Thee, and our best to our fellowman. For Christ's sake we ask it. Amen.

FRIDAY.

Choosing the Creator.

"And there was also a strife among them, which of them should be accounted the greatest."—Luke 22:24-27.

It was characteristic of human nature when the disciples contended as to which should be greatest. Greatness is something everybody seeks. To be well-known, famous, lauded—these are the natural desires of the human heart. There is only one kind of greatness that counts. It is the greatness of God in an individual. It is the greatness that serves, ministers, does for other, is helpful to many.

Some who are doing things worth while might be doing greater things if they only knew it.

There was Bishop Tucker. He was an artist, on the way to success. One day while engaged on a picture which he hoped would win a prize at the Royal Academy (the picture of a young woman with a baby in her arms, walking the streets of London on a dark, stormy night, and which the artist was to call "Homeless"), the following thoughts came to him:

"God help me. Why don't I go and save the homeless, instead of painting pictures of them?" Then and there he resolved to give his life for others. He worked in the slums of England, and then he went to Africa, where he did a great work as the Bishop of Uganda. He chose the greater for the lesser. Always there is something better, finer to challenge; always there is the "better," and after that the "best." The best life is the life that follows the Master, going about doing good.—Rev. Richard Braunstein.

Prayer—(Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.)

SATURDAY.

The Unplumbed Deeps.

"O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are His judgments, and His ways past finding out!"—Rom. 11:33-36.

Paul was ever seeking to find out God, and that not for himself alone, but that he might interpret the Heavenly Father to His children. As he sought, his increasing knowledge made clearer the widening circle of his ignorance. He ended, as all who seek must end, in an exclamation. It is an exclamation, not of defeat alone, but of triumph as well.

A few days ago, with some friends, I rode high up among the majestic mountains of Colorado to the Grand Lake, reputed to be the largest body of water at that altitude in the world. Fed by the melting snow, its waters were crystal clear. They told us that no man had ever plumbed the deeps of that lake, that no man had ever found its bottom. Yet we saw boats coming and going; he who would might drink of its refreshing waters. I could not tell you of its hidden mysteries. I know not how deep it is. I could, if you would travel with me, take you to its shores, that you might be enthralled by its beauty and refreshed by its waters. No man has ever plumbed the deeps of God, of man, or of life. No man can tell you of the hidden mysteries of Providence. Yet men, if you will follow with them, can bring you to the living waters from which you may be refreshed. Though you may fail to sound their depths, there will be the note of triumph.—Rev. John A. McAfee.

Prayer—(Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.)

SUNDAY.

"The Sabbath was made for man."—Mark 2:27.

If the Sabbath was made for man, it certainly must have been made for him as God designed and created him, and that is for the whole man. The whole man must share in the benefits of the day, and if it does not it fails in its object. Thus it is a day for the body, a day of rest and recreation. It is a day for the mind, it refreshes it by diverting its energies into new channels. It is a day for the heart, it renews it in the change of surroundings and in the expression of deepest affections. It is a day for the soul, it increases the potency of the spirit within us and lifts us heavenward and hallows the soul. This all done, we can return to our duties on Monday with clearer intellect, livelier spirit and renewed vigor.

Prayer.—Dear Father, sanctify our hearts and lives to the spirit of the Lord's Day. Make it a holy place with us both in our inner and outer lives. For Jesus' sake we ask it. Amen.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

Our financial report this week carries us beyond the fourth mile post for this year. A little better than last year at this time. Let us keep the wheel rolling and do better this year than we did last year. We have had applications for six little children this week, five of them have lost father and mother, and all in need of a home. Shall we take them? Let your Easter offering answer the question.

Our hearts were made sad when two of our little boys were called to the bedside of their father last week, who was very ill and died before they reached him. They lost their mother about two years ago, and now, with the father gone, it leaves them very lonely indeed. Our hearts go out to these two fine little boys in their hours of grief and sadness, which makes them feel dearer to me than ever before. I will never forget the tender love that father and children had for each other. They loved their father tenderly, and there has hardly been a week since they have been here that he did not come to see his two dear little boys and take them on his lap and talk with them.

It is a great opportunity for the Church to supply them every need and train them up for good citizenship and the Master's kingdom. Ill health, death of wife and mother and other adverse circumstances compelled the father to place them with us to care for them, but his tender love and fatherly affection for them was sublime.

LIBERTY (VANCE).

After reading such a splendid letter from Haw River, I feel impressed to write something of my Church. We have a large Sunday School, under the leadership of Mr. R. C. Osborne. As a result of an epidemic of measles, we have not had as good attendance as desired. Now, as the spring has come, we trust that all may be inspired to start anew, with a determination to make this our best year in Sunday School work.

We need to do our best to give the young people the religious training that is so much needed to carry on God's work. I wish every Sunday School worker could have the pleasure of hearing Dr. W. P. Fletcher, of Toronto, Canada, the Sunday School specialist. We need the graded lessons and graded classes, with teachers that can make the work attractive for the children. If we could get them all interested, they would love the work and the object of Sunday School (which is to teach God's Word and to know His will) would be successfully carried out. We also have a Christian Endeavor Society, with more than fifty members. While not all of them are active, others are, and are loyal to the work.

We trust that some good is being done for the cause of Christ. Personally, Christian Endeavor appeals to me more than Sunday School. The object of Sunday School is to teach God's Word, while Christian Endeavor is a training station for training in personal service for Christ.

My advice to any Church that fails to have a Christian Endeavor Society is to get busy and organize at once, if possible. Give the young people the chance to testify in service for Him.

We have a strong Church in membership, with Rev. J. E. Franks as our faithful pastor. He is much loved by every one everywhere who really desires a consecrated man, filled with the spirit of God for a spiritual leader. He is doing his best, with God's help, to lift us to a higher standard of Christianity. Like Paul, he is determined not to preach anything but eternal life by the way of the cross. His is the plain gospel, but full of spiritual food for the believer in Christ. The heart must be prepared to do Christian service, and real preparation comes of God when we give ourselves up to Him to be used in His own way.

May we lay aside all different ideas, and come together in one accord to serve the Lord. Let us pray for more love, more peace, and a spirit of unity, with but one purpose—that of glorifying the name of our Lord. I love the Church, regardless of name or denomination, and am interested in all Church work. I can truthfully say, as did David of old, I am glad when they say, "Let us go into the house of the Lord."

I earnestly request the prayers of all Christians, that I may (as I am trying, by the grace of God, to live a Christian life) be given strength, through Jesus Christ, to overcome the wicked one. May we study God's Word and be doers; not hearers only. Study to know if we are real Christians or only professed Christians. May we all give Jesus first place in our heart and life. Then we will be ready to share His love with others. See 2 Peter 1:5-9, and study to see if we are clothed with these graces, that we may claim the promise."

MRS. R. J. NEWTON.

Japan's Forest Land.

Although Japan has a total population of about 52,000,000 in an area the size of the State of California, two-thirds of the total area of the empire is forest land, containing 1,100,000,000,000 feet of standing timber—about half of the estimated timber supply of the United States today. Japan has been practicing forestry for 400 years, and it is one of the recognized principles of the country.

OUR PLEDGES to Men and Millions are Sacred, Solemn and Binding.

These obligations were made through the Church to the Kingdom of God and to all that pertains to building up that Kingdom in the world, so far as our Christian Church is concerned. As Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has so pertinently pointed out: "A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations--'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42)--but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

Many are making great sacrifices to meet these obligations and pay these pledges. Every one who fails to do so not only produces paralysis in his own moral system, but to that extent paralyses the efforts and sacrifices that the faithful and the loyal make.

BEAR IN MIND MEN AND MILLIONS MEAN AND STAND FOR ALL THAT THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH MEANS AND STANDS FOR.

—REMEMBER—

that the fourth year ends April 30, 1924.

After that, we have only one more year in which to meet these obligations. Unless we put forth a mighty effort to pay some on these pledges during the last quarter of the fourth year, there is great danger that we will fail entirely, because of the bulk of our pledge looming up before us in a one-year period.

Paying SOMETHING by April 30, 1924, will make it easy to pay ALL by April 30, 1925. Where there is a will there is a way, and God always helps those who try to their capacity to help themselves.

DORSETTE.

On February 22nd, Bro. O. M. Dorsette passed to his eternal sleep. Bro. Dorsette was for fifty years a member of Antioch Christian Church, Chatham County, and for the greater part of that time, some forty-eight or nine years, was a deacon in that Church. He served as Sunday School superintendent for many years, and was relieved only when age and ill health made it impossible for him to attend longer.

Bro. Dorsette was a veteran of the Civil War. He was an active and ardent member of the Masonic fraternity. Until the end he was deeply interested in his Church and in all public matters.

Mr. O. M. Dorsette was born October 30, 1844. He was married first to Miss Fannie McIntyre. To this union were born nine children, two of whom survive —Mr. O. M. Dorsette, of Greensboro, N. C., and Mr. Archie Dorsette, of Siler City, N. C. He was married a second time to Miss Alice Dowdy. To this union, two children were born, one of whom survives—Miss Mattie Eva Dorsette. He was ever a kind father and a loving and faithful husband.

The Dorsette home was known always as the "preachers' home," and many ministers will recall happy hours as the guest of this generous and delightful host.

The hearts of his many friends will be saddened by his going, and their sympathies will go out to his widow and the three children who mourn his loss.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas, God, in His wisdom and mercy, has seen fit to call from this earthly life to his reward our beloved brother and pastor, Rev. H. H. Butler, we relate as follows:

Bro. Butler was pastor of the Antioch Christian Church for near thirty years. He was faithful in keeping all of his appointments, never failing to keep one unless he was providentially hindered by sickness or death.

He was preparing on Saturday, February 16, 1924, to go to Antioch on Sunday, and would have been in Antioch community at the time of his death if he had not been detained because of a marriage he had to perform Saturday. He said he desired to work as long as he lived. This he did, despite the fact that he had been growing weaker for several months. He was never sick, but just passed away, so far as any one knows, without a pain.

We feel that a good man has gone, to be with us no more on earth. He was greatly loved, and will be greatly missed. But we are assured that God is too wise to make any mistake, and too loving to be unkind; therefore, we would resolve:

First, That we bow in humble submission to the will of our Heavenly Father, feeling that our loss is our brother's gain.

Second, That we, in behalf of the members of Antioch Christian Church, extend our heartfelt sympathy, and our sincere prayers, to the bereaved family and friends.

McPHERSON.

At his home, in southern Alamance County, N. C., Samuel McPherson was called from labor to reward on the 22nd of March, 1924, in his eighty-second year.

In 1869 he was united in marriage to Martha Jane Teague, and to them were born eleven children, eight of whom are living. His wife preceded him to the grave by about twenty-nine years.

Bro. McPherson was a loyal member of Pleasant Hill Christian Church, and had been for a number of years. He was a devoted husband, kind father, a good neighbor and faithful citizen. He served his day and generation well.

The funeral services were from Pleasant Hill Christian Church, conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. G. O. Lankford. The interment was in the Pleasant Hill Cemetery.

The large audience present at the services and the large and beautiful floral tributes evidenced the esteem in which he was held. Sweet be thy sleep, dear brother, till Jesus bids thee awake.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas, God, in His infinite wisdom and mercy, has seen fit to call from time to eternity Mrs. Mattie Roxie Barlow; and

Whereas, we recognize in the death of our beloved friend and sister the loss of a kind, loyal and loving Christian woman and desiring to express our esteem and high regard for her memory; therefore, be it resolved:

First, That we bow in humble submission to the great Creator's will, remembering that our loss on earth has been our sister's gain in heaven.

Second, That the members of the Young People's Missionary Society of Burton's Grove Christian Church extend their heartfelt sympathy and sincere condolence to the bereaved family and friends.

Fortebee

AN EXTERNAL TREATMENT FOR TUBERCULOSIS.

Speedily restoring patients to normal health and strength. Use it yourself. Be your own doctor. Treatment absolutely harmless. A great discovery. Here's what W. T. Woolfolk, Atlee, Va., says about it: "About eleven years ago I developed tuberculosis in both lungs. I went to Colorado twice, and stayed there about three years, but got no relief, and I spent a while in Western North Carolina, but got no relief. About six years ago I got hold of a bottle of Fortebee and used it, and within three days I was greatly improved, and in about three months I was practically well, and have enjoyed excellent health ever since. Fortebee is the greatest remedy for tuberculosis I have ever seen or heard of. It saved my life."

There are others who endorse this remedy as highly as does Mr. Woolfolk. Price per bottle, $2.50; large size, $4.50.

GOODWIN.

On January 25, 1924, little Georgetta Goodwin succumbed to an attack of scarlet fever. Her suffering was intense, but of only a few days' duration. Her stay upon earth was 6 years 9 months and 4 days. She was the youngest daughter of Bro. and Sister J. L. Goodwin, New Hill, Route 2. Her parents and several brothers and sisters survive. The writer conducted her funeral service from Ebenezer M. E. Church on the day following her death.

Possessing a brilliant mind, a lovely disposition, and a natural mood of ready response, she was loved, we believe, by every one who knew her. The children of the community were devoted to her. Accounts of her passing printed in the local papers were wonderful tributes, and showed the power of her influence upon those who were older than she. Her father and mother are members of New Elam Christian Church, and it was there that she was a very interested member of the Sunday School. B. J. HOWARD.

PHILLIPS.

Jesse Calvin Phillips, Haw River, N. C., passed from labor to reward on the evening of March 25, 1924, aged 65 years, 6 months and 3 days. In 1881, he was united in marriage to Miss Lucy Woods, and to them were born eight children. His wife and six children survive him.

In early life he united with the Christian Church and was a member of the Haw River Church when death came. His going was very sudden. He finished his day's work, came home and was sitting by the fire talking when called home. He quietly fell asleep.

He was a good husband, a kind father and a good citizen. The funeral services were conducted from the Haw River Christian Church by the writer, and the interment was at Long's Chapel, where he quietly sleeps awaiting the resurrection call. P. H. FLEMING.

IN LOVING MEMORY.

Resolved: First, That we, the members of the Missionary Society of the Reidsville Christian Church, wish to express our sorrow and extend to our sister and co-worker, Mrs. Susie Crenshaw, our heartfelt sympathy in the sudden passing away of her devoted husband.

Second, Pray that God may comfort and bless her and her little boys.

Third, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of our society, that a copy be sent to the Reidsville Review and The Christian Sun for publication.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By Rev. S. M. Lynam.

Wilson Memorial.—

The Woodrow Wilson memorial at Davidson College, N. C., will take the form of a building, a monument, or a clock tower. Prof. McConnell believes that it will be the latter

Fire Damages Oldest Dormitory.—

The oldest college dormitory in America stands on the Harvard University campus. It is Massachusetts Hall, erected for the housing of students in 1720. This building was partially burned. Damages are placed about $7,000. The fire started on the third floor of the building, and firemen attribute it to defective wiring.

Fire at the University.—

Swayne Hall, the dining department of the University of North Carolina, where more than 600 students get their meals, was partially burned some days ago. The loss is estimated at more then $20,000. The fire originated in the furnace room of the building. Work of reconstruction has already been started, and the university authorities feel sure that repairs will soon be made. Meanwhile the cafeterias and hotels of the town will enlarge their facilities to care for the extra number of students.

North Carolina Governor Weds.—

Governor Cameron Morrison, of North Carolina, was married to the widow of G. W. Watts on April 2nd. The marriage occurred in Durham. Only a few of the friends of the couple were present. Mrs. Morrison was Durham's wealthiest woman citizen. She was married to George W. Watts, the prominent financier, in 1917. Mr. Watts died in 1921. Mr. and Mrs. Morrison left for a Northern trip immediately following the wedding. They will occupy the executive mansion in Raleigh during the remainder of the Governor's term of office. The marriage of a Governor while still in office is an unusual event.

Another Peace Prize.—

Raphael Herman, of Detroit, Mich., has offered $25,000 as a prize for the best educational plan for securing world peace and international justice. The winning plan must be stated in less than five thousand words, and must be submitted before July 1, 1924. The plan must be strictly non-partisan. Further information may be had from Dr. A. O. Thomas, Augusta, Me., president of the American Educational Association.

This is the second plan for which a prize has been offered. The Edward W. Bok prize was won by Dr. Charles F. Levermore, of New York. Nineteen other plans come in for careful consideration, and these are to be published at an early date. They will make interesting reading for those interested in international relations.

There may be no value in these prize plans except to the winners, but it brings the matter to public attention, and if we can succeed in making men and women think world peace, we will some day obtain it.

Bankers Back France.—

American bankers, headed by J. P. Morgan & Co., New York, have established a banking credit of $100,000,000 in favor of the Bank of France. This action was taken to help the French government stabilize the franc. During March the franc, normally 19 3-10 cents, dropped lower than 3½ cents, about one-sixth of its normal value. This alarming situation aroused the whole French nation. The government is cutting off every unnecessary expense, and the French Parliament will soon enact a law increasing taxes and reducing the amount of paper money in circulation. By these measures and American credit, the French hope to bring the franc back to something like its normal value. This timely aid to France will make possible better understanding. Christianity and economics have a very vital relation.

The Page Memorial.—

A memorial tablet to the late Walter Hines Page, ambassador to the Court of St. James during the war, has recently been placed as a part of the American memorial in the Church of St. Peter and St. Paul, in Yorkshire. The Bishop of York presided, and Ambassador Kellog, present ambassador to England, delivered the address of the occasion. The Church in which the memorial is placed stands near the Page ancestoral estate in Yorkshire. It is placed as a pennant to the large tablet commemorating the American and British co-operation during the late war.

Probably no ambassador in modern times has attained the prominence which came to Ambassador Page. "The Life and Letters of Walter Hines Page" has been for many months on the best-selling non-fiction list. No American has been better loved in England than was Mr. Page. This memorial stands as a constant reminder of the man who did so much to bring about a better feeling between the United States and England. All these things contribute materially to the cause of world peace.

Cabinet Changes.—

Two changes in the Harding Cabinet have been made recently. Edwin Denby, Secretary of the Navy, resigned, following disclosures of the oil investigating committee. Curtis D. Wilbur, chief justice of the Supreme Court of California, has been appointed to head the navy.

Harry M. Daugherty has resigned, by request of the President, after a stiff fight with the investigating committee. Harlan F. Stone, dean of the Columbia University School of Law, has been chosen to succeed him as Attorney General.

President Coolidge's Cabinet now stands: Secretary of State, Charles E. Hughes, New York; Secretary of the Treasury, Andrew W. Mellon, Pennsylvania; Secretary of War, John W. Weeks, Massachusetts; Attorney General, Harlan F. Stone, New York; Postmaster General, Harry S. New, Indiana; Secretary of the Navy, Curtis D. Wilbur, California; Secretary of the Interior, Hubert Work, Colorado; Secretary of Agriculture, Henry C. Wallace, Iowa; Secretary of Commerce, Herbert C. Hoover, California; Secretary of Labor, James J. Davis, Pennsylvania.

It is rumored that Secretaries Wallace and Hoover are coming in for investigation. Resolutions to investigate Secretary Mellon's business activities have been introduced, but received little attention.

Singapore Project Abandoned.—

The English Labor government has abandoned the project to establish a strong naval base at Singapore. Japan is greatly pleased, but Australia is indignant at the stand taken by Premier MacDonald. The naval base at Singapore was advised by naval authorities, and the refusal of the government to act on the advice of the naval department has aroused widespread disapprobation. Mr. MacDonald strongly urged brotherliness in the speech in which he declared that the project had been abandoned. He feels that preparation for war is not a guarantee for peace, and he is of the opinion that disarmament in a practical way must begin somewhere. This, the Premier believes, is the time to begin. Such publications as the London Outlook, however, does not favor Mr. MacDonald's line of reasoning, and believes that the Labor Premier is an idealist, living in a brutally realistic world. However true the Outlook's opinion may be, it is refreshing to find some man in power is strong enough to put into action his opinions and show in concrete terms his brotherhood theories. Mr. MacDonald is doing just this in the stand he has taken in the Singapore affair. He says that he has faith in world peace and universal brotherhood, and proceeds to practice it. When the Labor party won in England some weeks ago there was not the alarm which Americans had expected, and it seems that the Socialist rule in the greatest empire has been quite a success.

Ramsay MacDonald, the British Prime Minister, is a man of sinple life, and in an interview a few days ago declared that he stood ready to go back to his farm when the English people needed him no more. He does not care for the pomp and ceremony of court life, and his rigid simplicity is causing talk in Downing Street.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Quite a number of the people here are planning to attend the Southern Christian Convention when it meets in Norfolk.

Wakefield (Va.) Church is to add Sunday School rooms to its present plant. We are glad to hear of this progressive plan.

Elon graduates desiring to teach in New York State, so write to board of regents, will be given certificates if they hold the A. B. or Ph. B. degree.

The Elon graded school district is planning to make a $25,000 addition to its present plant and to meet the State's requirements for accrediting.

Dr. G. O. Lankford held a baptismal service on the first Sunday evening in April. We have not learned how many candidates were baptized.

Suffolk Church is considering the question of remodeling the present Church plant. Veritably, the signs of the times indicate growth for our Zion.

Rev. Thos. F. Opie, rector of the Episcopal Church of Burlington, gave a splendid address at chapel Thursday morning. He is a good friend of Elon.

Rev. J. F. Minnis, a graduate of Elon, is making a fine success of his work as foreign missionary for the M. P. Church. He is located at Dhulia, West Khandesh, India.

Bethlehem College has enrolled fifty students this year. President Hook writes that one hundred should be enrolled next year. And yet some feared we did not need Bethlehem College.

Mr. and Mrs. G. H. Higbie, Morris Plains, N. J., who have been wintering in St. Petersburg, Fla., were pleasant visitors to the college last week. Mrs. A. H. Hook is their daughter.

Rev. J. H. Lightbourne has an important article in this issue. Note it carefully. His friends will deeply sorrow that his eyes are giving him serious concern. We hope he may soon be entirely well.

A bill is pending before the Senate to tax gifts of more than $50,000 just as inheritances are taxed. This bill should carry an exception for gifts intended for charitable, educational, and religious purposes.

Commencement speakers for Elon are Dr. Alva M. Kerr, Dr. H. Shelton Smith, and Dr. Walter S. Athearn. This is certainly a fine array of talent. Elon's commencement is this year from May 25th to 27th.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson is in Eastern Virginia this week attending the one-day schools of missions. Next week he will be in the same good work in the North Carolina Conferences. Miss Coghill is assisting in this work.

Elon has the building spirit all around. Three new residences are now in process, or about to be, and six have been completed within the year. It speaks well for a community thus to grow with substantial dwellings. Homes of the Christian type are the hope of our nation.

Lay your plans right now to attend the summer school of religious education at Elon or Bethlehem. Read Miss Eldredge's fine article in this issue.

A friend of The Christian Sun of long standing is Mr. A. T. Holland, Suffolk, Va. If we mistake not, he subscribes for ten copies, sending nine of them to aged people and other families unable to subscribe. Who will do likewise?

Elon and Lenoir Colleges engaged in intercollegiate debating on Friday night, April 11th, at Elon. Elon won, with Messrs. Henry A. Peel and J. O. Atkinson, Jr., as the speakers. At Lenoir, with Messrs. W. B. Terrell and M. L. Patrick, Elon lost. The question was as to the cancellation of the inter-allied war debts. The negative won in both cases.

One of the largest crowds since the opening services last fall, was present on Sunday evening at the First Christian Church, Richmond, Va., to hear Sam Davis, our wonderful blind pianist, of Norfolk, Va. Pastors who do not avail themselves of Mr. Davis' services during their evangelistic or revival meetings, are leaving unused one of our most valuable assets. Mr. Davis is accompanied by his wife who leads the song services. The two make an ideal combination.

NOTICE.

The Southern Christian Convention meets with the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., April 29th to May 2nd. All delegates and visitors who expect to attend the Convention are asked to please notify the pastor, Rev. L. E. Smith, 4312 Colonial Avenue, Norfolk, Va., whether or not they will attend, and if so, what time they will arrive, and if they desire entertainment while in the city.

Rev. S. L. Beougher, pastor of our New Providence and Graham Churches, Graham, N. C., for the past three years, has resigned his work there, effective on or before November 1, 1924. This announcement comes as a distinct surprise. Bro. Beougher is very popular in his field, and people of our Churches honor him. He is one of our best writers, and certainly an able preacher and lovable man. Here is an opportunity for a Church that wants a real man of God as its pastor.

The fundamentalists, acting through a committee consisting of Prof. Leander S. Keyser, Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, Prof. J. A. Huffman, Prof. S. James Bole, and Rev. John Thomas, representing the Christian Fundamentals Association, 1020 Harman Place, Minneapolis, Minn., to which orders should be sent, have just issued a list of "Textbooks Selected and Recommended" "to be representative of evangelical Christianity." Many of these books the editor has read. He presumes all of them would be worth owning.

Dr. Martyn Summerbell has been making annual pilgrimages to Elon for more than a score of years. This year he received the heartiest welcome possible. Always scholarly and instructive, his lectures grip the earnest auditor. His sermon on Sunday this year was a masterly defense of Christ as the real Saviour of men and of the Holy Scriptures. He gave three great addresses on John Knox, John Bunyan, and John Wesley. He also gave a lecture on "American Wit and Humor," with quotations. Mr. Lynam expressed in very fitting terms the thanks and appreciation of the students for Dr. Summerbell's services.

The M. P. Church will open its college near High Point this fall. Rev. R. M. Andrews is acting president, and Rev. N. M. Harrison, Jr., dean. Other faculty and administrative officers will shortly be announced. We wish our M. P. brethren every good success in their undertaking. One man in their Church gave $100,000 to make their college possible. Their relations with the Christian Church and Elon have always been cordial and brotherly.

Dr. Barrett wishes to express his grateful appreciation to the many friends who have written him and sent him cards while he is in the hospital and to express his regret that it is impossible for him to answer them all now. He is very grateful for these expressions of sympathy and interest that come to him, and his friends will understand that he cannot answer now, but he wishes to take this opportunity to thank each and every one through the columns of the paper for their kindness in writing. He is making good progress in preparation for his operation.

It is now estimated that 9,998,771 persons were killed during the World War; 20,297,551 were wounded. The war also cost $337,946,179,657. All this life, and health, and money was expended in one war—and for what? What has the world to show for it? It has nothing save a seething world waiting for another murder of an archduke to plunge it again into another holocaust. It has tens of thousands of orphans, and other thousands of children who, because of undernourished babyhood, can never grow into normal men and women. It is the high privilege of the Church, being, as it is, the representative agency of the Christ, to lead the world into a lasting peace. We, each of us, are responsible for the keeping of the world in peace. As followers of Christ, we must learn and live the principles of peace as taught by the Prince of Peace.

TUBERCULOSIS CLINICS.

To date, ninety-seven free tuberculosis clinics have been conducted in the State under the direction and support of the North Carolina Tuberculosis Association. The findings of these clinics show that eleven and one-half per cent of all the persons examined were positive cases, while over 80 per cent were found to be negative, 6 per cent suspicious cases, and about 2 per cent doubtful. The number of examinations given at the 97 clinics total 10,008. The number of positive cases found was 1,150; the number of negative cases, 8,150; the number of suspicious cases, 628, and doubtful cases, 180.

In connection with the clinic work, 252 educational addresses were made on the subject of tuberculosis to an audience of 42,844.

Dr. D. R. Perry, formerly county health officer of Davidson, is now in charge of the clinics, which feature of tuberculosis extension work was made possible by the sale of Tuberculosis Christmas Seals.

The clinics are free and are held upon request of physicians, a county health officer, a public health nurse, a welfare worker or the chairman of Tuberculosis Christmas Seal sale. Since January this year, Dr. Perry has held clinics in Kinston, Durham, Davidson, Marion, Raleigh, Pittsboro and Wadesboro. While the direct object of the clinic work is to find cases, the educational value is of great importance. Here, large numbers of people come to know for the first time the fundamental things concerning the prevention, spread and treatment of tuberculosis, one of the most important of which is finding the case early while it can be cured.

CHAUTAUQUA NOTES.

Come early—avoid the rush and inspire others!

The Chautauqua and School of Methods meets at Elon College July 28th to August 3rd. The registration fee, and only charge, with the exception of a small charge for board and room, is $1. The following have registered and have paid their fee: L. M. Cannon, Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, Clarence Coghill, Prof. O. W. Johnson, Dr. J. U. Newman, Miss Mildred Pritchett, Mrs. W. A. Harper, C. M. Cannon, Mrs. C. M. Cannon, Mrs. W. P. Lawrence, Mrs. J. W. Patton, Prof. A. L. Hook, Miss Mary Graham Lawrence, Miss Pattie Coghill.

There is every indication that we are to have the most enthusiastic and largest attended session of the Chautauqua that we have ever had. The program this year is excellent. The new buildings will be an inspiration, and many are planning to enjoy the fine fellowship of these days.

Will not SUN readers decide as quickly as possible to attend the session and send in their registration fee, that we may know how to plan and prepare for the occasion? It will help very much in every way if those deciding to come will decide early, avoid the rush, and give inspiration to those who may be hesitating.

BRITISH AND AMERICAN SCHOOLS COMPARED.

Dr. John Adams, of London University, in addressing the annual convention of the Oregon State Teachers' Association, showed similarities and differences in British and United States schools in a highly original manner. He said, in part:

"American schools offer to their pupils education a la carte. In England we give them the course table d'hote. Here you allow them to pick and choose. There we give them the things that have for so long been required and insist that they take them all without turning aside for other things that they may like better.

"The course of study in the United States is the more practical, while that in England is more classical and more in accord with the traditions of the pupils' forbears.

"Schoolmasters are more in evidence in England than in this country, where so many women teach. In England there is a schoolmaster to every 3½ women teachers, while in the United States the proportion is one to eight. It would be desirable to have more men teachers in the upper grades and in high schools of this country, not because women teachers are less efficient than men, but that boys, as they grow older, need the contact with and direction by men.

"However, in my opinion, the charge sometimes made that the dominance of women teachers in our schools has ended to make the youth effeminate is not borne out by the facts. Best evidence of this is the fine character of the young men who went from the United States to fight in the World War."

E-D-I-T-O-R-I-A-L

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, Editor,
Elon College, N. C.

THE WAY TO DISUNION.

The title is deliberately chosen, though it makes the heart ache so to caption an editorial for THE CHRISTIAN SUN. This paper and our people have always stood for union. We stand ready at any time to prove our affection for all God's people. We love even those who make this editorial necessary.

Now, why this editorial?

On March 16th, in the city of Norfolk, Va., the finest Church in our denomination, and likely also the finest Church of any denomination in the State of Virginia, was opened for worship and the service of God. The Christian-Evangelist, St. Louis, Mo., in its issue of April 3rd, in its department "Letters to the Brotherhood," in an article signed by W. F. Nee, deposes and says: "The new Christian Temple will be dedicated March 16th. It is one of the most imposing and modernly constructed Church buildings here. The cost, including architects' fees, is $285,000. The structure is three and one half stories in height, and of limestone construction. The archietcture is perpendicular Gothic in every detail. The first floor contains a social hall to be used as a Bible class room and dining-room. It is equipped for indoor athletics. There is a kitchen, rest rooms for men and women, and shower baths, ladies' parlor, kindergarten, primary rooms and junior Church auditorium. The heating plant is modern, distributing heat in winter and dispelling it in summer, giving a complete change of air in fifteen minutes. A large foyer opens into the auditorium. Though it is a double building, the symmetry and beauty of the auditorium are preserved by windows on inside walls artistically lighted. The educational auditorium, with two large and a series of smaller class rooms, contains the Church offices and secretaries' rooms. The pastor's study is on a private elevation off the second floor. A large gallery is in the main auditorium on the third floor. There is also a gallery in the educational building, two large departments for educational work. The fourth floor has one finished room in the tower and the four organ chambers and unfinished space for at least twelve individual club or class rooms. A four-manual Hall organ is built in four large chambers, located in the four corners of the auditorium. The lighting system is unique in this section. The auditorium is lighted with seven large X-ray lanterns, Gothic design, with a semi-direct ray. The large tower is not decorative, but useful. L. E. Smith is pastor of the Church."

There is a group of men in our Church that has sincerely and earnestly hoped, and prayed, and worked for the union of the Disciples and our people. The effort has been a discouraging one from the beginning, because certain others of our people have felt and said that the Disciples are not for union, but for alienating our local Churches from us; that their real purpose is to proselyte. They cite as evidence of their conviction that our ministers are frequently listed as ministers of the Disciples; that our Churches are called on for offerings by the Disciples' boards; that books written by their people consistently and persistently ignore the plain facts of history with reference to our people; that in discussing Christian union, they always leave our platform out of the question, and other matters of a similar import. The unionists among us have persistently and conscientiously denied these purported designs.

A few years ago, commissioners from the two Churches met and adopted certain agreements as to the positions mutually held. It was also understood, among other things, that we would each not enter fields already occupied by the other and that we would respect each other's legal and historic names, looking to the day when we can be one united people. This attempted rape of the Christian Temple of Norfolk makes nugatory any further effort at union between the Christians and the Disciples of Christ. Our heart aches to record such a statement, but there is no need further to becloud the situation with sentiment. We love the Disciples of Christ, but we cannot make overtures further to ecclesiastical rapists. Such an act as is here recorded is a wedge driven in the prospects of union, making disunion inevitable; and that it has been perpetrated, bows the heart in sorrow. "Thou shalt not steal." "Thou shalt not bear false witness."

SEVEN SPECIAL NEEDS IN CHRISTIAN LIVING.

The Rev. F. E. Marsh, D. D., of London, England, the writer of the following paper, is well known in this country, as well as in England. He is a man of power in the Lord's service. He has been greatly blessed in his ministry. The seven needs which he presents are very important in the life of each individual believer. Study his teaching carefully:

Of the men of Issacher it is said they were "men, who had understanding of the times," to know what Israel ought to do (1 Chron. 12:32). May we be like them to know what we ought to do. Every hour of human history has its own need, we may well pray that we may know the need of the hour and ask the Lord to meet it.

1. We need a fresh recognition of the authority of God's Word. The enemies of God's Word today are found in the house of Christendom and found in increasing numbers; hence we need to cling to God's Word with a tighter grip. "Tighten your grips," Rutherford once wrote to a friend. Two thousand six hundred and one times we have in the Old Testament such expressions as "the Lord commanded," "thus saith the Lord," "God said," "the Lord spake," and "the Word of the Lord came." When we recognize the Lord in the authority of His Word, we have all the authority of the Lord at our back. An old Puritan has said, "The Holy Spirit always rides in the chariot of His Word"; therefore, if we want Him, we must get up into the chariot.

2. We need an increased consciousness of the need of the people. Do we recognize that the sinner is dead to God, although alive to himself; that he needs to be born from above and that his past must be blotted out if he is to see and enter the kingdom of God? God says the sinner is lost, in the cell of condemnation, in the blindness of ignorance, under the curse of a broken law, swayed by the dominance of sin, fired by the fever of lust, palsied in the helplessness of iniquity, and going to the terminus of outer darkness.

"There are bairns there!" exclaimed a woman in a town in Ayrshire, Scotland, as she pointed to a mound of snow which had slipped from a house and buried the children beneath it. So there are precious souls buried beneath the avalanche of sin. Oh! that we might realize it and rescue them.

3. We need a new grip of the Gospel and an added emphasis in our testimony for Christ. What is the Gospel? The Holy Spirit tells us in the first epistle to the Corinthians that it is the fact of Christ's death and resurrection according to the Scriptures (1 Cor. 15:3-4). On one occasion, when Tennyson was visiting in the lake district of England, he came across an old woman at a cottage door who was apparently reading a newspaper. He said to her, "What's the news?" She was thinking of Christ while the newspaper was in her hands, and she responded to the question, "It is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." To this reply, Tennyson responded, "Ah! that is old news, good news, and new news." This is the glad tidings of the Gospel, Christ died for our sins." There were sins to die for, and He alone could die for them. Oh! that we might preach this Gospel in the power of the Holy Spirit, till the people shall exclaim in faith, with the half-witted lad in Scotland, "Three in one, and one in three, and the man in the center is the man for me."

4. We need a deeper abandonment to the filling of the Holy Spirit. When we are passively right to the Spirit He can work in His might to the blessing of others. The Spirit will not delegate His power to us in order that we may use it, but He will use us if we will leave ourselves in His hands. We are not agents to use the Spirit, but we are instruments to be used of the Spirit. We often cry to the Lord that we might have more of Him, whereas He is all the time asking for more, yea, all of us. Christ said to His Father, "All mine are Thine, and Thine are mine." It is because He said in consecration, "All mine are Thine," that He could say in communion, "and Thine are mine." The colored man quaintly but aptly put it when he said, "The way to get the fire into the poker is to put the poker into the fire." When we abandon ourselves to the Spirit, He gives Himself to us.

5. We need a constant realization of the absolute need of prayer. Prayer keeps us in touch with God and keeps God in touch with us, even as the arm of the car touching the live wire finds all the electricity of the power house at its disposal.

"Repairs while you wait," so read a notice in a shoemaker's shop. That is the only way to get "repairs" and anything else, "while" we "wait" on God.

"To talk with God—no breath is lost,
Talk on, talk on!
To talk with God—no strength is lost,
Walk on, walk on!
To grind the axe—no work is lost,
Grind on, grind on!
The work is quicker, better done,
Not needing half the strength laid on;
Grind on, grind on!"

6. We need a definite cry to God for reality. What a lot of unreality there is in the best of us! Do we believe what we believe? If we never told to others only what we have experienced ourselves, how often should we speak? If God were to answer us in private what we pray for in public, should we be surprised? Would we like others to know what God knows about us? Some one has said we have three selves: "There is the self which people think we are; there is the self which we know we are; and there is the self which God knows we are.' Oh, to be what He desires! namely, thorough in consecration, clean in heart, kind in spirit, simple in faith, not jealous of others, not covetous in life, possessed by the love of Christ, doing everything to please the Lord, doing the right thing because it is the right thing to do, and always glorifying God.

7. We need a more ardent outlook for the coming of the Lord. "The coming of the Lord draweth nigh," the Spirit says. What do we say? If we are with the scoffers in the Church, we shall say, "Where is the promise of His coming?" If we are not right within ourselves or with others, we shall say, "My Lord delayeth His coming," and at once begin to smite our fellow-servants; but if we are right with the Lord we shall cry in response to His word, "Behold, I come quickly!" "Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

If the Lord should come in the morning
As I went about my work,
The little things and the quiet things
That a servant cannot shirk,
Though nobody ever sees them,
And only the blest Lord cares
That they always are done in the light of the sun,
Would He take me unawares?

If my Lord should come at noonday,
The time of the dust and heat,
When the glare is white and the air is still
And the hoof-beats sound in the street;
If my Lord Christ came at noonday,
And smiled in my tired eyes,
Would it not be sweet His look to meet?
Would He take me by surprise?

If my Lord came hither at evening,
In the fragrant dew and dusk,
When the world drops off its mantle
Of daylight like a husk,
And flowers in wonderful beauty,
And we fold our hands and rest,
Would His touch of my hand, His low command,
Bring me unhoped-for zest?

THE PEOPLE OF SWEDEN.

The Rev. Livingston Johnson, editor of the Biblical Recorder, during the past summer, visited Sweden and saw much of the people there. In a recent issue of his paper, he writes of the people of that land in a most interesting way. In writing of the people of Sweden, he says:

Sweden is one of the most interesting countries we have visited since reaching Europe. I am rather surprised that our people do not know more about Sweden than they do, but suppose that is because of its distance from America, making it inconvenient for tourists to include it in their itineraries. We have enjoyed our stay in no country more than in Sweden, even if we leave the meeting of the alliance out of the account.

The Country.

A glance at the map of Europe will show that Norway and Sweden lie side by side. We did not get into Norway, though we should like to have done so. Sweden is a beautiful country. The land is broken by high hills, and is given a very rugged appearance by the rocks that protrude from the surface of the ground. It is truly a "rock-ribbed" country. The houses are built on solid foundations.

The soil is not nearly so fertile as that of the other countries through which we have passed, and, as might be expected, there is not the attention given to agriculture here, as in France, England, or Belgium. They have magnificent forests, and ship more lumber than any of the other countries we have visited. Lumber is one of the chief commodities of the country. Fishing is also a national industry. They catch and ship multitudes of fish, though from the place fish held on the bill-of-fare at the hotels, it appeared to us that they could not have done much in the way of exporting while we were in Stockholm. However, this is not peculiar to Sweden. We have had fish everywhere in Europe and are completely worn out on that diet. I do not believe a member of our party will relish fish for months after getting home. The people here prepare them differently, and the fish seem to be of a different variety from those we have in America. The flesh is coarse, and tastes more "fishy" than those we get at home.

There is water everywhere, except on the tables at hotels, and this, I presume, accounts for the number of fish we find here. At Stockholm we had all the water we could drink. We have not seen the large number of cattle and sheep that we saw in all the other countries except Germany. Poor old Germany had all her cattle taken except 18 per cent, which were left to furnish milk for the babies of the country.

People of Sweden.

It is by the people, of course, that any country is judged. The Swedes are charming people. Next to the English, the Swedes are the finest type we have found over here, and in some respects they surpass the English. In the countries we have hitherto visited, the people were, for most part, brunettes, while here the blondes predominate. Blue eyes, fair complexions, and light hair, are seen on every hand, with an occasional brunette for the sake of variety.

The Swedes are extremely polite, kind, and accommodating. They are unusually free from the use of strong drink and tobacco. There are very few saloons and cigar stands in the cities of Stockholm and Gothenburg, the principal cities of Sweden. We did not see a man in either city under the influence of intoxicants, and very few of the inhabitants were seen smoking. There were no evidences of the gross immorality which were so plainly visible in Paris and Berlin, especially in Paris. The young women are modestly attired. There is no color on the cheeks or lips except the peach-blooms painted there by nature. The bearing of the young people of both sexes toward each other is becoming. To go from Paris to Stockholm is like going from Sodom to the Promised Land. The people appear to be religious to a degree seldom found in any country. Their religion impressed me as being real and not perfunctory. They sing as no other people I have ever heard, and one cannot listen to their songs, or look into their earnest faces while they are singing, without feeling that they are "making melody in their hearts unto the Lord." I have never been in an American city comparable in size to Stockholm in which the Sabbath was so strictly observed. The places of business were all closed, and I heard of no Sunday games. The Churches were filled on Sunday morning and evening, and in the afternoon twenty thousand people gathered in a large park to listen to gospel talks and songs. Their deportment in Church is much more reverential than is to be found in the average Church in America.

Royalty, of Course.

Sweden has a king, and he has two magnificent palaces, perhaps more, but we saw two, one in Stockholm and the other on the banks of one of the beautiful lakes of Sweden some twenty miles from Stockholm. As I was surfeited on the splendor of European palaces I did not go into either of these, but viewed them from without.

Dr. O'Kelley was talking to a native of Sweden who now lives in the United States. In response to the question as to why he left his native land, this intelligent Swede said there was no future for a young man without means in Sweden. He said wages are low and taxes extremely high. He said it took a large part of a man's salary to pay his taxes. When asked why it was necessary to exact such a large amount of taxes, the Swede said it was used to keep up the palaces and other things that accompany royalty. I am going to have something to say about European royalty in the concluding article. The few snobs in America who worship royalty need to study conditions over here.

BRO. HUNT AND HIS FIELD.

DEAR BRO. BARRETT:

We held our first appointment for this year last Sunday at Roanoke. We had no preaching service at night, as I had sickness in my home, and on that account I had to return. However, we had a nice little service and a splendid Sunday School. Bro. J. H. Crisler is superintendent. The school is small, but they are doing things. They have already paid their pladge for North Alabama mission work. Besides, they are giving to missions and to the orphanage work regularly.

In the afternoon we held a business meeting at the residence of Bro. Crisler, where we discussed the future plans of this Church, with the following results: Bros. V. E. Kitchens, C. H. Russell and J. H. Crisler were appointed a committee to secure a location site for our Church; Sisters V. E. Kitchens, E. M. Hood and J. H. Crisler, together with Bros. E. M. Hood and Thomas Payne, were appointed a committee to raise funds for the purchase of a lot. Mrs. E. M. Hood was appointed treasurer. Our flock in Roanoke is small in number and poor in purse, but they are willing and anxious to have a Church-house in which we may worship and serve. And they will have one at some future day unless hindered by some unforeseen event.

Now, brethren and sisters of the Christian Church, we need just a little aid right now. Please listen just a moment. We want every man, woman and child who loves our Church to loan the Church at Roanoke one dollar. See! Just loan us "one great big dollar," with which to purchase our lot on which to build. The lot will cost us about $2,000. So you see we want at least that many people to loan us the dollar. But, listen again, will you? Two of our members have agreed to give one hundred each of these dollars to pay on the lot. Fine! I say it is; for I know these men. Here is the second part of the contract: We propose to pay each dollar back in a period of five years, through the regular channels of Church benevolence. If we can establish our Church in this city, it will be one of the best investments we can possibly make for our Master's cause. In other words, the dollar you lend us will go back to the Church we love, and pay compound interest at a high rate. Would it not be nice if every subscriber to THE SUN would invest one dollar at Roanoke, Ala., for the cause of the Christian Church? The only thing it seems to me that could hinder the plan is the fact that it is too easy and simple.

What say you, brethren and sisters? If we can get our lot at Roanoke, we can get our Church there. Help us now, will you? Send your offerings to Mrs. E. M. Hood, Roanoke, Ala., or to myself at Wadley, Ala., and due credit will be given.

Thank you, and may God bless you in making an offering of one dollar under the conditions named. Will the Herald of Gospel Liberty please copy this article? With much love for you all, I am, as ever,

G. D. HUNT.

REVIVAL IN FIRST CHURCH, NORFOLK.

The First Christian Church, of Norfolk, has just concluded a series of evangelistic services. Rev. O. D. Poythress led the singing and the writer did the preaching. The junior, senior, and chorus choirs, under the immediate direction of Mrs. W. J. Spence, rendered splendid help and gave fine response to the leadership of Bro. Poythress. The women of the Church met every afternoon for prayer. There were twenty-six additions to the Church, and a very beautiful spirit of devotion to Christ and loyalty to His kingdom characterized the whole meeting.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

"One to Win One" has become a popular method of increasing Church membership. Any plan works if it is worked; and most good plans will work almost anywhere. But work without a plan is better than a plan without work. It is fatal when the plan is too big for the work. The size of a house will determine the plan for the house. What I have started out to suggest is that every subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN SUN secure one new subscriber to this good paper—this organ of the Southern Christian Convention. This "one to win one" is not too much to ask, and is not impossible of accomplishment. THE SUN is a good paper and essential to the life and growth of the Convention and the local Conferences that compose it. The paper contains splendid information. It keeps the people in touch with one another. It develops the organizations within the Church. It contains food for Church members. It breathes a good spirit. It represents our interests; and more, it represents the interest of the kingdom. It needs just double the present subscription list. There is no way by which each subscriber can do as much for his Church and the cause of Christ as by securing one subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

It is safe to say that THE CHRISTIAN SUN is as good as any religious paper in this country. It is adapted to its readers. It is a good family paper. It is a necessity for the Church. A railroad could as well operate without a schedule as the Church without a paper. It is the preacher in print. It is the mouthpiece of the Church. It is the torch that guides the people through the darkness and leads to success. It is cheap at two dollars per year. Outside of the purchase of a Bible, two dollars could not be spent in any other way that has the same religious value in a family as THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Like all other important obligations it requires a little thought and appreciation to fix in us the habit of reading the Church paper. All other departments of the Church would languish, if they did not die, without the Church organ—THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Its paper, its print, its type, its editorial work, its whole makeup, is a credit to the Convention which it represents. It would be a fine thing for every "one to win one," and thus double the subscription list and the efficiency of THE SUN.

This can be done in two days. Get some other to subscribe or give the paper to some poor family by another subscription yourself. It would surprise any Christian to know how much good you can do, and how much satisfaction you would derive from giving the paper to some other who is unable to pay for it; or to some family that is outside of the Church. It is really a good plan to win souls to Christ. A whole family might be won in that way.

This is a simple way of "one to win one," and even more to win a whole family. One who has never tried this method of winning souls and winning families to the Church would find it a fine field for Christian work. And if such work were kept up it would be a protracted meeting that would count. I hope that every subscriber and reader of THE CHRISTIAN SUN will lay this matter to heart and help to lift THE SUN above the horizon of our Church to a full noon of light.

BETHLEHEM NOTES.

I was a visitor of the second meeting of the Mission Board of the Alabama Conference, which met at Roanoke, on the 14th. All the members were present and put themselves to the task for the best interest of the Church. They have secured the services of Rev. W. T. Meacham for the Churches at Liberty Grove and Bryan's Chapel for this year. Bro. Meacham reports a fine outlook for the year, and is very much incouraged. Besides these Churches, he is to visit other places and do such work as he deems advisable, giving his full time to the work.

A report from Rev. J. W. Elder shows that he is very much interested, and other communities are calling for him to organize Churches for them. But we regret that he is hindered some on account of his health. It is hoped that when the weather gets better he will be able to go to those places which seem so anxious to begin the work.

It was decided by vote to have a district meeting at Pisgah this spring, and Revs. G. D. Hunt and E. M. Carter were asked to arrange time and program. We feel that this is a very wise step.

The outlook for the Church at Roanoke is very bright. Bro. V. E. Kitchen, a member of the board, also a member of the Church there, made a statement that as soon as the lot was bought work would begin on the building. They have a very beautiful corner lot in view that can be had at a reasonable price. This is a very important work and is an opportune time for the building. While other denominations have gone far beyond ours in number and means, yet there is the kindest feelings toward our coming.

There are two other fields that are inviting—Lafayette and Alexander City. Bro. Hunt was asked to look after the work at Lafayette, and I am asked to go to the other place. We hope to report favorable for both these fields.

It is incouraging to note that so many of those who subscribed to the North Alabama mission at the last Conference is making payments right along. This will enable the board to take care of the work in that section, and will make glad our hearts as a result.

Then, too, I might mention, as I close, our pledges to the Men and Millions Forward Movement. This covers a very large field, and is indeed needed. If our people could see the opportunity in this movement, it would mean that more of the pledges would be paid. Dr. Atkinson is making a desperate effort. Let's help him.

E. M. CARTER.

ROANOKE, ALA.

It has been some time since I have tried to write anything for THE SUN. I have enjoyed so much the good things from my brethren that I have felt thoroughly grateful. I am serving this year the following Churches: Rock Stand, Mt. Zion, Lowell and Shady Grove.

At Rock Stand, the work goes very well. The Sunday School is doing a good work under the efficient leadership of Bro. T. C. Harris. The Christian Endeavor Society is also doing good work with Bro. Harris as president, and our faculty of teachers to assist him in the work.

Our congregations are good, and the interest seems very good in the work, and we are expecting a good year, under the direction of the Holy Spirit.

Rock Stand sustained a very great loss on the 24th of March in the death of Bro. J. R. Kirby, who was one of the oldest and most loyal and devoted members that the Church has ever had.

In his going, the wife has lost a devoted husband, the children a loving and tender father, the country a law-abiding citizen, the community a Christian gentleman. May the Lord sanctify his going to our good and to His glory and comfort all those who mourn his going.

At Mt. Zion, the Sunday School is doing well, under the faithful leadership of Bro. B. E. Stephens, who has served for a number of years in this capacity.

The weekly prayer service is also doing well, and seems to be full of interest and is doing a good work.

The prayer life of the membership of any Church has much to do with the life and activity of the work. May the good Lord give us more praying men and women in our Churches.

This is our twelfth year with the good people at Mt. Zion, and we are hoping and praying for the best year yet, and may the good Lord keep us humble and direct us in all our thoughts and actions, and give us the victory through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Mt. Zion sustained a great loss this year in the death of Rev. W. R. Knight, and we mourn his going away. He was one of the oldest members of the Church. He organized the Church and was its first pastor, and was greatly beloved and will be greatly missed, but may the good Lord sanctify his going to our good and to His glory.

The community also sustained a loss on the 25th of March in the sudden death of Uncle Jim Swann. Uncle Jim was a good citizen and well beloved by all who knew him, and will be greatly missed. May the good Lord bless and comfort all those who mourn his death.

At Lowell the work goes very well. We are worshiping in a community building with the Methodist people, and we all get along fine, but we are not accomplishing what we would if we had a building of our own. The Sunday School is doing very good work, considering the vast amount of sickness that is prevailing.

Bro. W. W. Philpott is the newly elected superintendent, and we are looking for great results now, because he is one of our very best and most consecrated men, and the people have the utmost confidence in him.

Bro. Lumpkin, the Methodist pastor, is a splendid worker and a Christian gentleman, and we are expecting the work to go forward. Our work has never been normal since the mill closed down in 1922, but it seems to be on sound footing now, and we have all reasons to believe that there's a better day for us in the very near future. Our one great need here is a building of our own, and one of these days we hope to have it.

Shady Grove is located about three and one-half miles from Lineville, a thriving little town in Clay County, and is surrounded by several other Churches of the same faith and order, making its territory limited; but we feel that Shady Grove is doing a very good work. We have some good people at this place who want to see the work go, and they are standing by their Church and pastor in a splendid manner. The weather has seemed to be especially unfavorable on the third Sundays, and we have not filled very many appointments here since Conference, but we hope with the coming of spring the weather will be better and we can be on the field regular. Brethren, pray for us that the Lord may have His way with us and that His name may be glorified in all that we do, and may the Lord give understanding that His work may not suffer in our hands, and may He add to the Church daily such as He would have to be saved.

INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION A GREAT WORK.

By Hermon Eldredge.

The week of February 11th was a great week in Christian education, and was the occasion of the gathering together of the leaders of religious education, representing thirty-five denominations in Chicago. Our Board of Christian Education was represented by Mrs. F. E. Bullock, in the children's division; Miss Lucy Eldredge, in the young people's division; Rev. W. P. Fletcher, in the adult division, and Mr. Hermon Eldredge, in the administrative division.

The first two days of the week were given over to conferences of the leaders in the several departments, and eleven such divisional conferences were held preparatory to the meeting of the executive committee of the International Sunday School Council of Religious Education, which was held on Wednesday and Thursday.

About one hundred and fifty denominational and field representatives were in attendance at the meeting of the executive committee, and an equal number of leaders in Christian education were present as visitors.

This was the first regular annual meeting of the sections and of the general executive committee since its reorganization one year ago, at which time the International Sunday School Association and the Sunday School Council of Evangelical Denominations were united into the International Sunday School Council of Religious Education. Dr. Robert M. Hopkins, of St. Louis, presided as chairman of the executive committee, and Dr. Hugh S. Magill, of Chicago, acted as secretary.

Among the matters of general interest passed upon by the committee were plans for closer cooperation and support of the denominations represented by the council and who, in turn, represented over 20,000,000 of the Protestant membership of the country, comprising practically every leading Protestant Church in North America, with the exception of the Southern Baptist.

Reports showing great progress in the extension of week-day religious education and the daily vacation Bible schools, as well as progress in promotion and correlation of Church agencies for religious education, were presented. It was reported that over 1,000 communities in this country now have week-day religious education in connection with the public schools.

One of the matters of special interest and discussion was the present and future organization and promotion of the young people's division, and after much debate it was voted to continue the international camps for this year under the direction of Mr. W. H. Danforth, chairman of the young people's division, and Messrs. Alexander, Orwig, and Waite, as his associates in this work. The policy after 1924 is settled that the international council will conduct these summer camp conferences directly.

The report of the committee on the name of the international organization created considerable interest and discussion, and it was finally voted that the name of the organization should be the International Council of Religious Education.

A budget of $175,000 for the year was adopted and apportioned to the several denominations and States and provinces.

Among those who were present of interest to our people and who took a very prominent part in the proceedings were Dr. Marion Lawrence, consulting general secretary of the international council; Dr. W. C. Pearce, of the World's Sunday School Association, and Dr. H. Shelton Smith, superintendent of education of the international council. All three of these leaders received their early training in the Christian Church.

A very fine spirit of harmony and progress marked the entire session, and for the first time in the history of the Protestant Church the denominations are seriously coming together to solve the problem of the Christian education of our children and youth which may mean the character of the Church of tomorrow.

One of the matters of promotion adopted was the establishing of an international periodical, to be known as the International Journal of Religious Education, to be edited by Dr. W. E. Rafferty, formerly editor-in-chief of the publications of the American Baptist Publication Society.

The whole tendency and spirit of the meeting was toward three different objectives:

1. A unified Protestant Church promoting Christian education.
2. The correlating of Christian education agencies within the Church.
3. The extension of Christian education beyond the Sunday services and in co-operation with the public school system.

All in all, the meeting at Chicago was a forward-looking session, with a decided spiritual, as well as progressive, outlook, and is bound to mean much for the Church of tomorrow.

Erie, Pa.

BEREA (A) AND MT. BETHEL.

As we look back over the time spent in our field of work, undertaking for Christ, there are always lost opportunities to be seen. Our Christian Church has a wonderful opportunity for service, and our Church leaders must see that great challenge as never before. Our Churches, smaller ones especially, must close their ranks and check the lost energy. As our Church is working out a great modern program for the advancement of the kingdom's work as a whole, the individual Church must feel more responsibilities, and realize that the bigger organization is looking to it for the working of the plans. Now, this cannot be done so long as our smaller Churches feel no responsibility in the whole work. The greatest obstacle in the way of our smaller Churches doing a greater work is the fact that their efforts are not united enough. Churches need pastors, and not merely a preacher. A man cannot be the pastor he should with his interests divided in all parts of the State. It is purely a case of lost energy for two of our small Churches in the same locality to have different ministers, and besides it is almost a sin against the great uniting power of Christ. Before our rural Churches, and most of these Churches are small, can do what is expected of them, there must be some uniting within their own borders. There is too much duplicity of efforts by our ministers, and that can be somewhat remedied by forming circuits among our Churches that are not able to support a whole-time minister.

Berea (Alamance).

Regular services were held at Berea on the first Sunday morning and evening. The people are undertaking great things here, but not great enough. The Church has never done all it could, even though the efforts have been inspiring. The members have adopted the budget system for financing its work, and the results have been highly pleasing.

The Church building is undergoing some general repair work, and it will be somewhat beautified when completed. On the first Sunday in May the memorial services will be held, and a great home-gathering service is anticipated.

Mt. Bethel.

The work at Mt. Bethel is showing some marks of improvement. The Sunday School has continued with good attendance throughout the winter months, and this is a very inspiring part of the work. A district Sunday School institute was conducted at the Church on March 12th by Dr. W. P. Fletcher and Miss Pattie Coghill. It was well attended, and has yielded some definite results.

On last third Sunday, a Ladies' Aid Society was organized, with about twenty members. It is hoped that this auxiliary will help to carry on a larger program in the future.

The folk at Mt. Bethel are ever ready to be doing for the Master, and they generally accomplish what they undertake. A great progressive work among these big-hearted people is anticipated.

Memorial services will be held on the third Sunday in May, and a great service is being planned for that time.

THE CHRISTIAN EDUCATION SURVEY.

Some time in the very near future the Churches of the Southern Christian Convention will receive an "annual survey" from the Department of Christian Education of the General Convention. They will be mailed to the local Church director of Christian education. Be on the watch for them.

We wish to call attention to several matters:

1. The department needs the information provided for in the survey.
2. The information should be as nearly accurate as you can possibly secure it.
3. We would suggest it be for the last reported year's work. This will secure uniformity from the various Conferences and Conventions, and agreement with such of the information as will be found in our 1924 and 1925 annuals.

For instance, Sunday School statistics. If the year closes June 30th, then report for the year June, 1922, to June, 1923.

4. Be prompt. The officers awaiting your replies are just as busy as you.
5. Be especially careful in answering both sections of question No. 1 of group 6.

"Does the Church assume any responsibility for the Sunday School budget?....; to what extent?.

Your regional director wishes you to secure credit as Churches for your financial interest in the educational activities of the Church, especially in the Sunday School. The Churches have suffered much unfair and unjust criticism on this score. Do not answer "No" if your Church provides heat, light, janitor and part time of the pastor for the school. It is for these purposes 90 per cent of the current expense budget goes, and the Sunday School participates in their benefits from 10 to 75 per cent. In the case of the Holland Church, I am quite confident $1,200 would not be too great an estimate.

James H. Lightbourne,
R. D. Southern Convention.

We are glad to learn that Pleasant Ridge (G) contemplates a new and modern Church building shortly. This Church is in the open country, in a splendid community. Four students are in Elon from there this year, and two of them are ministerial students.

EVANGELISTS BIEDERWOLF AND RODEHEAVER IN JAPAN AND KOREA.

Christian people in America, especially the thousands who are praying for the work of Evangelists Biederwolf and Rodeheaver, will be glad to learn of the really wonderful response that is everywhere being given to their messages.

Some one asked Dr. Biederwolf if he was going to preach a different gospel in these countries, and he replied that he was not going to preach a different gospel, but that he was going to preach the gospel differently. Mr. Biederwolf recognizes the reasons why it is hard for a thoughtful Japanese, for instance, to renounce his own religion and accept Christianity as the only religion worthy of consideration, and with rare tact avoids any unnecessary inconsiderateness of Japanese religious feelings. He also understands that the Japanese mind demands the why and the wherefore of a thing, but this evangelist is a bed-rock believer in the so-called old-fashioned, orthodox gospel, and with rare insight into and appreciation of the delicacies of the situation, he has preached and preached with tremendous emphasis every fundamental of the faith once delivered, and the mind and heart of the Japanese and the Koreans have responded in a most gratifying way.

Three years ago, Dr. Biederwolf was told by a Y. M. C. A. secretary that the Japanese were not responding to evangelistic appeals, and was advised to take an educational subject, but at the same time was courteously urged to do as he thought best. He preached that night to 1,500 Japanese in Tokyo, and eighty-four splendid specimens of Japanese manhood came down front and confessed Jesus Christ as their Saviour. He has gone back to the Orient convinced that the mind and heart, whether civilized, half civilized, or heathen, is reaching out after the God of the Christian faith, though of this they may not be fully aware, and they are ready to accept this faith in its entirety when intelligently, fairly and earnestly presented, and he has not been disappointed.

The leaders of Christian work in Honolulu were enthusiastic over the work done by these evangelists in Hawaii immediately after which they sailed for Japan. Throughout the Japanese cities, wherever they have gone, from fifty to 150 have renounced Shintoism and Buddhism and taken Christ as their Saviour at practically every meeting they have held. This was true in Tokyo; it was true in Osake; it was true in Kobe.

From Kobe, Japan, the evangelists went over into Korea and began their work first at Taiku. Here, in this city of 60,000, the famous evangelist Kim Ik Too had been preparing the way, and the Koreans were eagerly awaiting the coming of the American evangelists. Dr. Biederwolf seemed to preach with unusual power, and night after night they crowded the altar space, coming literally by the hundreds. One night a man, towering above the audience like Saul among his brothers, was pointed out to the evangelist as the wickedest man in the city. Dr. Biederwolf stretched out his arm over the great crowd, and, pointing directly at the man, pled with him for his Christ. A moment the man bowed his head, and then straight down he came; his face beamed. The next morning he was at Kim Ik Too's 5-o'clock prayer meeting, and at the 10-o'clock Bible study, and again at 3 in the afternoon at preaching, and then again at night at the great evangelistic service. The missionaries pronounce the work as most definite and thorough. Biederwolf speaks through an interpreter, but he has a good one. He puts it over with real "Billy Sunday" earnestness, and the two of them taking about twenty minutes each talk and work as one man. Everybody is praising God and are urging these two evangelists to remain for a period long enough to visit every city in their land.

Evangelists Biederwolf and Rodeheaver sail from Colombo for Australia February 11, and expect to be back in the United States about July 1st, and will do no evangelistic work in America until the following fall. The people of the Orient are especially fond of Mr. Rodeheaver's singing and trombone playing, and the Bible work of Miss Saxe has held their interest most intensely.

SOICHI SAITO VISITS AMERICA.

Soichi Saito, a fine type of the Christian leader developed by the Y. M. C. A. in Japan, is general secretary of the national committee of the association in that country. He was on shipboard en route from England to America, after attending the World Conference of Workers Among Boys at Portschach, Austria, when he learned of the overwhelming disaster that had befallen his native land and his home city of Tokyo. He says the news was first told him by the ship's barber, who did it with a delicacy and sympathy that deeply impressed him. Then all the passengers joined in expressions of sympathy and acts of kindness which made him realize how closely calamity draws people together. In New York also he found himself surrounded by the friendship of the brotherhood, which did much to comfort him in his distress at not being able to get news concerning his family. It was not until September 17th that the cable came, assuring him of their safety. He was then on the eve of leaving New York for Japan, in company with G. S. Phelps, senior secretary in Japan for the American international committee.

Both return to their posts to face with courage, faith and cheer the great work of relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction. Not only have the association buildings been destroyed, but the secretaries, American and Japanese, have lost their homes and personal possessions. A new association work must rise from the ruins of the old. But these workers go back with the assurance that the American brotherhood of the Y. M. C. A. will not fail them.

The value of the association is fully recognized by the leaders in Japan as a character-building asset. Mr. Saito was received most cordially at Washington by the Japanese ambassador, Masanca Hanihara. In the course of their conversation, the ambassador expressed his concern regarding the young men and women of Japan at this critical time, and his conviction that the greatest need of his country was the development of strong, upright character. The disaster gives a wide opportunity for the association to render a signal service to the nation just now. He especially asked Mr. Saito to take back to the Japanese people the message of the kindness and good will of the American people which he had heard and experienced while here. Japan would never forget it.

Mr. Saito is particularly interested in developing the work for boys in Japan. Camps for boys have been held for two years past, and a beginning has been made with good encouragement. The past summer, for the first time, there was a conference of Christian teachers in the Japanese high schools on the subject of upbuilding boy character. Of twenty-six who took part, half were teachers in public schools; the others in mission schools. Annual conferences are proposed in the interest of this movement. A building for boys' work is one of the features which Mr. Saito hopes to see included in the rebuilding plans. Both he and Mr. Phelps return to a most difficult task, cheered and inspired by the American spirit of warmth and helpfulness. They rightly estimate that one of the most important things they can do is to carry cheer and hope and a message of good-will wherever they go. H. B. G.

CONFERENCE AT MOODY INSTITUTE.

(Concluded.)

"No one who really knows the preacher in question can doubt what that means; it means that Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick is to avoid presenting the negative side of his views sharply and clearly, and is to continue to clothe a thoroughgoing agnosticism in the terminology of the Christian religion. It is, I think, a degrading proposal. Far from being the worst sermon which has been preached in the First Presbyterian Church of New York, the sermon 'Shall the Fundamentalists Win?' was perhaps the best; for it came nearer than any other to presenting the real views of the author in language which the plain man could understand. But frankness even more thoroughgoing than that partial lapse into honesty ought to be a matter of course.

"A preacher ought to, above everything else, seek a pulpit or a platform where, without reservation or a double use of language, he can speak his full mind. Personally, I could not find that freedom in a Church where so-called 'controversial' matters were banned. I could not find freedom where in the present time of conflict I should be prevented, out of deference to the agnostic modernism of the day, from witnessing for Christ, and I can imagine no more degrading thing than such relinquishment of freedom.

"Preaching is the most degrading of occupations unless the preacher stands in the pulpit where he can speak frankly and freely and honestly. Let every preacher seek such a pulpit. That is our simple program for the perplexities of the present day.

"But above all things, let there be honesty. What good is it to have fine, large Churches to preach in and admiring crowds if the whole life is founded upon a lie?

"There are some of us who are going to fight for honesty with all our might; there are some of us who still believe that a man has no right to 'interpret' a pledge to mean the exact opposite of what it says; there are some of us who still believe a witness ought to tell the truth. We are contending for two things—freedom and honesty; freedom of a man to choose the platform upon which he will stand, and the honesty which obligates him to speak his full mind.

"A large part of the most gracious teachings of Jesus was polemic. Jesus set His kind of righteousness over against that of the scribes and Pharisees. It is impossible to say what a thing is without saying what it is not. Black letters cannot be read on a blackboard. There must be contrast if there is to be clearness.

"In advocating polemics, I am not advocating persecution or base personalities or the desire to get the better of an opponent in an argument, or the substitution of vituperation for argument. These things involve deadly weakness. We ought to avoid them as we would a plague. The polemic I advocate springs from an earnest devotion to truth. Such was the polemic of Paul, who regarded himself not as an orator or the originator of a 'program,' but as a witness, and it is important for a witness to tell the truth, I know that is very old-fashioned, and it is very dangerous to be regarded as old-fashioned just now, but I must stick to it just the same.

"I do not believe that homely honesty should be left behind at the door of the Church. I do not believe that a man ought to say, in repeating the Apostles' Creek, that 'the third day He rose again from the dead' and interpret that to mean 'the third day He did not rise from the dead.' The recent modernist pronouncement signed by one hundred and fifty ministers in the Presbyterian Church advocates liberty of interpretation. Now, I do not deny that honest differences of opinion about the interpretation of the Bible or of other documents may exist. But, if there were not some limits to such leeway, all speech would become useless, for if everything I say can be 'interpreted' to mean its exact opposite, what is the use of saying anything at all? And to say, as this modernist 'affirmation' says, that such plain questions as to the question whether Jesus was born without human father or whether His body emerged from the tomb are questions of 'interpretation' which the New Testament leaves open is absurd. Any man of common sense can see that these are not questions of interpretation, but questions of fact. The New Testament affirms in the plainest possible way the virgin birth, and the bodily resurrection of our Lord. If you reject these things, you are not rejecting an interpretation of the New Testament, but the New Testament itself; you are holding that the New Testament is wrong.

"People say that if we insist upon this honesty we shall split the Church. These theological questions, it is said, ought to be discussed quietly among brethren, and not be allowed to disturb the rank and file. The question is whether the advocates of agnostic modernism are 'brethren' or not! I do not think they are. They are fellow-citizens; they are human beings with immortal souls, whom we ought to love and try to win for Christ, but 'brethren' in the Christian sense they are not. On the contrary, they are what Paul calls 'false brethren privily brought in' and the first step toward the unity of the Church is the exclusion of these men from the teaching ministry. They have introduced a wedge into the mighty structure. Allow that wedge to remain and there will be a 'split.' The way to save the building is to remove the disruptive elements, and it is that work upon which Christian men are now engaged. It is high time! The work ought to have been undertaken years ago. But there may yet be time.

"We are working, then, not for the disruption of the Church, but its unity. And we do not believe the Church can be founded upon the pitiful reduced Jesus of modern naturalistic reconstruction, but that it can only be founded upon the Lord of glory presented in the Word of God.

"The truth is that two mutually exclusive religions are contending for the control of the corporate witness of the existing ecclesiastical bodies. One is the naturalistic or agnostic modernism, represented by Dr. Fosdick and by many ministers in almost all the Churches. The other is the great redemptive religion, founded upon certain supernatural events in the first century, which is called Christianity. A mighty conflict is on between the two. Paganism has made many efforts to disrupt the Christian faith, but never a more insistent or insidious effort than it is making today.

There are three possible attitudes to take in the present conflict. You may stand for Christ—that is best. You may stand for anti-Christian modernism—that is next best. You may be neutral—that is worst of all.

About 600 young men and women rose to their feet as volunteers for foreign missions in the closing session of "Founder's Week Conference" at Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, following an address which set forth the tremendous difficulties of the work.

After thirty years of missionary work in Arabia there are not more than ten Christians, and not a single Christian Church, they were told by Dr. Paul Harrison, known as "the apostle of the desert." Efforts are being made to get into the interior, but it is almost a hopeless task, declared Dr. Harrison, who has spent fourteen years in arabia as medical missionary, and will return immediately.

"Missionaries never have been able in all these years," he said, "to break down the barrier which Mahomet placed before his people thirteen centuries ago with just five words—'There is no God but God.' That is the power which has proven too strong for Christian missionaries to overcome. The Nomad Bedouin has a greater conception of God than the average man on Chicago streets. Their whole thought is built on those five words —'There is no God but God.' The workman repeats it as he works, the mother sings it in her lullaby to her baby. From the beggar in Bagdad to the most powerful and richest man in the country, all are ruled by this one thought. It commands the devotion of the most primitive heart. It is not the sword or license that sways Arabia and other Mohammedan countries. It is the picture of God which Mahomet made for them in the Koran thirteen centuries ago.

"There are 230,000,000 Mohammedans in the world. It is the worst and best religion, and missionary effort among Mohammedans is all a matter of individual work. You cannot use the Billy Sunday type of evangelism in Arabia. You cannot argue them into belief. We tried to find cut the best methods to use by talking to patients at our hospital. We kept records of the reaction of the patients and found that parables did more to impress them than anything, especially the parable of the good shepherd. You cannot win them by argument. They welcome controversy, but the missionary who tries to argue with them is foolish. He will get nowhere.

"There is no country in the world where they pay to such an extent the penalty of ignorance and sin. There are no women like the Mohammedan women. About one-tenth of 1 per cent can read, and I never knew one who could write.

Prof. J. Gresham, of Princeton Theological Seminary, declared in his second address at the founder's week conference of Moody Bible Institute that the rejection of the Christian faith is one sign among many others of the intellectual decadence of our age. Dr. Machen spoke on "Christian Liberty" and pointed to the Apostle Paul's unquestioned belief in the supernatural Christ.

"The intimate friends of Jesus, those who had seen Him subjected for a time to all the petty limitations of human life, agreed fully with Paul in regarding Him as a supernatural person seated on the throne of all-being. That astonishing fact has never been explained by the modernists' Church, which regards the gospels as false and supposes that the real Jesus worked no miracles and was a man differing only in degree, and not in kind, from the rest of men. The Christian faith is not so unreasonable a thing as is sometimes supposed, and the rejection of it is one sign among many other signs of the intellectual decadence of our age.

Sees Need for Paul Today.

"Would to God we had a Paul today! Our Churches, as well as the Churches of Galatia, are on the point of turning away from Christ. Some people would have us conceal the issue by pleasant words. They would have us confine our Bible reading to the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians. They would have us say, 'Peace, peace,' when there is no peace. Do you think that is really love? I think not. The writer of the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians would have been surprised by the use to which his words have been put. He would have been surprised to learn that love is being put in opposition to the cross of Christ. Christian love must go deeper than a conscienceless sentimentality.

"The modernists' Church today is trying to bring us into bondage again. It is the bondage of salvation by character or salvation by making Christ Master through one's own efforts in one's life. That is just a sublimated form of legalism. It is dependence upon human goodness. It is a relinquishment of the grace of God. In another form that bondage prevailed in the middle ages.

"Salvation was made to depend upon obedience to a host of rules prescribed by the Church. And then a monk named Martin Luther began to read the epistle to the Galatians with his own eyes, and liberty was brought to light. Salvation, it was discovered, did not depend at all upon man. It was a free gift of God in the cross of Christ. And it was to be received by faith.

Discovery Should be Made Again.

"Now, the discovery needs to be made again The liberating doctrine of justification by faith has been forgotten as it was in the middle ages. Prof. Goodspeed, for example, in his translation of the New Testament, translates the word that means 'justify' in the Pauline epistles by 'make upright.' The historian may well be appalled by the loss of the historical sense, the abandonment of the whole methods of scientific history involved in that translation.

"No doubt, the modern translator is not interested in the question how a sinful man becomes right with God, but every historian knows that Paul was interested, and if the translator is to be true to his sacred trust he must place the emphasis not where he would wish it placed, but where it actually was placed by the writer he is translating.

"The Christian is even more appalled by the religious retrogression in evidence here. Right here at the University of Chicago we have medievalism indeed, the abandonment of the freedom upon which the modern Christian world is based, and a return to the bondage of the middle ages." J. H.

STATISTICS ON CITY EDUCATION.

According to a just-issued census report, public school and educational expenditures in the twelve largest cities of the United States increased by 155 per cent over those for 1917.

The report shows that in 1922 the per capita expenditures for educational purposes not including libraries was $17.03, against $7.51 in 1917.

The cities and their expenditures for educational purposes are listed as follows:

New York, $107,204,000; Chicago, $39,001,000; Philadelphia, $22,797,000; Detroit, $25,349,000; Cleveland, $17,795,000; St. Louis, $8,743,000; Boston, $14,945,000; Baltimore, $8,132,000; Los Angeles, $16,141,000; Pittsburgh, $10,983,000; San Francisco, $6,140,000; and Buffalo, $8,903,000.

Los Angeles had the largest per capita expenditures for all educational purposes, with $25.94. Detroit was second, with $25.51, and Cleveland third, with $20.82. Expenditures in the other cities were: Boston, $19.54; New York, $18.38; Pittsburgh, $18.07; Buffalo, $16.99; Chicago, $13.77; Philadelphia, $11.98; San Francisco, $11.69; St. Louis, $11.09, and Baltimore, $10.67.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

April 27, 1924.

Subject: "Amos and Hosea Pleading for Righteousness." (Temperance Lesson.)

Lesson: Books of Amos and Hosea.

Golden Text: Hate the evil and love the good. —Amos 5:15.

Devotional Reading: Isaiah 55:6-13.

The times were out of joint, badly out of joint. A survey of the background of the lesson shows this. Jereboam II had been king for about forty years. He had restored the kingdom to almost the proportions that it had embodied during David's reign, and he had developed it internally. His reign was a reign of peace, and prosperity had followed. Cities had sprung up, and wealth had accumulated until the country had become very rich. This wealth had been amassed, however, through exploitation of the poorer classes, and it was in the hands of a few of the upper classes. As was inevitable, this wealth had begotten a love of ease and luxury. And as was just as inevitable, this love of ease and luxury had begotten immortality and injustice. Conditions were going from bad to worse socially and morally. The same thing was true religiously. The leaders thought that so long as they kept up the elaborate ceremonies, and offered their sacrifices, they were pleasing Jehovah and were thereby keeping His favor. And was not the prosperity an evidence of His favor? Their blindness would be as inexplicable as it was tragic if it were not for the fact that we have many people today just like them. Worst of all, as Amos says, "they are not grieved for the affliction of Joseph." In short, they did not care.

It was "for such a time as this" that Amos had come into the kingdom. He was a native of Tekoa, twelve miles south of Jerusalem. He was a herdsman and a dresser of sycamore trees. His out-of-door life and his occupation had made him rugged, independent, thoughtful and fearless. His travels had carried him to some of the cities, and with prophetic insight he saw the evils of the day and the inevitable consequences of those evils. His heart burned within him at the injustice of social conditions and the hypocrisy and shallowness of the religious life. And he felt called by Jehovah to denounce these evils, to warn his fellowmen, and to urge them to repentance. Accordingly, he appeared at Bethel, a main sanctuary on a great feast day, and in one of the most direct and searching sermons ever preached, arraigned Israel, but Israel as represented in the leaders—it is significant that Amos did not denounce the common people—for its unspeakable sins. For tactful approach, imagery, vividness, directness, and earnestness, there are few pieces of literature that compare with Amos' sermon.

The keynote of the boom of Amos is justice. He insists that Jehovah is a God of justice, and that He must visit His wrath upon all injustice. He formulates the following universal principles:

"(1) Jehovah rules not only over Israel, but over all peoples; therefore, all are alike accountable to Him for their acts.

"(2) Jehovah is merciful, and long overlooks the crimes of nations; but the time surely comes when He must and will punish deliberate and continuous wrong-doing.

"(3) Each nation is responsible to Him in direct proportion to its opportunity and enlightenment.

"(4) Jehovah judges peoples not according to their religious creeds or ceremonial rites, but according to their acts."

The heart of the book of Amos is, I think, chapter five, verse twenty-four: "Let justice run down as waters, and righteousness as a mighty stream."

Hosea stands in sharp contrast to Amos. He saw very clearly the evils of his day—he was practically a contemporary with Amos—and he blamed these evils on the leaders, the rich and the priests. But the central theme of his message was love. He emphasized Jehovah's infinite love and His longsuffering and mercy. And all of this grew out of his personal experience with his wife. This woman had been unfaithful to him, and he had been obliged to put her away, or she had left him on her own accord. When he learned that she had come to the inevitable end of her life of shame, he bought her from the man who held her as a slave, and brought her back to his own home, although he did not reinstate her until she had shown evidences of true penitence. The great fact which Hosea could not get away from was that he loved Gomer, his wife, even when she had been untrue to him. Reasoning by analogy, he thought of how much Jehovah must love Israel, His beloved, even though Israel had been untrue, and how Jehovah's heart must be grieved by her sins. It was this element of tenderness and warmth that gives immortal value to Hosea's writings. It was he who gave us, in an incomplete way, what John declared when he said, "For God so loved."

A Few of Many Teaching Points from the Lesson.

1. A man who is called of God need not be afraid to speak what God commands him to speak.

2. How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God.

3. Ceremonies and rites avail nothing unless the heart be right.

4. Injustice will be punished.

5. Repentance involves a deep-rooted change of life.

6. Discipline is often the expression of love.

7. One man sees one side of God's character; another man sees another side.

8. Material prosperity is not necessarily an evidence of Jehovah's favor.

9. God speaks to us through our human experience.

10. Love never faileth.

11. Forgiveness is dependent upon an attitude of mind and heart.

12. Godliness is the only guarantee of security, and even godliness does not guarantee security from physical harm.

13. A man may speak the truth, and yet speak it in love.

14. A man must have a sense of compassion if he would speak with power and appeal.

15. "Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates and med decay."

16. Plain living helps high thinking.

17. God must punish sin, and does punish it.

18. God will forgive the penitent sinner.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

April 27, 1924.

Topic: "What Opportunities do Missions Offer for Life Service?"

Lesson: Acts 13:1-3, 16:9-10; Mark 6:7-13.

Daily Readings: The need of the world.—John 3:16-21. Paul's opportunities.—Acts 26:13-19. To save a nation.—Ex. 3:1-10. To fellowship with God.—1 Sam. 3:1-10. To be a leader.—Dt. 31:14-23. To smite oppression. —Judges 6:1-16.

Christian Endeavorers have no right to make life plans without consulting God. For if we are really consecrated Christians, we will know that we "are not our own; we are bought with a price." In other words, a Christian is a person who has given himself to Christ, and who is trying to live as Christ would have him live. And he will, if he is sincere, want to do what Christ would have him do.

No Christian, then, can make his life plans without considering the mission field as an opportunity for life service. We must ask not only "What wilt Thou have me do?" but "Where wilt Thou have me do it?" It is hollow mockery to sing "I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord," if we do not mean it.

There are several factors which must be taken into consideration in making a decision for life work. We must know our talents, our capacities, our possibilities. We must know the needs. We must know the opportunities. We must consider where we can make our lives count for most. We have only one life to live; we must not waste it. —opportunities for life service:

The mission field offers several—in fact, many

1. The opportunity for carrying the gospel to those who have never heard it. There are few people in our country who have not at least heard it. There are millions in other lands who have not even heard it. To carry these riches to them is a rare opportunity and a high privilege.

2. The opportunity for leadership. Many people who would never have been leaders here have become outstanding leaders in mission work. The demands of the work have made them big men and women.

3. The opportunity for promoting Christian unity. Missionaries are coming more and more toward the spirit of unity between denominations and the breaking down of denominational barriers.

4. The opportunity for promoting international peace and good will. Missionaries are doing more along these lines than all the peace societies combined. They are the original peace societies, with the Prince of Peace as their head.

5. The opportunity for living a life of large service. A man can make his life count for more on the mission field than perhaps anywhere else, no matter what his profession.

6. The opportunity for saving a nation. He who brings the leaders of a nation to Christ is starting a process that will eventually save that nation. Missionaries are doing this in a large way.

7. The opportunity for hastening the coming of the kingdom. As an ambassador of Christ and the Church on the outposts of humanity, the missionary is making a great contribution to the eventual triumph of the kingdom.

OUR SUMMER SCHOOLS AN "OPEN SESAME" TO CHURCH PROGRESS.

By Miss Lucy M. Eldredge.

It was a summer Sunday afternoon. On one of our college campuses was a group of people—young people, pastors, a few older men and women. They were living over again the week just closing at one of our Church summer schools, as they talked of the classes and their leaders, as they remembered the songs and the recreation periods and the dozen and one things which had happened every day as they had lived together in the college dormitory. It had not been a week of uninterrupted play, although to most of them it was vacation. It had not been a week of work alone, but they were proud of the certificates which were well-earned souvenirs to carry home. A week before, they had been strangers. Today, they were friends, with sympathetic spirits, with like interests, all eager to go out and do much the same things, in very different places. The faces of the pastors were very happy as they listened to their own young people, and as they knew that they could go back with not only a greater vision personally, but with some very real and valuable helpers who shared the vision. And as I looked and listened and thought, I wished—oh! how I wished—that every one of our thousand and more Christian Churches could face another year, with an encouraged pastor and interested and informed workers to help him. How I wished that every one of our thousands of young people could have the experiences of a summer school or Conference or camp! Truly, it seemed to me, here was a way by which we could begin to realize our dreams for them, and they could begin to make their own dreams come true. Here was the "open sesame" which would magically solve many problems of the Church and of individual lives. The picture of that group, which could be multiplied many times, was a challenge to the Church to go forward in the great work of the summer school, realizing its great opportunities.

Summer days seem to spell many things—vacation, busy farm days, revival meetings, family reunions and picnics, and in fact almost everything, it seems, except schools! But an ever-increasing number of public school teachers are each year furthering their professional training through summer schools. And the Church is coming to see that, as "the summer days come again," there is a chance for young people and older folks, Church leaders, and pastors, to come together to learn better how to do their tasks in the work of the kingdom. People who have longed for such training are finding it possible. Pastors are being helped by coming in close touch with men with like problems, and finding solutions. Sunday school superintendents and teachers and all Church workers are finding in the summer school what they have been long seeking. An increasing number of young people are finding here some of their happiest weeks, while they are learning many new things.

There is a real advantage in this tendency to remember our young people in our summer school program and to provide for their needs. Through this medium they come to know the Christian Church, for what she stands and what she is trying to do. Where it is possible to hold the school on the college campus, this is most true. The college too often has been looked upon as the possession of the few, when the Church college should be for the whole Church. High school boys and girls spending a week on the campus in summer school are coming to know their college far better than through pictured catalogues or another's story. Right there, their college and Church loyalty is strengthened. Older young people who were kept from college, may have this share in her activities. In all hearts a pride in "our" school is developed which will endure. The young people come to know the Church better through knowing its leaders. No place else is there offered such an opportunity to know each other intimately. At Conference or Convention delegates got o different homes. Here there is one home, with one dining-room, where all live as one great Christian family. There is the chance for heart-to-heart talks, for the discussion of life plans, for securing Christian decisions. Here the young people come to know their Church better through the programs and plans which are presented. They go home more intelligent about the whole program of the whole Church.

The task of the summer school is also to bring the young person to know himself and his own share in the work better. The classes bring him in touch with teachers and leaders who are safe guides. The association and lessons, in class and out, should bring out the best side of the youth's nature, and at the same time show him how to grow more and more useful through Christian service, because he knows better how to serve effectually.

But the whole work of the summer school in its relation to youth is never complete unless it helps the girl and the boy also to know Jesus Christ better. Through morning devotional service, the evening vesper, personal influence of Christians, through the very spirit of the whole assembly, there should be an influence working which will show them very clearly Jesus the Christ as youth's best Leader and Guide and Hero and Saviour. Here is the summer school's greatest task!

The summer school is an unexplored mine of great wealth. Some of its results are being shown in lives of individuals and Churches today. But for all of our Churches, for all of our Christian Church people, there is a great privilege waiting in the summer schools in all sections of our Church. Will the privilege be seized and the blessings claimed?

MONDAY.

HOW TO PRAY.

"Ask and it shall be given you."—Matt. 7:7.

"Whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive."—Matt. 21:22.

"Ask and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full."—Jno. 16:24.

"Ye have not, because ye ask not."—Jas. 4:12.

"Ye ask and receive not because ye ask amiss."—1 John 3:22.

When thou hast selected a place, set apart a time, bowed thy body, shut thine eyes or the doors of thy soul, then thou art ready to begin to pray. And now let thy prayers find utterance upon thy lips. It will help thee a great deal to put them in words.

Of course, thou canst pray in thy thoughts, but thou must remember that the mind is very refractory, and it is often confused by the running together of many thoughts and flashing ideas. Thy words will curb these and put them into sensible comprehensive meaning. Words are something thy ears can hear, and to utter thy petitions helps in thy concentration, and aids thee to see Him who is invisible.

Having done all this, thou art ready to pray. Now speak to the Lord, thy Father. Be thyself, and let thy soul go out in prayer. Think not of the performance, but of God, His love, his blessings and thy soul's desire to Him. If thou art full of gratitude, thank Him; in contrition, confess and repent; dost thou want anything, ask for it; a child asks its parents for what it wishes, why not thou; is it a blessing, name it; if in the spirit of love and modesty and in accordance to His will, thou dost pray, thou hast the promise that it shall be done.

TUESDAY.

"SHARP PRACTICE" IS NOT GOOD BUSINESS.

"Ye shall do no unrighteousness, in measures of length, of height, or quantity."—Lev. 19:35.

"Provide things honest in the sight of all men."—Rom. 12:17.

"He that walketh righteously, and speaketh uprightly; he that despiseth the gain of oppression, that shaketh his hands from taking a bribe, that stoppeth his ears from hearing of blood, and shutteth his eyes from looking upon evil—he shall dwell on high."—Isa. 33:15-16.

Perhaps you made a deal today by which you gained a great advantage over some other person because of your greater shrewdness or experience.

You know you received more in the deal than you should have received.

The other fellow did not get what was his due.

Thinking the matter over now, were you square?

You are excusing yourself on the plea that the other fellow went in with his eyes open, and if he did not know what he was doing he should not engage in such deals.

Look at yourself in the mirror and ask yourself if your course is strictly straight and honorable?

"Business is business," you say.

But is it not possible for a man to be straight and honorable in business?

Have you no principles of right and wrong in your business?

Would you steal and defraud under a business blanket covering?

You will not prosper in the long run if you continue to use what is charitably called "sharp practice" principles in your dealings with others.

(Copyright, 1924, International Feature Service, Inc.)

Prayer.—Dear Father, forgive us our sins, and give us a vision of noble living and a closer walk with Thee. Measure our standard of righteousness, our conception of honesty, our devotion to good and our faith in Thee. Refresh us in Thy spirit every morning and strengthen our courage every day to follow Thee without wavering, that our faith may not wither under the noonday sun nor grow dull with the close of the day's toil. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

THE FOUNDATION OF FAITH.

"Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmoveable."—1 Cor. 5:58.

This is the last verse in the greatest passage of all the writings of Paul. It is a heavenly chapter with an earthly application. It deals almost exclusively with the things of the spirit and the spirit world, and then in the last verse and with a sudden turn of thought, the author turns from the dead to the living and says, "Be ye steadfast, unmoveable." The central themes of the chapter are: (1) Christ rose from the dead, (2) He is alive now, (3) we share in His resurrection, (4) He is not only a risen Christ; He is a victorious Christ.

Now, the practical application which Paul makes is this: If the bedrock foundation of our faith is this glorious fact of the resurrection; if, out at the end of every faithful and loyal Christian life, there is the hope of a life eternal; if we are the heirs of such a heritage, what sort of men and women ought we to be? The story is told that an instructor had been employed for a young prince, mischievous and hard to manage. At last the instructor fell upon the experient of tying a blue ribbon on the lapel of the prince's coat as a sign of his royalty. Whenever the prince misbehaved, the instructor pointed at the blue ribbon, and the prince, reminded of his royalty, yielded instant obedience. That is what Paul does in this chapter. He pins the token of immortality on us and calls us, with a trumpet-like admonition, to be steadfast and unmoveable.—Rev. E. V. Cole.

Prayer.—(Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining).

THURSDAY.

THE GOD OF JESUS CHRIST.

"Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ."—1 Peter 1:3-8.

Of a certain period in human history it is written, "There were giants in those days." Very true this is of the age which saw the rise of the Jewish race. Three great figures stand out like mountain peaks. They are Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. Each of them saw the beginning of a great historic movement, the separation of a race elect for a special purpose, namely: the keeping alive in human hearts of the doctrine of God's unity, and the development of the Messianic hope. This was the age of a special disclosure of God, a revelation of His character.

There was a later period of special disclosure of God's character. That was when Jesus came. The real purpose of His advent was to make God better known to the children of men. People had lost the image of the Eternal. Paganism had multiplied its gods. Judah had overlaid its portrait of God with legend and tradition. The image was lost. Jesus, the Son of God, was the great Restorer. He restored the image of God more by what He was than by what He said. He spoke His message. It was brief, but beautiful. Then He went away. But what He was remains, a radiant spiritual divine presence.

Now, who is God and what is He? He is "the God and Father of our Lord, Jesus Christ." Then He is the God of humble lives. He is the God of such as make duty their watchword. He is the God of loving hearts. In Christ, God dwelt. Through Him, God spoke. By Him, God made Himself as one of us.—Rev. Chas. C. Albertson.

Prayer.—(Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining).

FRIDAY.

CHARACTER BUILDING.

1. What is in a good name? Ans.: "A good name is rather to be chosen that great riches, and loving favor than silver and gold."—Prov. 22:1.

2. What is said of instability of character? Ans.: "My son, fear thou the Lord and the king: and meddle not with them that are given to change: for their calamity shall rise suddenly."—Prov. 24:21-22. "Thy goodness is as the morning cloud, and as the dew that goeth early away."—Hos. 6:4.

3. What is said of firmness of character? Ans.: "He that endureth to the end shall be saved."—Matt. 10:22.

4. What is said about force of character? Ans.: "Herod feared John, knowing that he was a righteous and holy man."—Matt. 6:20.

5. What is it that defiles character? Ans.: "Evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornication, thefts, false witness, etc."—Matt. 15:19.

Prayer.—Dear Father, fill this day with Thy presence and fill us with the beauty of Thy goodness, and may its value be added to by our own righteous living. May we hear Thy voice in the speech of things around us and follow Thee in the ministry of kindness and love to our fellowman. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

SATURDAY.

JOY IN THE WORD OF GOD.

"The statutes of the Lord are right rejoicing the heart, the commandment of the Lord is pure enlightening the eyes."—Ps. 19:8.

A devout and conscientious daily reading of God's Word will turn the world to despair and to God, and reveal the Church as the only agency able to cope with the problem of sin.

Folks are seeking pleasure, but they are seeking it in the wrong way. True joys can be found only at its source, and its source lies in the things that give light, that give knowledge, truth, peace, contentment, purity of conscience, purity of soul, freedom from worry and hope in eternal life. These are some of the things that make glad the heart forever.

To some, "folly is a joy," but it is "to him that is void of wisdom" (Prov. 15:21); and some "hath pleasure in the answer of their own mouth" (Prov. 15:23); but it is also true that "a man of understanding maketh straight his going, and to the wise the way of life is upward." It is this that brings greatest joy. In God's Word there is the overshadowing of the divine presence and power. In it is His counsel; in it is superior mental and physical strength, power to overcome evil, inspiration that impels upward, quality of understanding that is luminous as light in the night, greatest channels of service and eternity with God.

Prayer.—Dear Father, we thank Thee that Thou hast not cast us out in our neglect of Thy Word; turn our hearts to it now, that we may never be ashamed. Forbid that we shall yield to strange and unholy influences, but may we have Thy Word so well planted in our hearts that we may be as strong in reproaches and temptations as when in holier influences. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"The Sabbath was made for man."—Mark 2:27.

The Sabbath is necessary for our physical health. Rest is necessary for machinery, and the laws of man's body are such as to demand intervals of repose. It is one of nature's primal and universal laws.

The fundamental idea of the Sabbath at first was to "rest from labor." "Take care of the body," it seems to say, "as a requisite to spiritual health." Paul says this "body is the temple of the Holy Ghost . . . wherefore glorify God in your body."

The emphasis of the Bible on bodily culture is itself a proof of that fact and its importance. Therefore, we cannot be devout in form only or conform to certain religious customs and do with the body as we please. God has bound us up, body and soul, in the very heart of moral and physical law, as well as the laws of heaven.

Prayer.—Our Father, forgive us of our sins. Make this day of Thine all it should be to us. May we reverence our bodies as the dwelling-place of Thy spirit, and we pray Thee to sanctify them to rest and holy ends, worshiping and serving Thee in the beauty of holiness. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

SHALLOW FORD.

Since my last letter we have been moving forward with our Sunday School work. At the regular quarterly meeting of the Church, on Saturday, January 12th, a committee was appointed to arrange for the building of three class rooms. On January 28th, the logs for the framing and sheathing were cut from the Church ground. On February 4th and 5th the sawing was done, and the lumber was put on the ground ready to start the work. So early on the 6th, the class rooms began to go up, and by the 17th of February they were ready for the classes to take charge—just thirty-five days from the time the committee was appointed. The labor was given by the people of the community. There were over thirty people who worked some time on this work. Our Sunday School is very proud of this convenience, as it is so much better with a school of our size.

We have been doing well along the Sunday School line; for the first three months of the year our average was 75 per Sunday, or 35 per cent of our public school district at Sunday School every Sunday for three months. On March 9th we had 114 present, or over 50 per cent, as you will see—215 is the total population of our district.

We were very glad to have with us on Sunday, April 6th, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, who taught the Sunday School lesson for us, and also preached at the 11 o'clock hour.

Bro. C. D. Johnson, of the Christian Orphanage, was also with us and gave us a talk on the work that is being done at our orphan home.

At our prayer meeting at 7:30 P. M. we had with us Miss Pattie Coghill, who made us an excellent talk. We hope to have these people back with us again, as we enjoy having visitors. We extend a welcome to one and all to visit our Sunday School at any time. It helps us to exchange ideas. Come to see us. To the people of the Christian Church, let's make the next three months "go to Sunday School" months, and stay to Church. Please let's not get in the habit of going to Sunday School and leaving before the preaching.

I wonder how many of our members of the Christian Church there are who do not attend Sunday School! There are some who cannot go, but to those who can and do not go, where do they spend their Sundays? On the street corner or loafing over the farm? Just try going to Sunday School and see how easy it will be to get up and take the children and go every Sunday. Soon you will just want to go!

W. E. WALKER.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

Easter is almost here, and the good ladies in our Churches want our little girls to be happy on that day, and the boxes of little dresses are coming in this week. The Christian sisterhood of the First Christian Church, Warren, Ind., sent us a box containing twenty dresses, ten pair of bloomers, one waist and one sheet. The Ladies' Aid Society, Sidney Christian Church, Sidney, Ind., one box containing twenty-six dresses, two pair of pillow cases, two aprons and one waist; Ladies' Missionary Society, Bethel Christian Church, Mansfield, Ill., two comforts, twenty-seven dresses, two sheets; Ladies' Aid Society, Arthur, Ill., fifteen dresses, and one apron; the Ladies Benevolent and Social Society, Suffolk Christian Church, Suffolk, Va., eighteen dresses.

This is fine. I feel sure quite a number of our ladies' aid and missionary societies will send us boxes. We have always had a very sweet response from the good ladies when we were in need and called on them to help us in this work. I know it is a joy to the kind-hearted women to make and send these little dresses for the little motherless children to make them happy on Easter morning. I know it must fill their hearts with joy because they know the little dresses will fill the hearts of the little children who wear them with joy and happiness.

OUR PLEDGES to Men and Millions are Sacred, Solemn and Binding.

These obligations were made through the Church to the Kingdom of God and to all that pertains to building up that Kingdom in the world, so far as our Christian Church is concerned. As Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has so pertinently pointed out: "A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations--'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42)--but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

Many are making great sacrifices to meet these obligations and pay these pledges. Every one who fails to do so not only produces paralysis in his own moral system, but to that extent paralyses the efforts and sacrifices that the faithful and the loyal make.

BEAR IN MIND MEN AND MILLIONS MEAN AND STAND FOR ALL THAT THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH MEANS AND STANDS FOR.

—REMEMBER—

that the fourth year ends April 30, 1924.

After that, we have only one more year in which to meet these obligations. Unless we put forth a mighty effort to pay some on these pledges during the last quarter of the fourth year, there is great danger that we will fail entirely, because of the bulk of our pledge looming up before us in a one-year period.

Paying SOMETHING by April 30, 1924, will make it easy to pay ALL by April 30, 1925. Where there is a will there is a way, and God always helps those who try to their capacity to help themselves.

TRUITT.

Mrs. Cornelia Patton Truitt, beloved wife of Mr. W. J. Truitt, of Alamance County, N. C., fell on sleep April 1, 1924, being 68 years 7 months and 29 days of age. Besides a beloved husband, Sister Truitt leaves to mourn their loss two brothers—Rev. J. W. Patton, Elon College, N. C., and Attorney George M. Patton, Greensboro, N. C.; and many relatives and friends. Her life was exemplary, she being a faithful and devout Christian, a devoted wife, and for many years a true and loyal member of Shallow Ford Christian Church. Her faith in God was vivid and vital, her belief in prayer steadfast and unshaken, and her influence in the Church and community was for good and for God. When the summons came for her departure, she was ready and willing to go.

The funeral services were conducted from Shallow Ford Christian Church on the afternoon of April 2nd, conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. N. G. Newman, D. D., Elon College, N. C. A large concourse of friends and loved ones gathered to pay their tribute of respect. The floral offerings were appropriate, fragrant and abundant. She heard and gave strict heed to the voice that said: "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life."

J. O. ATKINSON.

PASCHAL.

John Long Paschal died at his home, Alamance County, N. C., February 11, 1924, aged 36 years 6 months and 11 days. He was united in marriage to Annie Lee Barnett October 20, 1912, and to them were born five children. His wife and four children survive him.

He joined Union Christian Church in early life, and held his membership there till called from labor to reward. He was a kind husband and father, a good neighbor, and much loved by those who knew him.

The funeral services were from Stony Creek Presbyterian Church, conducted by Rev. Mr. Roberson and the writer. The Junior Order, of which he was a member had charge of the body of their brother and rendered their ritual service at the grave.

Sweet be thy rest, dear brother, from all sorrow, suffering and care.

Get Nerve Force from Nuxated Iron

It will strengthen your nerves and increase your vigor and endurance, often in two weeks' time. It contains the principal chemical constituent of active living nerve force in a form which most nearly resembles that in the brain and nerve cells of man. It also contains organic iron like the iron in your blood, and like the iron in spinach, lentils and apples. Organic iron enriches the blood and plenty of rich red blood means more nerve force, so that Nuxated Iron not only feeds what might be termed artificial nerve force to the nerve cells, but it stimulates the blood to manufacture a greatly increased supply of new nerve force. Get a bottle of Nuxated Iron today, and if within two weeks' time you do not feel that it has increased your nerve force, and made you feel better and stronger in every way, your money will be refunded. HAND.

Roy Hand was born at Wadley, Ala., September 20, 1907, and died at Tifton, Ga., March 17, 1924. He joined Enigma Christian Church September, 1916, and when Vanceville Christian Church was organized, he became the youngest charter member (eleven years og age). He owned a calf that he sold for $5.00, which he gladly gave to help build the house. He loved his home and Church, and was an active member in his Church and an obedient son in the home.

He bore his sufferings with patience, and expressed his readiness to die if it was the Lord's will. A beautiful flower was plucked from the bloom as it was blooming into a life of usefulness.

Roy left to mourn their loss father, mother, one brother and three sisters, with a host of relatives and friends. We feel that our loss is heaven's gain. We can only bow in meek submission to Him who doeth all things well. Pray for sustaining grace to lead us through this life and that we may meet Roy again at the resurrection of the just.

Fortebee

AN EXTERNAL TREATMENT FOR TUBERCULOSIS.

Speedily restoring patients to normal health and strength. Use it yourself. Be your own doctor. Treatment absolutely harmless. A great discovery. Here's what W. T. Woolfolk, Atlee, Va., says about it: "About eleven years ago I developed tuberculosis in both lungs. I went to Colorado twice, and stayed there about three years, but got no relief, and I spent a while in Western North Carolina, but got no relief. About six years ago I got hold of a bottle of Fortebee and used it, and within three days I was greatly improved, and in about three months I was practically well, and have enjoyed excellent health ever since. Fortebee is the greatest remedy for tuberculosis I have ever seen or heard of. It saved my life."

There are others who endorse this remedy as highly as does Mr. Woolfolk. Price per bottle, $2.50; large size, $4.50.

STONE.

Bro. Alleus Stone, Apex, Route 4, came to the end of life's journey on March 25, 1924, at the age of 75 years and 4 months. In September, 1876, Bro. Stone was married to Mary D. Williams, who now survives him. To this union were born six children, three of which preceded their father to the spirit world. The three surviving are: J. B., Boone, Iowa; J. W. and G. L., Durham, N. C.

Bro. Stone was a man of clean Christian character. He was a close observer, a deep thinker and a persistent follower of the truth. His own life and that of his family is a testimony to the value of the family altar.

Funeral services were held at his Church on the day following his death. The building was much too small to accommodate the immense gathering of friends who would pay respects to the life of one who had loved and labored with and for them throughout his years. The Lord comfort the bereaved and give us more of his type.

B. J. HOWARD.

TRIBUTE TO KIRBY.

James Ransom Kirby was born May 17, 1835, and died March 24, 1924. He was married in early manhood to Miss Elizabeth Gilham. To this union was born thirteen children, eleven of whom survive him. In departing this life, he leaves a wife, eleven children (six sons and five daughters), quite a number of grandchildren and a host of friends to grieve for his going.

Bro. Kirby was an exemplary citizen. Back in early manhood, in the dark days of civil strife, when the call came for him to go, as he believed, for his country, he kissed his wife and babies goodby and went and gave four years of his life upon the battlefield in answer to his country's call. Bro. Kirby was not only a good citizen, but a noble Christian gentleman. His faith was fired upon God. For more than sixty years prior to his death he had been a consecrated worker in the kingdom of righteousness.

Some fifteen years ago he united with the Christian Church at Rock Stand. Prior to this, his membership had been with the Methodist Church. While coming late in life to our Church, his love for it was equal to any. He was alive to every interest of his Church. He was always sympathetic and helpful to his pastor; ever loyal to his Church, and true to his God.

A noble Christian hero has left us, but heaven is made richer by his going.

From his friend and former pastor.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By Rev. S. M. Lynam.

Sanatorium Burned.—

Broad Oaks Sanatorium, at Morganton, N. C., was partially burned some days ago. Four of the patients were burned to death, and others seriously injured. Dr. Vernon, who is in charge of the institution, states that it will be replaced at an early date. The loss was about $25,000.

Flying Around the World.—

Four army airplanes are now on their flight around the world. It is, in fact, a flight around the North pole, and in the trip they will cover thirty thousand miles. The planes started from Santa Monica, Cal., on March 15th. In the route selected, the longest single jump they will have to make is 860 miles from the Aleutian to the Kuriel Island group. They have now left Resurrection Bay for Chignik, Alaska.

Some Chewing-Gum Figures.—

In 1921, the latest year for which figures are available, the factories devoted to the manufacture of chewing gum turned out products to the amount of $38,865,000. This enormous amount of chewing gum was bought and used by the American people. It is said that the chewing-gum industry was started on an invested capital of fifty-five dollars. That was not many years ago. Suppose we set ourselves the task of giving the Church such a phenomenal growth!

Americans are Wealthy.—

Census bureau statistics recently issued show the wealth of America to be $320,803,826,000, more than half of which is in realty and improvements thereon. Each individual, therefore, has an average wealth of $2,918.

America is the richest nation on earth. It has a greater per capita holding than any other nation, and it is dry.

Prohibition has not ruined America financially or economically.—Ex.

Importing Bees Prohibited.—

The United States has prohibited the shipment of bees to this country from every nation except Canada. The reason for this is that a malady, known as the Isle of Wight disease, has attacked bees in many European countries and has deprived Europe of an adequate supply of honey. The bee disease was first noticed in 1904, in the Isle of Wight. Although it has swept over Europe, the United States has been comparatively free from it until recent years. Importations of bees, however, have resulted in the loss of a million dollars a year to American beekeepers, the Department of Agriculture estimates. The queen bees, the workers, and the drones all fall victims to this strange disease, of which very little is known.

Canada Approves Treaty.—

The Canadian House of Commons, on March 21st, passed a resolution moved by Premier King, approving the liquor-running treaty pending between the United States and Great Britain. Premier King asked Parliament to approve the treaty on the ground of morality, international good will and commercial benefits. The Canadian government, said the Premier, had approved the pact subject to its acceptance by the Canadian Parliament, and that it asked that in cases where a board was appointed to consider the question of compensation to a Canadian vessel, the representatives of the empire on the board should be nominated by Canada. To this, the British government agreed.

Greeks Want a Republic.—

A recent plebesite in Greece shows that an overwhelming majority of the Greeks want a republic. The agitation for the plebesite was started by Venizelos, the eminent Greek patriot. If the vote means anything, and it must, the prospects look dark for the King and Queen of Greece, now in exile. The republican form of government, can it be rightly administered, is fast coming to be recognized as the best form of government. It must be safeguarded, however, by rightly educating the citizenship, into whose hands the ballot is placed. An ignorant and illiterate population cannot govern wisely or well. They will wreck the ship of state. Americans have recognized this fact, and expenditures for public education are rapidly increasing. The Church must see that America does not come to have what Germany had—culture without conscience. The Church must carry on a vast program of Christian education that will keep abreast of the State education if the world is to be salvaged from its present perilous position. Now is the time for every Church to begin in a very definite way this Christian education.

Hugo Stinnes Dies.—

Hugo Stinnes died April 11th, at his home at Muelheim. Herr Stinnes was probably the greatest financier in the world. At the beginning of the World War his fortune was estimated at about thirty million gold marks. It is now estimated at more than a billion.

He exploited Germany for his own purpose, and in his lifetime wield greater power perhaps, than any reigning sovereign.

He was born in February, 1870, and inherited a part of his wealth from his father, a wealthy Jewish merchant. His interests at his death were widely varied. He owned twenty large hotels in a number of German cities. He controlled the iron and coal interests of his country, sharing that control with his friend August Thyssen and a few others. He was interested in the great potash fields of central Europe, and practically owned the inland water traffic of Germany. It is rumored that he personally possessed more than sixty leading newspapers of Germany.

Hugo Stinnes had gathered all this wealth by impoverishing his country. He openly boasted that Germany couldn't get on without him, and thought that he owned the country. He looked forward to the possession of Austria and Hungary. With all this wealth, Hugo Stinnes had little to leave behind him that the world will count worth while. He will be remembered no longer than it will take to forget him. He gained much for himself, but he gave the world nothing, and will be accounted a failure. The greatest life is that which gives the most toward the building of a better and a happier world. The man who will live longest is not the man who gets most, but the man who gives most.

Two News Dispatches.—

The comparative unimportance of certain works of men, held by him at the time as of the highest interest, and the amazing life inherent in what, in its beginning, is often looked upon as of no importance, is strikingly illustrated in two news dispatches of the day.

One tells of the Armistice Memorial, formed from the railway carriage in which the armistice was signed, falling into ruins, although it was conveyed to the grounds of the Invalides, in Paris, for preservation. The other records the unearthing, in what was once ancient Phoenicia, of what is described as the earliest known alphabet, dating back to at least 1200 B. C.

The Moabite stone, discovered in 1859, dating back to 850 B. C., is the earliest record of an alphabet the world possesses, except for this new discovery.

To us of today the armistice was the most important event in our lives. It meant the end of war, privation, death, suffering. It meant—so we thought—a new world order, charity, peace, brotherhood of nations, rehabilitation, reconstruction, happiness.

To those who carved them, the stones on which they "wrote" their alphabet were probably of no greater importance than the primer in which we print ours. Yet the alphabet, earliest of literary inventions, revolutionized the world and may justly be considered to be the foundation stone of civilization as well as education. Without the alphabet there would be only picture writing such as the Chinese have; clumsy, inefficient and keeping such wisdom as there is, only for the few.

The humble invention which made the world, lives; even its earliest record persists for thirty-one centuries. And our boasted monument of our great peace beginning, is falling to ruins after six years!

NOTES-PERSONALS

We print below the budget of the Albany (N. Y.) Church, Rev. W. G. Hook, pastor. Study it carefully.

Dr. Walters, of our Richmond Church, is doing a man's job in that city. Read the Richmond notes in this issue.

Mrs. W. H. Denison, Dayton, Ohio, is aiding in the one-day mission schools this season. Her work is very effective.

Mothers' Day will be celebrated this year May 11th. The custom of setting apart a special day in honor of the mothers of the land is highly to be commended.

Dr. F. Scott McBride has been chosen as general superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of America. He succeeds Dr. P. A. Baker, whose death occurred recently.

The Oak Level Christian Church will hold an all-day memorial and home-coming service on the 4th of May. All members and friends are cordially invited to attend.

Prof. W. E. Moon, of the Starkey Seminary faculty, is a visitor to the college for a few days. He is delighted with the signs of growth and progress at his alma mater.

Rev. Geo. D. Eastes has been unwell recently. His friends will pray earnestly for his speedy restoration. We have no finer-spirited man in our brotherhood than Bro. Eastes.

Word from Dr. Barrett is to the effect that he is doing well in preparation for his operation. Mrs. Barrett is with him, and Mrs. Hearn, his daughter, will also shortly join him.

The Psiphelian Society gave its annual program on the evening of April 19th. The Psykaleon will give its on April 27th. These two societies for the Elon girls are doing excellent work.

The high school commencement season is now on, and the Elon professors are filling numerous engagements. It is a fine opportunity the college thus enjoys of bringing its ideals to bear in various quarters.

The Missouri State Sunday School Association Joins with Palmer College in maintaining the summer school there. It is a fine idea. Nine faculty members are announced, with Dr. F. G. Coffin as head.

Neighboring geysers of hot water are to be used in Reykjavik, Iceland, to heat the city. The geysers are within a mile of the city and have long been used for laundry purposes. Wooden pipes will carry the heat.

The one-day school of missions for Alamance County met at Elon College and was largely attended. These schools are for inspiration and good-fellowship. The one at Elon certainly accomplished its purpose.

Our publishing interests should receive no small degree of attention at the hands of the Convention. Only a limited number of unofficial tracts have been issued. Our people do not know themselves, and to be sure others do not.

Mr. and Mrs. John B. Stratford, of Graham (N. C.) Christian Church, were visitors during the past week in Richmond, Va., and attended the First Christian Church. An Easter pageant was given Sunday night, entitled "Go and Tell" —of the resurrection.

Good news comes from Burlington. Our leaders are moving there in the direction of a second Church. The idea is good. We have lost ground in so many places by having only one Church. We are proud Dr. Lankford and his people are taking this forward step.

The work at Dover, Del., under the leadership of Dr. R. C. Helfenstein, is assuming proportions of the first magnitude. When the new plant is completed there, the Church will rank with the best-equipped Churches of the country as to its facilities for religious, educational and social work.

Rev. T. J. Green was a pleasant visitor on Monday. He is pastor at Shallow Ford and one of our most devout and consecrated workers. For many years he stood out against the call to the ministry. When he did yield, he became supremely happy. Excellent results have attended his pastorates.

NOTICE.

The Southern Christian Convention meets with the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., April 29th to May 2nd. All delegates and visitors who expect to attend the Convention are asked to please notify the pastor, Rev. L. E. Smith, 4312 Colonial Avenue, Norfolk, Va., whether or not they will attend, and if so, what time they will arrive, and if they desire entertainment while in the city.

Dr. F. G. Coffin has filled his engagement at Yale. He gave several addresses, followed by open conferences, with our own people present and representatives of other Churches, particularly of the Disciples. He also conducted one of the Chapel services. We may rest confident our cause was well represented by our General Convention's President.

Dr. C. H. Rowland's evangelistic services in Greensboro are being attended by large concourses of people. Soon after the meetings began, Dr. Rowland suffered an attack of indigestion and had to close the services for a few days. He resumed them with his accustomed zeal and consecration, and the prospect is fine for a great ingathering Easter Sunday.

RICHMOND NOTES.

Considering the rain, we had a good attendance at both services last Sunday. Dr. Staley preached two excellent sermons.

The fourth anniversary last Sunday showed the following results: Sunday School organized January, 1920, with 17 members; present membership of regular school, 114; home department, 15; cradle roll, 17—total, 146. Church organized April 4, 1920, with 40 members; received since, 83; lost by death and transfers, 18; present membership, 105.

Finances.

Church and Special Offerings.

Envelopes	$ 7,133.51
Loose change	1,041.44
Other sources	23,589.82
Total for Church	$31,764.77
Sunday School	1,711.74
Ladies' Aid Society	1,158.23
Woman's and Y. P. Miss. Societies	150.00
Total amount raised	$34,784.74
Received from Mission Boards	26,293.00
Grand total	$61,077.74

Present Status of Church.

Cost of lot	$16,800.00
Cost of building	67,563.91
Cost of furniture and organ	12,000.00
Total	$96,363.91
Paid on plant	42,528.99
Unpaid balance	$53,834.92

During this time, $6,000 has been paid on general expenses and interest, making a total, exclusive of pastor's salary, Sunday School and missionary societies, $48,528.99.

The Woman's Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention is expected to pay $25,000 of the indebtedness. Another five years, at the rate we have been paying, will liquidate all debt on the present plant.

Competent judges have appraised our lot at $21,000, which would make our plant worth $100,563.91.

Two new members were received into the Church last Sunday.

Our special pre-Easter services are being well attended. The music by Mr. and Mrs. Sam Davis is a special feature and is being much enjoyed. W. T. WALTERS.

A constitutional amendment, providing that newly elected Presidents and congresses shall take office in January following their election has been approved by the Senate. In addition to advancing Inauguration Day from March 4th to the third Monday in January, new congresses would meet regularly in January instead of in the December following.

ON THE THRESHOLD.

Before another issue of THE SUN is printed, the Southern Christian Convention will be in session.

The surroundings will be all that could be desired for inspiration. The great Christian Temple, the finest Church plant in our denomination, will spur to noble ideals and inspire to high endeavor.

The program of the Convention inclines strongly to the open parliament idea. There are few addresses and plenty of room for open discussion. No one can go away, it seems to us, and feel that he did not have opportunity to express his ideas on any point. This is a real achievement in program building. Again, those who are scheduled for addresses are great thinkers and will bring the Convention messages of uplift and inspiration.

The problems that confront this session of the Convention demand just such a situation as we have outlined above. For the great problems that we must solve, there is needed the inspiration of great achievement. There is needed also the further inspiration of great leadership in the spoken message. Then there is neded the crystallizing influence of free, frank, incisive interchange of opinion in open discussion.

Under these three highly favorable conditions, we shall foregather to give consideration to the great issues that cry to us for solution. Let us face them squarely, resolutely, prayerfully, hopefully. What we do for missions, for publications, for Christian education, for superannuation, for the orphanage, for the other enterprises of our Church will be far-telling in its consequences for the future of our cause.

The hour is propitious for a giant forward movement. We are on the threshold of great achievement. A wide door is spread out before us. Let us not hesitate to enter in. Let us do all things on bended knee, confident in every decision that our Lord approves our plans.

THE CHURCH AND ITS COMMUNITY.

It is useless to indulge in wild statements relative to the importance of the Church. We all know it outranks every institution in our social order. In power, in influence, in constructive achievement, no organization can be mentioned in the same breath with it, potentially speaking. And yet we know that after 1900 years, this great institution is weak in actual accomplishment, and in many instances has failed altogether.

Out of this situation, two attitudes arise. The first is to decide that the Church is destined to engage in a losing fight with the world, and only an elect remnant is intended to embrace its message, the rest being lost. The other view is that the Church is founded on the rock of faith in Jesus Christ, and that the gates of hell shall yield ultimately before its mighty and victorious onslaught. This second view is the attitude of the militant Christian Church. It is our attitude. We are confident that the "good news" shall triumph and that every knee shall bow and every tongue confess.

This attitude imposes on those who adhere to it a solemn and inescapable duty to find why the Church is weak in its achievements and to institute methods of remedying the situation. Locally and particularly speaking, this requires that each Church should know its community, its needs, its hopes, its strength. This can be accomplished by a careful survey.

The Interchurch World Movement made a survey of the nation and learned certain broad facts. The Athearn Commission made a survey of Indiana. These surveys were masterpieces of investigative ability. They have indicated certain broad tendencies for the nation. They may or may not be accurate for the particular locality. As a matter of fact, they are not. The local Church must know its local situation. Its particular community must be surveyed.

The items of this survey will be in some measure individual and special. It will in all cases include the facts as to schools, homes, recreation and amusement, working conditions, roads or streets, law enforcement, etc. Only when we are possessed of these facts vital to a community's life can we hope to gird ourselves for the task of redeeming the community and its people for Christ and the Church.

When these facts are in hand, then the Church may hopefully begin the project of cleansing the community's social and moral life. There are in every community breeding-places of moral miasma. These places must be removed. It is the duty of the Church to rebuke and reprove.

After such cleansing there comes the duty of a wholesome program of positive and constructive service to the moral, social, and spiritual life of the community. It is not enough to clean up life. People are active. They must do something. They cannot live in idleness and do nothingness. Oftentimes we chase out one devil and set our spiritual house in order, and then sit up and sit. Meanwhile, the ousted demon looks out, finds the house empty, and returns with seven other evils worse than himself. The depression that so lamentably follows the season of special spiritual awakening in a Church is thus accounted for. The sure way to avoid such a situation is to provide positive opportunities of Christian service for the community. Just what these opportunities should most profitably be, only the survey can make clear.

And then the Church is the teacher, preacher, inspirer of ideals—ideals as to home, as to school, as to social and moral life, as to politics, as to law enforcement, as to the constituent elements of manhood and womanhood, as to the spiritual life. The Church has for the most part discharged her obligation along this line. Let her continue. Let her advance in the same general direction. Life is poor without ideals. The Church is the ideal-teaching institution.

Now, this editorial is not meant to be an essay or a theory or a platitude. Its purpose is to inspire some dozen or more of our great Churches to survey their communities and adjust their programs to meet conditions locally. Then we want the results published in THE SUN as an inspiration to the rest of us. Who will be first?

KEEPING IN TOUCH WITH GOD.

The most important thing for any person is suggested by the heading of this article—keeping in touch with God. That means careful and prayerful attention to this business, for you cannot do it without close attention to this one thought. The Bible is aglow with that thought throughout. In its realization is the gaining of the end in view. Not only in Bible times, but in these later days of the Christian era, history abounds in instances of this sort of devotion to God. Paul seemed to have a thought of this kind in mind when he said that he had a great desire to know Him. Unless we have a desire to do so, we cannot enter into experiences of this kind; and if we do not, then we must know that we cannot be in close touch with Him whose we are and whom we serve.

"When the way is dim, and I cannot see
Thro' the mist of His wise design,
How my glad heart yearns and my faith returns—
By the touch of His hand on mine.
Oh, the touch of His hand on mine!
Oh, the touch of His hand on mine!
There is grace and power, in the trying hour—
In the touch of His hand on mine."

Let that touch of his hand on mine represent the thought of the touch of His great and loving heart on my heart, and then we shall get the better meaning of the thought. Oh! brother, let Him give your heart and life the touch of His power on your life, and we shall see what it will do for us.

Mr. David Page has a good word in a recent issue of Forward on this line of thought, as when he says:

"A customer rushes into a big store. His time is limited. While he is waiting for a clerk, he glances up at the wall and sees a clock. 'Is that the correct time?' is the thought that immediately flashes through his mind. Then he notices some reading below the face of the clock—'Corrected Hourly by Naval Observatory.' 'Yes, that is the correct time,' he says to himself, and he begins to breathe easier.

"The clock that is corrected hourly is the clock that men have faith in. Also, the man who has a fixed habit of daily communion with God runs in harmony with God's plans, and so is dependable. To change the figure, the man who keeps in constant communication with headquarters knows the policy of the corporation. He can be trusted to give authentic information.

"The man who keeps in touch with the Infinite not only enjoys the confidence which others put in him, but he also delights in the pleasures that accrue directly from the close contact with the source of power. The ancient poet had the same experience, and he expresses it in the words:

" 'In thy presence is fullness of joy;
In thy right hand there are pleasures forevermore.'

"It is remarkable how a man is able to adjust himself to the varied changes of his existence, because he continues in close connection with his Maker. Prayer enables him to have 'a constant' midst life's shifting scenes. It gives a clue to the mystery that surrounds him, and shows him the silver thread that runs through the tangled skein.

"A man can pray in joy and in sorrow, in defeat and in success, in discouragement and in optimism. He needs to pray when he is on the up end of the balance, just as much as he does when he is on the down end. If he is full of joy, he should pray that his joy be made full of the richness of heavenly bliss. If he is successful, he ought to pray to make sure that his success is eternal and lating, and not temporal and perishable. If he is optimistic, he should pray that his optimism is grounded upon the great principles of Christ which make for a bright outlook on life—forgiveness of sins and the hope of glory.

"There is nothing like being in touch with the Infinite to give poise and balance to life. Like poplar trees in the breeze, our human natures tend to sway this way and that with every wind of fashion that blows. We fear public opinion, and we sometimes nearly break our necks to be in style—in thought, word and deed. Prayer keeps us sensitive to the norm by which we may regulate our lives. It helps us to know what is proper for those who would obey God and keep His commandments.

" 'I will bless Jehovah at all times,' sang the psalmist out of an experience that had taught him the blessedness of intimate fellowship with God. At all times he had sought Jehovah, and He had answered him, and delivered him from his fears.

"We have been advised to pray without ceasing, to be importunate, to ask largely. God never tires of our entreaties. Sir Walter Raleigh once approached Queen Elizabeth with a request. On this occasion the queen asked, 'Raleigh, when shall you stop asking for things?' 'When Your Majesty stops giving,' was the reply. As long as God is willing to give, we should not tire in our prayer.

"Talk about praying at all times and unceasingly may mean little, however, unless the connections with the Infinite are made habitual. Cultivate the morning watch. It was Jesus' custom to rise before the day began and go out to a solitary place and pray. The Master has set the example, and shall not the servants do well to follow in His footsteps? The days of youth are the habit-forming days, and no habit will bring in such large returns as the prayer habit.

"An English writer urges his youthful readers to cultivate the habit of prayer: 'You are heaven-born! You must touch heaven, and the contact will make you invincible, more than conqueror through Him who loves you—but never forget that He has said, "Apart from me ye can do nothing." Defeat and dishonor are sure unless the touch with God is constantly renewed.' "

TENDENCIES IN THE MINISTRY TODAY.

There are certain marked tendencies in the ministry of our time that are worthy of most careful consideration. They promise an era of progress for the Church.

The tendency to secure a more ample preparation is properly listed first among these tendencies. There are many pastorless Churches particularly in the rural districts, and there are not enough candidates in sight to supply the need. We admit these facts and deplore them. However, there are more young men in colleges and seminaries preparing for the ministry now than ever before. The most hopeful sign in connection with this situation is the fact that the Churches have not even proposed to let down the standards required for ordination. Rather, the tendency has been to raise them. Particularly is this true in our own denomination. We are glad that we have more men in seminaries today than at any other one time. Perhaps this is due to the wise assistance offered such young men by our General Board of Christian Education. The fact itself, without reference to its cause, is certainly heartening to us and prophetic of growth for our cause.

Another wholesome tendency is the making of the support of the ministry systematic and not haphazard. Poundings are going out of style. They are unnecessary where the minister is paid the salary he earns. Churches that will not do their duty along this line will ere long find themselves pastorless. This accounts for the condition of so many country Churches today. They want to pay a few hundred dollars a year for a pastor and then dole out hams and canned goods and vegetables in season, as if to a respectable beggar. In all kindness, this is not treating the servant of God, nor God Himself, with proper respect. The laborer is worthy of his hire. They who preach the unsearchable riches are entitled to live by their labors. It is not brotherly to regard them as objects of charity or to put them under personal obligation by reason of the generous impulses of individual benefactors. This is a delicate matter, but without organization to effect its discontinuance, the tendency is strong in that direction, for which we can happily rejoice.

Another hopeful tendency is the recognition of the minister's responsibility for teaching religion, as well as for preaching. The Bible cannot be taught in our public schools at the expense of the public treasury. This means that the Sunday School has been the sole teacher of religion for Protestant children, and it has had but thirty minutes a week of actual teaching, and has not reached half the Protestant children. The result has been what the experts have styled "spiritual illiteracy." The woeful lack of ethical sense on the part of American children is directly traceable to the failure to instruct and motivate them in the Christian way of life.

The ministry has become awakened keenly on this subject, and all over the country, during school time week-day schools of religion, and in the summer daily vacation Bible schools, are springing up under the direction of the local pastors, and in most cases with these leaders as teachers. Some of the schools of religion meet in the Churches, while others are of the community type and interdenominational. In any event, the inspiring prophets of this modern crusade of religious instruction are the ministers of the Churches. They have seen a great light, and they are following in its pathway toward the beacon of their hopes. A new era evidently faces us in religious effort, and our preachers are the alert pioneers who have ushered it in.

A special group of preachers need particular commendation along the same line, though on a larger scale. I refer to the preachers at Churches contiguous to State universities. They are seeking and, in many instances, securing the opportunity to teach classes in religion to university students, the university crediting the courses, though not paying anything for the service. At Elon, our college pastor teaches in the department of Christian education, thus combining teaching and preaching even as Jesus did. There is no conflict between teaching and preaching, say these brethren. The most effective work of the preacher, they agree, is his teaching work.

These three tendencies, pronounced and all but universal as they are, certainly stouten the hearts of those who take seriously the evidences of progress in the kingdom's work. They overtower any quarrel between the fundamentalists and modernists. We face a radiant and hopeful future. Let us take courage and thank God, praying Him for larger growth and prosperity. These tendencies in the ministry today warrant a genuine optimism.

ELON SENIORS TO WORK IN MANY FIELDS.

By Sion M. Lynam.

A personal canvass of the senior class here, reveals some interesting information. Forty seniors —twenty men and the same number of women— have personally expressed their intended choices of life-work. The choices vary widely, including eighteen different fields.

The teaching profession leads, with eleven, seven women and four men, who are planning to give their lives to teaching. The Christian ministry runs second, with seven—all men, who will fill pulpits. This is the largest number of ministers ever graduated at a single time by Elon College. Six of these men will work in the Christian Church, to which the college belongs, and one is a pastor in the M. E. Church, South. Missions and business tie for the third place, having three each. The future missionaries are all women, while those going into just business are all men. Two women, one married and the other to be married, expressed themselves as planning to make homes. There are two physicians in the class, one man and one woman.

The remaining twelve fields are represented by one each. The educational field seems to predominate here since there is one who plans to devote herself to public school music, and another to the teaching of art in connection with its commercial value. One man is going into the educational field other than teaching, and one woman is to be a religious education director.

Science seems to be equally popular. There is to be one electrical engineer, a civil engineer, and a soil expert. A fourth is going into some form of scientific work. All the aspirants to the scientific field are men. One young woman plans to enter the nursing profession. She believes that it holds opportunities for a college woman larger than the profession of the physician, and appeals to her more.

One woman is planning to be a public accountant; another is to devote herself to the work of an accompanist for a voice teacher. One of the women of the class plans, after a brief teaching career, to study law and devote her energies to the juvenile court work.

All the women members of the senior class express themselves favorably toward marriage except one, who is to be an avowed old maid. The men say little along this line, but indicate that they stand ready to marry if they should find the right girl. There is, however, no very widespread enthusiasm in the class regarding matrimony.

These facts were given readily, and in only two or three incidents was there the least hesitation in answering the question as to the profession in life. This fact shows that most of the young people have given considerable thought to the matter.

THE BUDGET SYSTEM.

We have been asked to express our opinion as to whether we think the budget system, as suggested by Dr. W. A. Harper, is the thing we need. I believe we need system in our Church work. I also believe we need a simple system instead of a mystified one, in order that it might be in harmony with the government of the Christian Church, that we claim to love so dearly. I do not think it is practical, for there is so much machinery in this suggested system. We know that the friction in a machine depends upon the number of wheels in the machine, and the more friction, the more expense to run it. I have wondered what our dear fathers, who worked out the Bible form of government for the Christian Church, which is democratic, would think of this system.

We came out from an autocratic form of Church government, and I am for one not willing to go back to it. According to this suggested system, the Church's liberties will be largely handicapped. I think it would hinder the liberality of the Church to a great extent. For instance, if some one or more Churches wanted to make some special offering for foreign or home missions, or any other object of charity, as I see it, they would have no right to do it, for this autocratic rule would forbid it. This system requires too much organization, and the expense of it will help to defeat it. I haven't heard a single layman speak in favor of it. I find no clause in our Church government that would justify this system.

European Outlook.

Those in position to know, say that the nations of Europe are so many armed camps waiting for another Sarajevo. Whether this be true or not, the European outlook is not encouraging. There is much to be done before the world can hope for permanent peace. The last war was fought to obtain peace. It seems now that it failed. Peace will never come by way of war, but by way of the Christ. We must begin now to guard against another war which seems so imminent.

CONTRIBUTIONS

IN DEFENSE OF PROHIBITION.

By F. M. Dunaphant.

Nation-wide prohibition did not come hastily or surreptiously, nor did it come to legislate people into the kingdom of heaven. Its advent in the progress of our nation was as inevitable as was the law against murder in the early progress of the human race. As we look back and wonder why so many of our forebears waged bitter fights against the making and enforcing of laws that almost all of us now consider essential to progress, so will posterity look back and wonder why so many of us waged bitter fights against the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead act. In other words, the prohibition law, as it now exists in the United States, is a good law that came chronologically in the regular order of laws, regulations, and reforms.

To say that it will stop the making and selling of liquor, as a beverage, in all parts of the United States, would be as absurd as to say that the law against fornication and adultery will stop illicit relations between men and women in all parts of the United States. The great number of anti-prohibitionists who sarcastically belittle what prohibition has done, should bear in mind that the prohibitionists did not say, or even hnt, that prohibition would instantaneously bring the millennium. The devil has not been chained and cast into the bottomless pit; for no doubt there is not a civil law in the statute books of the United States that is not broken daily. Yet it is needless to say that our nation could not exist without these laws.

Since we cannot force a man to become a Christian (if everybody were Christians, indeed we would need no laws), we are compelled to have laws whereby we can punish and jeopardize him when he does wrong. Herein is the safety of civilization. The only reason that a woman can travel alone in almost absolute safety in any part of the United States is because of our laws. If we were to abolish our laws, thousands of men, yes millions of them, would immediately become many times more dangerous than uncaged lions. Man's natural love for life, liberty, and freedom creates respect for law, and respect for law creates a desire and willingness to obey law. For selfish reasons, if for no other, scarcely nobody objects to the law-breakers being punished; nor does scarcely anybody put up a plea that the law-breaker should not be punished, on the ground that he is ignorant of the law he has broken. When your purse, containing the money with which you intend to buy bread for your wife and children, is snatched from your pocket by an ignorant, illiterate man from the slums, you want the man caught and imprisoned, not because you do not feel sorry for him, but because you know it is best for him and all would-be thieves that he be punished. In short, no sane, well-trained man or woman will contend that our laws against theft should be repealed on the ground that there are thousands of men and women in our country who have been reared in such a way as to be ignorant, in a great measure, of the crimes they commit when they take things that do not belong to them. Nobody has ever heard a sane, well-trained man or woman say that our marriage laws should be repealed on the ground that there are thousands of men and women in our country who have been reared in such a way as to believe that free love should be tolerated.

To express the thought in one sentence—nobody has ever heard a sane, well-trained man or woman say that a law should be repealed on the ground that there are people under its jurisdiction who have not been trained and educated to respect and obey it.

Yet, all of us are today hearing sane, well-trained anti-prohibitionists say that the national prohibition law should be repealed on this very ground!

They are saying that prohibition has unjustly put thousands of mountaineers and many others out of employment; that it has done far more harm than good because it has put a ban on one of man's appetites, a dangerous thing to do in any instance, they say; that the prohibitionists should be held accountable for all the deaths caused by impure liquor, the stuff that the people now have to drink; and that thousands of good citizens have lost, in a measure, their respect for the national government because it has stooped so low as to say thatt he people under its jurisdiction shall no longer lawfully slake their bibulous appetites with intoxicants. And a big percentage of these sane, well-trained anti-prohibitionists have the audacity to tell you that they are Christians, and that they, therefore, believe the Bible is the infallible Word of an all-wise and all-powerful God! Think of this! When we hear sane, sensible, well-educated men and women make such declarations, we feel like exclaiming, with emotion, the following lines from Shakespeare:

"O judgment, thou art fled to brutish beast,
And men have lost their reason."

Surely, Mr. Christian Anti-Prohibitionist, your judgment has fled to brutish beast, and you have lost your reason, for you certainly do not employ either judgment or reason in your scathing attacks upon prohibition. You make two principal statements that are glaringly contradictory when you say that you believe the Bible and that no good can be accomplished by putting a ban on man's appetites. Do we not find in the Bible the following:

"Thou shalt not commit adultery?"

"Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife?"

and many other "thou shalt nots" that pertain to man's appetites?

What are you going to do with these "thou shalt nots?" Tell the prohibitionists why the all-wise and all-powerful God, the Creator of man, saw fit to put a ban on one of man's appetites at Mt. Sinai. Why did not God emerge from the mist and smoke that enshrouded Mt. Sinai and tell the Israelites that He would give to their leader, Moses, ten great laws by which they should be governed, were it not for the fact that many of them were ignorant and illiterate, and that He knew better than to put a ban on any of their appetites?

It seems that there can be but one answer to this question, namely: God saw that the Israelites were becoming weak both physically and spiritually because He had not put a ban on one of their appetites. Therefore, He did this at Mt. Sinai in plain, forciful language that no one has ever been able to misconstrue. And He did not mean to give the impression that some of the Israelites would still be allowed to commit adultery, on the ground that they were ignorant and illiterate, any more than did the United States government, a few years ago, when it made the prohibition law, mean to give the impression that the mountaineers and many others would still be allowed to make, drink, and sell intoxicating liquors, on the ground that they are ignorant and illiterate.

Down through the ages, God's "thou shalt nots" have rung with an ominous potency, and those who have harkened to them, and obeyed them, have made the world a better place in which to live; but those who have not harkened to them and obeyed them have clogged the wheels of progress, brought deprivation, degradation, and untold suffering to mankind, and won for themselves eternal punishment.

Which side are you on? Are you one of the so-called Christian anti-prohibitionists? If you are, you have deluded yourself. You are not a Christian, for no Christian will uphold that which wrecks the body, wrecks the home, damns the soul, and takes bread out of the mouths of innocent women and children.

Atlanta, Ga.

Y. M. C. A. CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION.

By John R. Mott.

The constitutional convention held in Cleveland, October 17-23, 1923, was one of the great creative moments in the life of the Young Men's Christian Association. This representative gathering of 400 leaders of the brotherhood launched a distinctly American national association movement. At the same time, it insured the strengthening of the historic ties which for three-quarters of a century have bound together the associations of the United States and Canada because the existence, side by side of two independent national bodies, still organically united, makes possible a relationship more logical and more consistent with national dignity and expression and a co-operation mutually more helpful.

By establishing a national council of some 400 men, elected directly by the association in relatively small electoral districts and holding an unhurried meeting each year for the purpose of estimating needs, determining policies, authorizing services to be rendered, and providing financial support, we have at last a plan which will enable the associations to make unmistakably clear their wishes to their agents, the general agencies, and thus making sure that these general agencies are quickly responsive to the expressed will of the brotherhood. The pathway is pointed to the solution of the old and baffling problem of the adequate maintenance of the general agencies, in that by the new arrangement the associations will assume responsibility for the moral and financial support of their general agencies.

The executive functions of the national body are widely and wisely distributed among several national and international service committees, thus ensuring larger initiative and more prompt clearance in a vast and ever-expanding movement; at the same time provision is made for the close co-ordination and vital union of these varied and growing services to the associations at home and abroad.

In new and effective ways, the State committees are integrated with the national; in fact, an arrangement is entered into by which the two general agencies—the State and the national—are so integrated that it is hoped the result or outcome "in working, in spirit, in economy, and in fruitfulness will be tantamount to one agency."

Provision is made for a judicial body to render interpretations of the constitution and to settle promptly disputes or disagreements arising between associations, or agencies, or their representatives. The association colleges and other training agencies are brought under the more immediate control of the brotherhood.

More important than these and other constructive achievements of the constitutional convention was the wonderful, triumphant unity realized and the resultant larger freedom (freedom from distrust, conflicting purposes and uncertainty) of which all are now conscious. In every truth a new atmosphere was generated at Cleveland—an atmosphere in which men came to loath to differ, to determine, to understand, and then to forget themselves by becoming lost in their great unselfish cause. Abundant proof of this is seen in the fact that groups of strong men who had differed so radically, so strongly, so conscientiously, found it possible to adopt unanimously the new constitution. This larger synthesis was the work of the omnipotent, creative spirit of God, for where the Spirit of the Lord is and where men yield to His sway, there is unity, liberty, vitality, productivity.

The convention made no change in the basis of membership of the associations. The entire work of the gathering has served to strengthen the relation of the association movement to the Churches and their program. The following preamble of the new constitution adopted rings true on this point:

"We, the Young Men's Christian Associations of the United States and Canada, through our representatives in constitutional convention assembled, reverently and joyfully confessing our faith in Jesus Christ our Lord and only Saviour, and our unswerving allegiance to His Church, recognizing humbly the creative hand of God along the pathway of three-quarters of a century of corporate experience, and dedicating ourselves afresh to our great mission of bringing under the sway of His kingdom the young manhood and boyhood of North America and of the other lands served by our associations, and with the desire of conserving all the values of our past and likewise of unifying and strengthening our work so as to enable the North American Associations to meet the requirements of the modern age and of the coming day, hereby adopt the following constitution of the National Council of the Young Men's Christian Associations of the United States of America."

PURITY IN LITERATURE.

By Wm. Thornton Whitsett.

Nature abhors impurity. She is ever on the alert to dispose of the unclean and the damaged and diseased. It is her constant effort to remove rubbish and waste. With her powerful oxygen fires, she seeks to purify all that is not sound and entire. Streams may become polluted, and the waters filled with many poisons; but movement, aid air, and sunshine, and oxygen, and all of nature's purifying processes are soon brought into play, and the water becomes again wholesome.

Something of an analogy seems to run through the world of letters. Here the vile and the obscene and the impure may seem to secure its hearing for a day, but as time passes it drops from sight and is forgotten. When we consider the immense volume of English and American literature for the past century or two we are soon impressed with the idea that it is difficult for that which is lacking in purity to survive. The stream of literature, like the dancing, bubbling streams of the mountain-side, when polluted, seeks to purify itself, and forgetfulness and neglect soon kill the evil germs of the impure publication. The high moral tone and elevated purity of the literature of the race is a remarkable tribute to the sanity and chastity of human thought. Exceptions here and there attract a moment's attention, soon pass from sight and are lost, while the sound, the wholesome, the normal, the pure grow in influence and gather power as the years pass. Take the entire literary output of the English-speaking people for the past three centuries and examine it closely for the abnormal and the impure. The few outstanding books that are lewd and immoral and at variance with the accepted standards of civilization may be almost counted upon one hand. The impure has died of its own impurity.

Run down in your mind for a century or two over the list of poets, historians, novelists and other leaders of thought and culture, and name those who stand out for immorality, for a lack of patriotism, who would discard the accepted standards of orderly life, and it will be found that the list of such will reduce itself to almost an absurdity. The insignificant evil attracts attention vastly beyond its due, and why? Simply because it is out of the ordinary, it is the unusual; while the great onsweeping current bears along a mighty volume of enduring work that conforms in general terms to the best standards of taste, of conduct, of life.

There are many instances in literary history of writers who have sought the bizarre, the unreal, that which opposed the usual standards of God and man, who sought to set aside chastity, morality, devotion to principle and to one's country, like Cain of old, to raise their hands against every man's hand; what is the ultimate fate of such writers? In every age we find them. Our country has been prolific during this generation in such. Their names occur to any one who is well informed as to the doings of the literary world of our time. Their hands and pens have scoffed and scorned Church and State and the decencies of civilization. Their pages have reeked with the sewer-like output of their foul and fetid minds. Woman and home have found no defenders among their number. Innuendo and suggestion and leers have sprinkled their pages. Have they made lasting literary reputations? No. Have they found a permanent place in letters? No. Have they succeeded in building up the magazines and publications which have printed their effusions? No. On the contrary, some of such publications have been forced by declining circulations and loss of prestige to change their policies and cast overboard such writers as Jonahs that threatened to wreck the vessel itself.

Let us take heart. The fungus growth is easily swept aside. That which endures has hardy fiber and has been tested by the winds of many generations. Virtue is eternally new-fashioned, as well as enduringly old-fashioned. The standards of taste and conduct, the bulwarks of purity and chastity, are not easily cast aside; writers cannot, and must not, ignore them. The principles of justice and righteousness are rock-ribbed and age-old. They cannot be blown aside with a breath. Beating the tom-toms will never overthrow the castle walls. The purity of the literary output of the ages, as a whole, is one of the marked tributes to the survival of the highest and the best. Style, thought, and expression, all alike, clamor for purity when permanence is being considered among the multitudes of the books of mankind.

DAILY VACATION BIBLE SCHOOLS.

The Board of Religious Education, Dr. W. T. Walters, president; Miss Pattie Coghill, secretary, is very anxious for several of the Sunday Schools of the Southern Convention to promote daily vacation Bible schools this summer. It seems that interest in the D. V. B. S. has been discovered at several Churches, but that the school is not planned for because of a sense of inability to carry it through.

This is a mistake. It may be true—very likely it is true—that you cannot put on or carry out the full program of the D. V. B. S.; but we feel we should not hesitate in putting on as much of the program as we can simply because we cannot put on the whole program.

Our experience with the D. V. B. S. is as follows:

In the spring of 1922, Dr. W. M. Jay, then pastor at Holy Neck Church, and I, met and discussed the desirability and feasibility of conducting D. V. B. S. at Holland in the interests of the Holy Neck and Holland Sunday Schools. We immediately concluded the program generally adopted for a D. V. B. S. in the large towns and cities was too extensive for us, both in features and time. But we also concluded the school would be beneficial and popular. So we eleminated features too technical and too exacting as respects equipment for us, and we reduced the time of the session to meet our needs. Miss Eldredge, then field secretary for the Board, was corresponded with and her co-operation enlisted.

The school opened with thirty-odd scholars, Dr. Jay as principal, and a faculty recruited from the teaching forces of the two schools. The daily schedule provided for worship and training in worship, the memorizing of hymns and Scriptures, quiet music (an appreciation), habit talks, Bible study, missionary stories, drills and recreations. The daily sessions began at 9 A. M. and closed at 11:30. At the last day's session, pupils and teachers voted to have it another year.

The second year, or last summer, the writer acted as principal, and a thoroughly trained corps of teachers was secured. The school was improved by closer grading, textbooks were introduced, and the study periods lengthened. The session was increased to ten days, but that was found to be an unwise move, and this year we will hold another six-day session.

Our schools were not ideal. Many criticisms could be offered, and mistakes discovered; but the first year's school was a good one, the second year a better, and we hope to further improve on it this year.

Now, a word relative to the two Churches. Holy Neck is a strictly country Church. Holland is a village of perhaps 300 whites. The two congregations dove-tail. The attendance was never large, but it was representative. The two Sunday Schools averaged for last year 221 per Sunday. The D. V. B. S. in 1922 averaged 45; in 1923, 52. The first year, Dr. Jay and I hoped for an attendance of 25.

Do not hesitate because of numbers. It is worth while to teach a handful every day for six days. Remember that in time it is equal to about thirty Sundays.

Mrs. F. E. Bullock, C. P. A. Building, Dayton, Ohio, or Miss Pattie Coghill, Elon, N. C., will be happy to give you any information you may wish, and it is also our hope for both of these field workers to spend several weeks in the field in D. V. B. S. work. Be one of the Churches to secure them. It is a fine opportunity to serve the girls and boys.

J. H. Lightbourne,
Director Christian Education, S. C. C.

The Southern Christian Convention will review the doings of the Church for the past two years. During this time, several new, handsome country and city Churches have been erected; others in process of erection; Elon College rebuilt, and new Bethlehem College founded. The mission work of the Church has been advanced. No more interesting session has come together than this one will be.

MISSIONS

Rev. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

DIVINE SUPPORT.

Such letters as the following from our captains of Men and Millions give courage and hope and increase one's faith:

"Dear Bro. Atkinson,—I want to thank my Lord that He has always supported me in any undertakings that I have tried to do to advance His kingdom. I notice in The Christian Sun our Church was one among the 100 per cent paid up last year. And I do sincerely hope we can attain that same record this year. Would you draw me a list of those who owe yet, and the amount each owes? Let me have this list before April 20th, as that is our monthly preaching day."

If all our captains would manifest the interest of this dear friend and brother, a thrill of joy would go through the whole Church in behalf of Men and Millions.

J. O. Atkinson,
Mission Secretary.

GIVING TO DRINK IN THE NAME OF A DISCIPLE.

At the Surry-Sussex Virginia Woman's Missionary Rally, held with New Lebanon Christian Church last week, an inspiring event occurred of more than passing interest. When a brief talk had been made about our work in Carroll County, Va., the statement had been given out that a well had been dug at a cost of $70.00. Rev. J. L. Foster, the enthusiastic pastor of Waverly Christian Church, arose and declared to the body that we now had a chance to give a cup of cold water in the name of disciples. Bro. Foster then took cash and subscriptions from those present, and in a few moments had secured enough to pay the contractor for digging the well, with $2.50 additional for rope and bucket. It was not the amount given, but the spirit of the occasion that meant so much. The people gave with a ready hand and a willing heart, and showed their interest in our good efforts in the mountains. It was a work of love.

J. O. Atkinson,
Mission Secretary.

SCHOOL OF MISSIONS.

The Nansemond and Gates Counties one-day school of missions of the Christian Church was held on April 10, 1924, at Holy Neck Church, in Nansemond County.

The meeting was called to order by the acting superintendent, Mrs. Russell Bradford, at 10:45 A. M. Hymns: "Come, Thou Almighty King" and "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go" were sung, and the devotional service was conducted by Mrs. H. S. Hardcastle. The twenty-third psalm and the Lord's Prayer were repeated in concert.

Prayer for our men and women in the various mission fields, by Rev. H. S. Hardcastle; for those who plan our work and direct our forces, by Mrs. C. C. Rawles; for our Convention and Conference officials, by Mrs. D. B. Jones; for this meeting, that it may be divinely guided, by Mrs. E. T. Holland. Season of prayer closed by Mrs. Hardcastle.

Mrs. Russell Bradford then brought her annual message, which was an inspiration to all and contained much food for thought.

The Churches in the group were represented as follows: Berea, Holland, Holy Neck, Suffolk, Bethlehem, Cypress Chapel, Liberty Spring, Oakland, Damascus, Eure, Hobson, Oak Grove, Sarem, Mt. Zion.

Dr. Atkinson and Mrs. W. V. Leathers represented the Eastern Virginia Conference. Rev. H. S. Hardcastle and nine laymen were welcomed as visitors.

Mrs. W. V. Leathers read the goals for the year, and made an earnest plea that we strive to reach them.

Solo by Mrs. Vernon Holland, accompanied by Mrs. Estes. Minutes of 1923 meeting read and approved. Address by Dr. J. O. Atkinson, mission secretary. This was, as usual, a stirring address and brought up-to-date news of the needs and accomplishments of the mission work of our denomination.

Mrs. W. H. Denison, president of the General Woman's Mission Board, and Miss Pattie Coghill, field secretary of the Southern Christian Convention, and Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, the new pastor of the Suffolk Christian Church, were introduced to the body by Dr. Atkinson, and each of these responded with a brief message.

Mrs. Leathers announced that Miss Coghill would give her services during the week of April 22nd for work in this district, and those desiring her services should see her during the noon hour and arrange a date.

The superintendent appointed the following committees: Resolutions, Mrs. B. D. Crocker, Mrs. Job G. Holland, and Mrs. Herbert Harrell; plan and place, Mrs. Ben Council and Miss Ruby Saunders; nominations, Misses Annie Staley and Mary Brinkley.

Mrs. Denison announced that she was taking subscriptions to the Christian Missionary and Everyland. An offering to defray the expenses of the rally, such as they were, and the balance to go to the mountain work, was taken, which amounted to $15.76. Dr. Atkinson offered a prayer of thanks for this offering. Adjourned for lunch. Dismissed by Mr. Hardcastle.

As is the custom, each person carried a box lunch, and the ladies of the Holy Neck Church served hot coffee. The social intercourse during the noon hour was much enjoyed by all.

Afternoon Session.

Hymn, "Let a Little Sunshine In." Devotionals conducted by Mrs. Hardcastle. Lesson taken from the sixty-first chapter of Isaiah, followed by a few moments of silent prayer. Address, Mrs. W. H. Denison, "The Growth of the Kingdom." Duet, Mrs. Jolly and Mrs. Hazelett, accompanied by Mrs. Estes. Address, Miss Pattie Coghill, "Teaching the Boys and Girls About Missions." A message from our mountain work was brought by Dr. Atkinson, which showed that some progress had been made, and the future was bright for this field.

A review of the new mission-study books and pamphlets, leaflets, etc., was given by Mrs. Denison, in lieu of the round-table discussion, as the hour was too late for this.

Report of committees—Plan and place: Oakland Christian Church, near Chuckatuck, extends an invitation to this body to meet with them in 1925, on such date as may be decided upon later. Resolutions: "We, your committee on resolutions, beg leave to present the following: Resolved, first, that we express by a rising vote our thanks to the members and friends of Holy Neck Christian Church for their sincere hospitality to this body; second, that we express our appreciation for the inspiration brought us by our various field workers and those who added to the program in any way to make it more enjoyable, especially for the lovely music rendered; third, that we express our grateful thanks to our officers, especially to our superintendent, who by her untiring efforts has made this the most interesting rally we have so far held." Nominations: "We, the nominating committee, do hereby submit the following: superintendent, Mrs. H. S. Hardcastle; assistant superintendent, Mrs. W. V. Leathers; secretary, Miss Mary Andrews."

These reports were adopted as read, and a rising vote of thanks extended to the members and friends of Holy Neck. It was moved and carried that the officers above named be, and they hereby are, constituted the executive board of this body, with power to act on matters of importance that may come up when same is not in session. Hymn, "Oh, Happy Day," was sung, and the 1924 one-day school of missions was brought to a close, with a prayer by Mrs. Denison.

Mrs. Russell Bradford,
Acting Superintendent.
Miss Mary Andrews,
Secretary.

A MODIFIED BUDGET SYSTEM.

I have thoroughly analyzed the so-called complex budget plan proposed by Dr. W. A. Harper, and indorsed by many others—the plan which Dr. W. P. Lawrence calls "A very beautiful, elaborate budget system" for raising the finances for the Christian Church. I find that it is an attempt to combine the best elements of the two plans now in use in the North and South; it aims at some worthy goal; seeks unity; has educational value; is psycholological and systematic; and it would have my unqualified support if it did not appear to assert a measure of authority over the autonomy of the local Church and carry with it a stupendous amount of overhead expense, which would not be likely to bring proportionate results without many years of educational work. As a stimulus to our best endeavor, we should have a budget goal, but this should be suggestive and not arbitrary; it should represent the minimum and not the maximum amount to be raised. This budget should be made up by the various boards and Conferences of our denominational work, each making an estimate of what is barely necessary to maintain existing work, and what would be necessary to make a normal advance. Each board would report its estimated needs through its secretary to the general budget and publicity board of the General Convention—Dr. W. H. Denison, secretary, without additional salary, as he is already employed as stewardship secretary. This would constitute the official budget of benevolence for the Church year.

A suggestive budget for the local Church as a goal only, not to be acted upon in any way by the Church, might be made up by the General Board, departmental and Conference secretaries, in a joint meeting, and handed down to Churches. But a plan more in harmony with out Church polity, principles, and tradition, would be for the General Board to inform each Church of the amount of money needed to carry on the general work of the Church and to make a creditable gain along all lines, and to specify, with emphasis, the amount needed to carry on the work undertaken by each department. It would be the duty of this board to carry on the general educational work, divide the Church year into as many special days as there are departmental budgets, making an appeal to the local Church to take as many shares at, say $10.00 each, as their resources will allow, but not stating any definite amount for the local Church. This board would designate a certain day, say the first Sunday in September; on this day the local Church would make its every-member canvass and complete the financial budget for benevolence, combining local expense budget if the Church should prefer.

Helps prepared by the General Board and by each department should be in the hands of the secretary of the local budget board at least one month before the every-member canvass is made, such as: "How to set up an every-member canvass," "How to raise money for a Church," "Days in a Christian Church year," "The young people's share," "picture sheets with stories for little children," "A challenge to the Churches," "Newspaper write-ups," "Posters for Church bulletin-boards," "electrotypes for Church calendars," "Information cards," "Pledge cards for benevolence alone and benevolences and home expenses."

It is quite necessary that we tell the people the facts about the work of the Christian Church so truthfully and so convincingly that everybody will want to take some share. The special educational campaign, lasting one month each year, ought always to include two or more sermons on stewardship and the denominational working agencies; two or more study periods, Sunday or week day, devoted to the same themes.

Estimates from all departments of the Church as to their needs for the coming year should be based on need rather than resources. The total local goal should be fixed with the boundless need of the world in view and with generous confidence in the people of the Church. The committee should make out a detailed budget of the local needs and benevolence on as broad lines as its financial resources will warrant. The final minimum budget arrived at should be presented to the Church for its approval and adoption. The every-member canvass should be carried out in the usual manner, except if the two budgets are combined the local budget should be itemized and the needs of each department, such as home missions, foreign missions, education, Convention, etc., and a separate pledge taken for each on the same card. In this way the work of each department would receive a response from the individual upon the merit of its appeal. On canvass Sunday, the sermon should be on large, inspirational lines, full of hope and of generous warmth. The every-member canvass is an orderly, fraternal way of giving everybody a chance to share in an important Christian duty. It is not a "scheme" for promoting something, but a measure of fraternal helpfulness—a piece of carefully planned co-operation. Properly carried out, it always does secure financial results, but it can never be carried out properly unless it is undertaken in a fraternal spirit and with a spiritual purpose, for, as Rev. Stanley C. Harrell has said, "Our imperative need is to teach our people the Scriptural doctrine of stewardship, teach them the grace of giving, give them a glimpse of the urgent needs, and let them taste the joy of serving God and our needy brother-man by their gifts to missions, religious education, orphanages, etc., instead of always thinking about Conference apportionments."

The supreme aim is not to get something out of the people canvassed, but to get them into the brotherhood of service. The appeal should be: Make your giving this year a real spiritual service, deny yourself of something to give, give to a work as vital as this is, not of your residue, but of your substance—make your giving real; if this is done, giving will never became mechanical. All local budgets for benevolence should be reported to the General Board, and the total amount subscribed for the work of each department in turn to the departmental secretary by the general secretary—this to serve as their minimum working basis.

During the special period set aside by the General Board for each department, if it be home mission period, let this department furnish literature for information, education, and inspiration. On home mission Sunday, an enthusiastic effort should be put forth to secure pledges from those who have not made pledges to this work, and to collect as much as possible of what was subscribed for this department in the budget. We should state definitely that this is home mission day and the money subscribed and paid in is for that purpose, and this should be the case with all the other departments—all should stand on their own merits. Dr. O. S. Thomas has said: "From the earliest history of the mission board, the secretary or secretaries have devoted a great deal of their time and effort to creating a clientele" and this is likely just as true of all the other departments of our work. This being true, no department can afford to be placed in a general budget and draw an arbitrary share. Money collected for each department through the local budget might be sent to a general treasurer and from there to the department treasurer or direct to the department treasurer from he local Church.

At this point, Dr. Alva M. Kerr cautions us to guard certain very essential principles, namely: the use of general funds for home work; the diversion of money to a different cause from that which appealed to the generosity of the giver; and that much of the money is never used for the purpose which was in the mind of the donor when he made his contribution. Dr. Fred Eastman insists that a system that does these things is "financially weak and ethically unsound."

Under this modified system we would have one general board and one paid stewardship secretary. The secretaries of all the departments, including Conference secretaries, would report their financial needs to the general budget board, and when all the reports were in, the general board would make out the general budget and report it to the Churches, stating the need of each department, then when the proper educational work had been done and the day arrived for the making up of the budget, the local Church would make its own minimum budget, stating what share of the general budget it would assume. Then the every-member canvass would be made with the stirring appeal, that since the Christian Churches are in a partnership they should do their share to win the world to a vital faith in Christ. The adequate financial resources with which to do the denominational business is a challange to the local Church to do its best. This plan would do away with apportionments which always carry with them the appearance of authority rather than an appeal.

The local Church must be the unit from which to work. On this point, Dr. J. O. Atkinson says: "The budget must be decided upon by those who are to contribute it," and I will add: should be made by them. Dr. W. P. Lawrence also says: "It appears to me that the most effective way of mobilizing the highest possible percentage of the denomination's financial strength is not by resolutions in big representative bodies, but by method of individual appeal, through the every-member canvass." "The solution to the financial problem of the Christian Church does not lie in the budget plan, but rather in educating our membership to the proper appreciation of stewardship and in the securing of the every-member canvass plan in every Church, with the weekly offering to benevolences as well as to current expenses," says Dr. Thomas.

The general work under this system could be done by one paid secretary, thus dispensing with five salaried regional secretaries at a saving of approximately twenty thousand dollars annually. The departmental secretaries, who are well equipped through special training and experience, can do this work effectively and would gladly do so without extra salary rather than have their work interfered with by trying out some radical new plan.

Most all writers to THE SUN on the proposed budget plan have warned against getting a system that is "top-heavy" or too much "machinery." Dr. G. O. Lankford says: "Increased machinery means increased expense of operation. If increased cost brings a proportionate increase in returns, it is all right, but there is danger of creating too great an expense." The machinery for running this system would be the general budget board, with its paid stewardship secretary, the departmental and Conference secretaries, and the local Church budget boards; with the emphasis on the local Church reaching out and aspiring unto a worthy goal.

This plan will take care of the special or designated gift, as any person can give as much as he likes as often as he likes to any department he may choose. The material for the educational and publicity work will be prepared by the general board and the boards of the various departments and put into the hands of the budget secretary of the local Church who is the key-person to the local situation and whose duty it is to see that the educational work for all departments participating in the budget is carried out. Every one should share a portion of his resources of money, time and talents with others. Every boy and girl while yet in the 'teen ages should practice proportionate giving. Every one owes it to himself to become well enough informed concerning the causes and objects for which his gifts are solicited so that he may distribute them intelligently and to the best advantage. The chief factor in one's benevolence schedule should be one's Church and its world-wide work.

The practice of stewardship is the most rational and business-like method of conducting one's giving. It means that one determines to set apart a certain portion of one's income for benevolences and to regard that amount as a sacred trust, not to be used for one's self, but to be administered as wisely as possible for the good of others. Thus, with the proper education of the local Church, and the recognition of its autonomy, the preservation of departmental clientele and a worthy general budget goal, we should be able to marshal the forces of our Church to a worthy support of all our benevolences—make each one feel that his share in the work of the Church awaits him, and that he should make sure that he does not miss it.

UNITED REVIVAL MEETINGS.

A series of revivals began in the Christian Church last night, in which all the Churches are united. The Rev. E. H. Davis, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, is conducting the services this week.

Next week's services will be held in the Baptist Church, and will be conducted by the Rev. Dr. D. A. Long, of the Christian denomination.

Services during the third week will be held in the Methodist Church, and the Rev. C. L. Dowell, of the Baptist Church, will deliver the sermons. The public is invited to attend these meetings.—Franklin News.

The work of the First Church, of Norfolk, is prospering under the leadership of Rev. John G. Truitt. Recently they received into the Church twenty-six new members. On the outside of the Church bulletin ane printed these suggestive words: "Whosoever thou art, enter not this Church without the spirit of reverence; and leave it not without a prayer to God for thyself, for him who ministers, and for those who worship here."

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

May 4, 1924.

The Assyrian Exile of Israel.

Golden Text: "I will delight myself in Thy statutes: I will not forget Thy word."—Psa. 119:16.

Lesson: 2 Kings, chs. 11-17.

Devotional Reading: Psa. 119:33-40.

Any one who reads the seven chapters which form the background of today's lesson will believe more in the "human wrong" of kings than in their "divine right." For it would be difficult to find a story that contained more of godless character, mismanagement, and everything unkingly than we find in the lives and reigns of these kings. Several of them gained their office by treachery, and practically all of them were pagan in their ideas and practices of religion.

We have already seen the trend of the times as reflected in the preaching of Amos and Hosea. Politically, socially, and religiously, things were going from bad to worse. During the reign of Jahcahaz, son of Jehu, Hazael and Bennadad made an invasion against Israel, and although a deliverer arose to turn them back for the time being, it was only a matter of time until Israel should pay the penalty for its sin. After a period of intrigue and treachery, Menahem came to the throne. Assyria again invaded the west, and under Pul, better known as Tiglath-Pileser, subdued Israel and exacted tribute—1,000 talents of silver a year. (It is interesting to note that this was raised by taxing men of wealth. Some one has suggested that in the event of another war, wealth be conscripted. Perhaps there would not be so much enthusiasm for war on the part of the "powers that be.") Pekah, who followed Menahem, in league with Rezin of Damascus, made war upon Judah under Ahaz. Ahaz very promptly enlisted Tiglath-Pileser in his cause, and the Assyrian defeated Israel and Syria and gave new impetus to Israel's downfall. The downfall was actually accomplished, however, during Hoshea's reign. It appears that Tiglath-Pileser had died and Shalmaneser had come to the throne of Assyria. He learned that Hoshea had sent messengers to So, the King of Egypt, in an effort to form an alliance, and thus to break the yoke of bondage and to escape the heavy tribute. Shalmaneser, provoked by the constant rebellions and the spirit of insubordination, came up against Israel, and after a seige of three years, finally took Samaria, the capital, and carried many of the people into captivity. He colonized in turn the depopulated country with people from Babylon. Thus ended the life of the northern tribes as a nation. The year 722 B. C. should be remembered by every pupil and teacher. It is one of the outstanding dates in not only the Hebrew national life, but in the history of the world—722 B. C.! remember that if you forget everything else about today's lesson.

The lesson as printed is concerned with the inspired writer's analysis of the causes of Israel's downfall and destruction as a nation. As Dr. Maclaren so strikingly puts it, we have here "a post mortem inquiry into the diseases that killed a kingdom." And a casual reading will show that the historian makes no mention of the overwhelming force of the Assyrian army or any other physical factor, but rather emphasizes the moral and spiritual causes. Israel's sad fate had come because Israel had sinned. And the wages of sin is death, whether it be an individual or a nation that sins. The teacher will do well to discuss the sins that are mentioned more or less in detail in 2 Kings 17:9-17.

Some Teaching Points.

1. "The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God."—Psa. 9:17.
2. The sin of ingratitude opens the way for a host of other deadly sins.
3. God is long-suffering, but sin eventually involves a penalty.
4. No amount of form and ceremony can take the place of inner and genuine goodness.
5. Sin, which begins in secret, inevitably comes out into the open.
6. Jehovah always warns and pleads with His children.—Vs. 13.
7. They who follow vanity, become vain.
8. The desire to be like other folks often brings ruin upon individuals and nations.
9. The way from God is generally gradual.
10. He who deliberately sins is a self-appointed exile.
11. Salt is good; but if it has lost its savor it is thenceforth good for nothing but to be cast out and to be trodden under the foot of men.
12. God is the God of all the nations, and even nations that know Him not may serve to work out His purposes.
13. "That nation and kingdom that will not serve Thee shall perish."
14. Repeated refusal of God's overtures brings hardness of heart.
15. Obstinacy is a grave sin.
16. Idolatry in any form involves dire consequences.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

May 4, 1924.

Topic: In His steps. V. How Jesus overcame Temptation.

Lesson: Luke 4:1-13; John 14:30.

Daily Readings: Help in the Word.—Matt. 4:1-11. By spiritual insight.—Luke 10:25-37. By prayer.—Luke 22:28 39-46. By clinging to God's will.—Mark 8:31-33. By adherence to gentleness.—Luke 9:51-56. By submission to God.—Matt. 26:47-56.

Every one of us is tempted. No matter where we live, or with whom we associate, or what kind of work we do, we have temptations. These temptations may be of many kinds, and they may be of more or less intensity, but they come in one way or another to all of us. And, as a general rule, the better a person would be, the more temptations he has. He who does not have temptations is either dead or blind to all moral and spiritual truth.

Some people think they are tempted by God. But God does not tempt His children. He does test them. But there is a great deal of difference between being tempted and being tested. Temptations are intended to make the tempted one fall. Tests are made in order to show strength or weakness, but in the hope that the tested one may stand. James says that "every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lust and enticed." Temptation comes from the evil one, the devil.

It is no sin to be tempted. Sin enters in when we yield to our temptations. We must, therefore, overcome our temptations, both in order to develop strength of character and to overcome sin. We all know how we lose our self-respect and how our conscience condemns us when we yield to our temptations. We also know how it gives us power and joy when we overcome our temptations. We ought to be glad, then, to learn anything we can about how to overcome our temptations.

One of the best things to do is to see how Jesus overcame temptation. For Jesus was tempted—sorely tempted. If it be true that the better a man would be, the more he is tempted, then Jesus was tempted far beyond our power to realize. But perhaps His temptations were more moral and spiritual than physical. We have an instance of that in the lesson today. There are other instances and references in the gospels. (It is significant that it says in today's lesson, the devil "departed from Him for a season." The devil did not leave Jesus once and for all. Nor does He leave us either.) Jesus was tempted in all points like as we are, and yet without sin. Therefore, He knows how to help us when we are tempted. Several things helped Jesus to overcome His temptations, and they will help us to overcome our temptations.

1. Jesus knew His Bible and quoted Scripture when He was tempted by the devil. The Word of God is a very fine ally when one is tempted. He who knows the Word, and especially God's promises to those who are tempted, will find a great help in time of temptation.
2. Jesus resorted much to prayer. He renewed His strength through prayer, and then when the tempter came to Him He was able to put him to flight.
3. Jesus had a firm faith and a simple trust in God. He believed that God would help Him.
4. Jesus was full of the Holy Ghost. He had God's Spirit in His life all the time.
5. Jesus always made God's will for His life central in His life. He, therefore, escaped many temptations that otherwise would have come to Him. If we have our minds and hearts set on some big, good thing, we will not be tempted by so many little, petty things.

A Few Suggestive Thoughts and Illustrations.

"As long as we keep the foe outside the walls, the citadel will stand; let him enter, and we fall."

"Temptation comes suddenly, like a bolt of lightning, and takes us by surprise so that we do things on impulse. Watch and pray."

"God is our Great Ally. We can call on His aid. Make His acquaintance, and temptations will lose their power."

We can flee from some temptations; we must face and fight others.

HAS YOUR FAITH BEEN TESTED?

By Pastor Jno. H. Woodward,

In Alliance Weekly.

"The proof of your faith being more precious than gold that perisheth, though it is proved by fire, might be found unto praise and glory and honor at the revelation of Jesus Christ."—1 Pet. 1:6 R. V.

George Keymet, a man of eighty years of age, who was formerly a gold miner in Australia, was found dead in a little cottage, which he occupied in the homeland. The cottage was very scantily furnished. Keymet lived alone, doing all his own cooking and even washing his own clothes.

He had been ill for some time, and recently, when he visited some acquaintances, all he could say was "Bag, bag—carpet bag."

After his death, a search was made, and a carpet bag containing gold notes, and a bank deposit note to the total value of $7,000 was found.

The carpet bag and its contents were the sole solace of his miserable heart. He had lived a pauper in order to keep his gold.

Our text tells us of something which is infinitely more precious than the finest gold—"the proving of your faith and mine." We so little believe the Word of God that this text has scant meaning to us. Of course, we assent to the fact that the proving of our faith is more precious than gold, because God's Word says so, and we dare not do otherwise, but, to be experienced with joy, to be anticipated with pleasure—that is all too rare.

Oh! what a transformation would take place in the lives of many of God's dear children if this thing could grip their hearts; but it is not allowed to do so, for it involves the surrender of the whole being to God and speaks of unpleasant experiences—the furnace, the scourge, Gethsemane, and Calvary. And such experiences have no attraction for men. Our blessed Lord Jesus "endured the cross, despised the shame, for the joy that was set before him."

Every path to glory must needs go through a Gethsemane and up the hill of death. But few of us are ready to stand the test and say with Paul, "I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory, which shall be revealed in us."

The Fact of Testing.

It is in the plan and will of God that His children should be tried, tested and proved, and this is borne out by the testimony of the Word and in the experience of every man and woman who has ever had any power with God. Our text speaks of this fact. Jeremiah 9:7 tells of it: "Therefore, thus saith the Lord of hosts, Behold, I will melt them and try them." Daniel's prophecy draws to a close with the prophetic utterance, "Many shall be purified and made white and tried." Abraham had the experience, "And it came to pass after these things that God did tempt (try) Abraham." David also refers to his experience in the seventeenth psalm, "Thou hast proved mine heart . . . thou hast tried me." Joseph was tried (Ps. 105:19), Jeremiah had his heart tried (Jer. 12:3), and our Lord Jesus Himself is the foundation stone, the tried stone, a precious corner-stone, a sure foundation. As "the servant is not greater than his lord," so we may look forward to being tried even as He.

Testing Not Chastening.

When one begins to talk of God's testing, he immediately becomes aware of the fact that there is a great deal of ignorance on this point. It is the common thing to hear the statement, "I don't know what is wrong," when some trying experience comes into the life.

When something goes wrong, we invariably attribute the cause to sin, and in this we are often quite right, and confession and cleansing must follow. Our Heavenly Father, however, does not leave us in doubt as to whether we are being chastened. How can we know? Sin always breaks fellowship with God, and we are always conscious of such a breach when it occurs. Chastening is God's correction of us in order to bring us back to Him to have that broken fellowship restored.

When a contrary experience comes into the life, "Let a man examine himself." If you have lost your peace, if communion with your Lord has ceased to be sweet, put it down to sin; but, "If our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God." The remedy for chastening is to confess the sin. When there is no sin, there can be no chastening, "for if we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged." The removing of sin is the removing of chastening. God cannot judge forgiven sin; therefore, if you are being chastened today in body, soul, or spirit, confess the sin for which you are being chastened, and have Him remove the chastening.

A short time ago, I received a telephone message, asking me to visit a man who was very sick. I went to the home and found a brother on his bed in great pain. He had been lying there in that condition for several days. Almost the first words he uttered on my arrival were, "The Lord is chastening me, and, according to James 5:16, we must confess our faults one to another, and I want to do it." Then he proceeded to relate certain failures and met the Lord concerning them, after which he was anointed, and before we left the house he was healed.

Many pastors can testify of similar experiences, burdened hearts being relieved, depressed minds being revived, when the conditions were met.

But your bitter experience may not be chastening. You have no sin unconfessed, no lack in your consecration to Him, and yet you are in the furnace. Praise His name! It would seem that you are in the inner circle, that you are one of those whom God is using to demonstrate the power of His love. He does not need to prove a Lot, a Judas, an Ananias. Their interests and associations prove them to be untrue to Him, but God does prove an Abraham, a Peter, a Paul, those who have reached a high place of fellowship with Him. Such are crucified unto the world and the world crucified unto them, and Jesus is their all in all. Are you in that number? You are one of God's honored ones, chosen to make manifest His power and love.

How Does God Test His Children?

I do not know how He will test you. I know how He has tested me, but cannot say how He will do it the next time.

Testing may come in a variety of ways, and it will often touch your strongest point and reveal to you your weaknesses. Hast thou faith? Then you can expect to be tested along the lines of faith. Abraham had such testing in the case of Isaac, counting that God was able to raise him from the dead. Is affection your strong point? Then testing will come. Psalm 66:10-12 gives us a great deal of light on God's method of testing. "For thou, O God, hast proved us: thou hast tried us as silver is tried. Thou broughtest us into the net (liberty gone, cramped, buffeted and gasping), thou laidest affliction upon our loins (physical ailment), thou hast caused men to ride over our heads (others receive credit for our work, we are humbled and left out); we went through fire and water (withering, wilting, melting, tossed about; but, Hallelujah! here we have the end of our testing)—thou broughtest us out into a wealthy place." Oh! it is worth the fire and the humbling to get there.

How Should We Act Toward Testing?

1. When we are assured it is testing, recognize that it is either directly or by permission from the hand of Him who loves you, and then say "Amen, Lord"; "Thy will be done." When you are there, stop and do not try to run away.

"Behold, we count them happy which endure." Not those who run away, but those who endure.

2. Look to Him for grace in the testing. You are coming to a place where all human props will be swept away, but, "My help cometh from the Lord." "Let us, therefore, come boldly to the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need."

3. Keep your eyes fastened on the Tester, and not on the test. Watching the waves will never enable you to walk in the storm. Stephen saw not the stones, but he did see the Living Stone.

"Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for Thou art with me."

Remember, "He performeth the thing that is appointed for me," and "when he hath tried me, I shall come forth as pure gold."

"Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial, which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you; but rejoice inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings, that when His glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy."

Can He depend upon you to endure?

"All the way my Saviour leads me:
What have I to ask beside?
Can I doubt His tender mercy,
Who through life has been my guide?
Heavenly peace, divinest comfort,
Here by faith in Him to dwell,
For I know whate'er befall me,
Jesus doeth all things well."

MISSIONARY RALLY.

A missionary rally was held at Fuller's Chapel, Vance County, April 12th. Four Churches were represented, with a goodly number from each. Those represented were Fuller's Chapel, Liberty (Vance), Mt. Auburn, and Henderson. The president, Mrs. F. M. Harward, presided.

It was full of good things. Miss Pattie Coghill and Dr. J. O. Atkinson spoke in the morning. Dr. Atkinson told us about the mountain work. There was dinner enough, and then some to spare, furnished by the good women of Fuller's Chapel.

At the afternoon session, we had the pleasure of hearing Mrs. W. H. Denison, of Dayton, Ohio. We all enjoyed this. She also conducted a round-table discussion. We were glad to have with us Prof. and Mrs. L. L. Vaughan, of Raleigh, N. C.

I wish so much the other Churches of this district could have been present and heard all the good things we heard, and have carried some of it back with them. Not only this, but these meetings bring us closer together, for we are all working for the same cause.

The following officers were elected: Mrs. J. A. Kimball, president; Mrs. W. H. Stevens, vice-president; Mrs. J. E. Harward, secretary, and Mrs. I. F. Coghill, treasurer. The resolutions committee, in making their report, offered the following to the Woman's Board: "We recommend to the North Carolina Woman's Conference Board that the Vance-Warren-Franklin district be divided and made into two districts, namely: the Warren and Vance district and the Franklin district." They feel that the present district covers too much space. The Churches are so far from each other that it makes it almost impossible for some to attend these meetings.

MONDAY.

GIVING GOD A CHANCE.

"I will now turn aside and see this great sight why the bush is not burnt.—Ex. 3:3.

Praying gives God a chance at us. It is our approach to Him, and in doing so we have to do what Moses was commanded to do when He approached the burning brush, "put off thy shoes," as if to say, "God is holy, and the things of God are holy, and when thou comest to Him thou must be clean and reverent." Even the common dirt of the desert is sacred if thou should approach God there.

To thus come to the Lord reveals His personality to us. After Moses talked with God at the burning brush, he referred to Him as "the voice of Him who dwelt in the burning brush." God was very real to him. The greatest menace to our conception of a personal God is that we will not take time to see God and let Him speak to us. He cannot make Himself real to those who spend all of their time in business, pleasures and personal glories. He can be only vague to those who make the material so important. Our daily prayer, to which these daily sketches are intended to be a guide, is the time we take to see the burning bush, and to see God, and hear His voice and be holy.

Prayer.—Eternal and everlasting God, help us to take time to be with Thee, and reveal to us a knowledge of Thy unfailing care. We believe that Thou wilt bless us according to the time we will spend with Thee. Refresh us each morning in glowing opportunities which the day brings, and may we ever be true to Thee. In Jesus' name we ask it. Amen.

TUESDAY.

CHRISTIAN COURTESY.

"And behold, Boaz . . . said unto the reapers, the Lord be with you, and they answered him, the Lord bless thee."—Ruth 2:4.

Why so cross this morning? Perhaps it is with the one who has served you most and best! Has that one not a right to expect a good word from you? They are earning an honest living, which is to their credit. That you get a plenty and probably enjoy position of authority does not give you the right or privilege of treating others with disrespect. Every person engaged in honest toil is entitled to respect. Christian culture does not have to be told this, nor does it wait for others to take the lead in it. The true Christian gentleman goes ahead everywhere with the "I thank you," and "God be with you," and a smile. These are common civilities and decency. Christian gentlemen avoid anything which will cause another physical or mental pain. How sweet was Boaz to his servants! How interested in their welfare and how reciprocated by them! When we are so considerate and tender that subordinates forget their inferiority and are inspired to do their best, to be great and not mean in their hearts, we may be assured that we have the essence of Christianity.

Prayer.—Our Father, enrich our souls with Thy spirit until we possess the genuine piety of Christian courtesy. Make us habitually devout and always acknowledging Thee in our way, setting such a beautiful example of pious courtesy that others cannot but admire and imitate. In Christ's name. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

OVERFLOWING KINDNESS.

"The exceeding greatness of His power to usward who believe."—Eph. 1:15-23.

In the opening verse of this chapter, Paul invokes for the Church in Ephesus, "grace and peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ." We do not merit the favor of God, yet it is extended with overflowing kindness. It has no limit save our needs and our advantage. God's forethought and help are extended for our welfare.

Above the demands of the body are the shortcomings of our soul. We are defective and crippled, and always stumbling, to our injury and humiliation. God looks on with gentle kindness, waiting for us to reach up for His leading and help.

His heaven, His universe, Himself, are filled with peace. It is for us. What must we do to have it? "Believe on Him whom He hath sent." Trust Him, obey Him. It is our Father who is offering us this completeness of soul, as our inheritance.—J. H. Mills.

Prayer.—(Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.)

THURSDAY.

THE LOVE THAT CANNOT FAIL.

"For if ye live after the flesh ye must die; but if by the Spirit ye mortify the body, ye shall live."—Rom. 8:11-18.

This is one of the most stupendous claims made for the Christian life. Science can only go halfway and say: "All things work together." Faith goes all the way and claims: "All things work together for good to them that love God."

Do they? Yes. The Christian life is on a plane of absolute conquest and success; it cannot fail in all its ultimates. It wins—"more than conquerors."

Sorrow, loneliness, poverty, all work toward ultimate good for the Christian who loves God. To love God is to keep the springs of being fresh and receptive to all beautiful things. To love Him is to have poise, trust and endurance, the patience that waits, the zeal that works, the vision to plan.

Jesus was never cynical, never petulant or worried; He knew the end was secure. All rich and abiding reality, all truth and grace, push their way toward the life that loves God. It is polaric, inevitable. Love to God makes our own lives magnetic for all divine things.—Rev. A. E. Gregory.

Prayer.—(Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.)

FRIDAY.

WHAT IS YOUR HOPE?

"The God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing."—Rom. 15:13.

The seed we sow in the spring is big with hope of the harvest, and the farmer's heart is just as big as he cultivates the field. The stream of the hills coursing its way to the sea is big with the hope that it shall eventually become a part of the great ocean. Every phase of life has its hope. Our Father has given us these things, and it is in Him that we expect them. When applied to nature, it means that "something is about to be born."

God is the hope of the soul, and there is not an experience we may have in which we cannot look up and cling to that hope. There are hard times, and we grow blue and discouraged—it is human to do so; but we are more than human. There is a divine side, and in this is the God of our hope. Think of Christ. He saw the worst, passed through darkest experiences, was treated in a most terrible fashion, had not where to lay His head; but in it all His vision was never dimmed. He never slacked doing His best. He had hope in the worst, in the weakest of saints, in the vilest of sinners, in the lost world. He is our hope in the same way. In this, "something is about to be born." It is thy salvation and eternity.

Prayer.—O Lord, be near us, and with what trouble we have in coming to Thy hope, help us to rise above it all unto the calm regions where God dwells. Forbid that we shall seek after vague and failing conquests, but to follow Thee, the Life and the Light and the Love of the world. Amen.

SATURDAY.

MODERN PAGANISM.

"Man does not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."—Matt. 4:4.

Paganism is often found in our own prosperity. When we have gotten to where we limit our visions to earth and to those things which the earth can give us, human life becomes insufferable. The soul is a divine reality, and it cannot be satisfied with wealth or earthly possessions. Give one all that this world can give of goods, joys, luxuries, etc., and the soul starves, pines and despairs. We are not merely living on earth; we are born for the heavenly, and only in the heavenly can we find contentment. We are traveling through the earth in quest of perfection and an eternal home, and only the things that make for perfection and the heavenly will satisfy. Therefore, learn that our troubles are not in our misfortunes, our poverty, nor in our sorrows; but they are in the living, as if we belonged only to the earth. This brings unappeasable misery; learn that home, State, industry and politics all are a part of us and must be spiritualized. Our excuse for living is to "reveal and glorify the divine in the human spirit." If we lose sight of this, false conceptions, selfishness, greed, godlessness, doubt, criticism of the Church, spring up within us. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness."

Prayer.—Our Father, forgive us of our sins, and hold through before our eyes the true purpose of our living. Help us to keep our eyes fixed on the eternal until at last, body, soul and spirit, we shall be Thine. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"The Sabbath was made for man."—Mark 2:27.

John Burns said: "Sunday rest is physically good, mentally invigorating, and morally healthful." It is a commercial asset; it buttresses the home, and, "today it is a natural treasure." To him who observes the Sabbath truly, it is a day of Sunday School and divine worship as our first duty; it is a day of recreation; it is a day of visitation, social converse, family renewals, renewing personal relation bonds, and the discussion of mutual welfare; it is a day brightest and best of all for the children when they gather flowers and create an atmosphere that has a touch of the sweet perfume of the garden; it is a day of a stroll along the moor and fen, looking for some fresh object of beauty; it is a day of lovers when affections are renewed and promises of loyalty taken; it is a day of good books, and papers and magazines.

Prayer.—Our Father, grant unto us the true conception of the Sabbath and give unto us Thy spirit in its keeping. If it comes through humiliation, we are willing. Give unto Thy Church today a new birth and bestow upon it more imperious responses to duty and utter loyalty to Thy will. May it have the power to proclaim boldly the glory of the cross, the coming of the kingdom, and the doom of those who resist it. In Christ's name. Amen.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

The good ladies are certainly kind to us and have sent in the following since our last report:

Ladies of Mt. Auburn Church, N. C., 11 dresses; Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Carlton, Miss Sadie Boyd, Richmond, Va., 15 dresses; Mrs. B. B. Gwaltney Sunday School class, 1 dress; Ladies' Aid Society, Centerville Christian Church, 6 dresses, 1 boy's suit; Woman's Missionary Society First Christian Church, Conshocton, Ohio, 18 dressses; Mrs. B. F. Holden, Louisburg, N. C., 2 dresses; Ladies' Aid Society, Suffolk, Va., 12 dresses, 2 boys' suits, 6 blouses; Birdie Wison, Virgilina, Va., 2 dresses; Ladies' Aid Society Barrett's Christian Church, Sebrell, Va., 9 dresses; Ladies' Aid Society, Piney Plains Church, 11 dresses; Ladies' Missionary Society, Rose Hill Church, Columbus, Ga., 7 dresses, 7 undergarments, 7 pair bloomers, 9 shirts, 2 pair socks, 1 pair bootees; Mrs. J. A. Kimball, Manson, N. C., 1 dress; ladies of Old Zion Church, Norfolk, Va., 9 suits, 2 blouses; N. THE CHIEF HAS FALLEN.

The Chief is fallen! So the troop
Today rides slowly;
Sad heads bend low—broad shoulders droop
Where death lies holy;
And there are tears in weary eyes,
As rain from winter's weeping skies,
Where every sobbing southwind sighs
A requiem lowly.

The Chief is fallen! Halt the guard
For voiceless prayer;
Love's last pale lilies crown the sword
Above him there;
And through the lonesome pines that sway
Above his rose-crowned rest today
Life's last winds whisper on their way
Love's deep despair.

"O Captain! Captain! From the wall
The bugles blare;
Wake, Captain! Wake! Your troopers call
In full despair;
They wait for you by hill and stream,
Their dripping sabres flash and gleam—
O Captain! Captain! Must you dream
Forever there?

"The roll call, Captain of the troop—
Your comrades wait;
Until you come, their proud heads droop,
All desolate.
They must not give their chargers speed
Without their Beau Sabreur to lead—
Their Paladin in time of need
To storm the gate."

No answer now from white lips pressed
And unreplying;
Still hands upon a silent breast
Forever lying;
But out from God's white land of light,
Beyond the field, beyond the fight—
His clear voice rings across the night
With strength undying.

The Chief is fallen! But the flag,
In rippling roll,
Waves proudly. Let no trooper lag
Of stalwart soul.
Up! Boot and saddle! To the fray!
And in the mad, wild charge today
God pity him who blocks the way
Or bars the goal!

—Adapted from Grantland Rice, in the "Tennessean."

We realize that there are spots upon us and flaws within us. His grace is to perfect us until we are without blemish. For our bodies and our souls, His wisdom and power are awaiting our acceptance. "He that spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not also, with Him, freely give us all things?" What more could we obtain than the favor of God?

OUR PLEDGES to Men and Millions are Sacred, Solemn and Binding.

These obligations were made through the Church to the Kingdom of God and to all that pertains to building up that Kingdom in the world, so far as our Christian Church is concerned. As Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has so pertinently pointed out: "A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations--'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42)--but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

Many are making great sacrifices to meet these obligations and pay these pledges. Every one who fails to do so not only produces paralysis in his own moral system, but to that extent paralyses the efforts and sacrifices that the faithful and the loyal make.

BEAR IN MIND MEN AND MILLIONS MEAN AND STAND FOR ALL THAT THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH MEANS AND STANDS FOR.

—REMEMBER—

that the fourth year ends April 30, 1924.

After that, we have only one more year in which to meet these obligations. Unless we put forth a mighty effort to pay some on these pledges during the last quarter of the fourth year, there is great danger that we will fail entirely, because of the bulk of our pledge looming up before us in a one-year period.

Paying SOMETHING by April 30, 1924, will make it easy to pay ALL by April 30, 1925. Where there is a will there is a way, and God always helps those who try to their capacity to help themselves.

HARRIS—WORRELL.

At the Waverly, Va., Christian parsonage, at 5 P. M. February 7, 1924, Mr. John Harris and Miss Elizabeth Worrell, of Sussex County, Va., were quietly united in holy wedlock. These young lives have been for a number of years cultivating the endearing sentiments which have now culminated into a happy union. Their friends and loved ones wish them much happiness. Ceremony performed by the writer. JAS. L. FOSTER.

KING—PARKS.

On the evening of April 5, 1924, Mr. J. Oscar King and Miss Lizzie Parks were united in marriage at the residence of the writer. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. A. Parks, of Ramseur, Route 2, and the groom is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Will King, of Ramseur, N. C.

Immediately after the ceremony they left for Greensboro, where they will make their home. Many friends wish them much happiness.

Fortebee

AN EXTERNAL TREATMENT FOR TUBERCULOSIS.

Speedily restoring patients to normal health and strength. Use it yourself. Be your own doctor. Treatment absolutely harmless. A great discovery. Here's what W. T. Woolfolk, Atlee, Va., says about it: "About eleven years ago I developed tuberculosis in both lungs. I went to Colorado twice, and stayed there about three years, but got no relief, and I spent a while in Western North Carolina, but got no relief. About six years ago I got hold of a bottle of Fortebee and used it, and within three days I was greatly improved, and in about three months I was practically well, and have enjoyed excellent health ever since. Fortebee is the greatest remedy for tuberculosis I have ever seen or heard of. It saved my life."

There are others who endorse this remedy as highly as does Mr. Woolfolk. Price per bottle, $2.50; large size, $4.50.

MAYNARD.

Died at his home near Mebane, N. C., March 30, 1924, Mr. Charles G. Maynard, in his eighty-first year.

In the year 1873 he was united in marriage to Miss Bettie Murray, and to them were born three children. His wife and children survive him. He was a member of Union (N. C.) Christian Church, and had been for a number of years. He served his day and generation well. He will be missed in all the walks of life where he was known and labored.

The funeral services were conducted from Cross Roads Presbyterian Church by Rev. Mr. Robertson and the writer, and his remains were laid to rest in the Church cemetery, to await the resurrection call. May the Healer of broken hearts comfort those who mourn.

P. H. FLEMING.

BOONE.

H. B. Boone, Jr., the little son of Bro. and Sister H. B. Boone, Chapel Hill, N. C., entered into the dreamless sleep of death on March 3, 1924. Had he lived three days longer he would have been twenty-one months old. Though whooping cough was the immediate cause of his death, the little fellow had never been physically normal. The tender and tireless attention of parents and the efforts of various physicians had failed to develop the little fellow's strength sufficiently to withstand the dread disease.

Funeral services were held from Chapel Hill Christian Church. The parents rejoice that in the altar of this Church the little one was formally consecrated just a few months ago. Interment was made at Hank's Chapel, near Pittsboro.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By Rev. S. M. Lynam.

A Mayan City Discovered.—

A Mayan city has been discovered in Central America. It covers hundreds of square miles, and contains many monoliths and pyramids. Numerous other relics of the old Mayan civilization have been found there. Very little is known of this prehistoric culture.

Brooklyn Bandit Captured.—

The notorious bobbed-hair bandit of Brooklyn, N. Y., who has made such a stir in newspapers lately, has been captured in Jacksonville, Fla., and taken back to New York. Celia Cooney and her husband, Edward, declare that they committed the robberies in order to meet the expense of the coming baby. It was through the death of the child that their capture was effected in Jacksonville. She seems rather proud of the publicity which has been accorded her.

Widow of Vance Dies.—

The widow of Zebulon B. Vance, the war Governor of North Carolina and many years senator from that State, died at her home, near Black Mountain, N. C., April 22nd. She was eighty-four years old. She married Senator Vance in 1880. She was then the widow of John W. Martin, of Kentucky. She was born in 1840 as Miss Steele, in Kentucky. She will be interred in Riverside Cemetery. The funeral will be conducted at St. Lawrence Catholic Church, Asheville, N. C.

The South Far Behind.—

In the book-publishing business, the South is far behind. There are three hundred and seventy-five book-publishing concerns in the United States—twenty-one of these are in the South, which is a sad commentary on Southern culture. It is gratifying, however, to learn that three Southern institutions are publishing books for popular sales. Johns-Hopkins University, Trinity College, Durham, N. C., and the University of North Carolina are the institutions now doing such publishing. The latter institution has just issued "Religious Certitude," by Dr. C. A. Densmore, of the Yale divinity school. This book is said to be a most excellent work, and one which is much needed in this hour of religious controversy.

Heiress Will Marry Englishman.—

Cornelia Sylvester Vanderbilt and John Francis Amhurst Cecil applied in person for marriage license in Asheville, N. C. They are to be married at the country home of the bride, Biltmore, N. C., on April 29th.

Miss Vanderbilt is the only heir of George W. Vanderbilt, one of the richest of the rich Vanderbilts. In securing the license, she gave her age as twenty-three. At the age of twenty-five she will come into possession of a fifty-million-dollar fortune. She already has a large fortune in her own name.

John Francis Amhurst Cecil is the first secretary of the English legation at Washington. He is the son and heir of Lord William Cecil, gentleman to the king. At the death of his father, Sir John, he will come into one of the oldest English titles, marquis of Exeter.

He has, however, renounced all this for the hand of Miss Vanderbilt. She will remain a plain American citizen, having profited by the unhappy foreign marriages of other American heiresses.

Two Great Women Pass.—

Within a single day, two of the world's best-known women were claimed by death. Marie Correlli and Madame Eleanora Duse were both well known in literary and dramatic circles. Marie Correlli died at Stratford-on-the-Avo, and Madame Duse at Pittsburgh.

Marie Correlli was born in 1864, of an Italian father and a Scotch mother. She was educated for a musical career, but turned to literature. Her first novel, "A Romance of Two Worlds," appeared in 1886. Since that time she has produced a score or more of very popular novels.

Eleanora Duse had retired from the stage for some time, but was induced to make another tour. Her return to the dramatic world was greeted enthusiastically by large European audiences. She came to America last October and began her American tour at New Orleans. Her health grew steadily worse until her death, in a Pittsburgh hotel, some days ago.

These two women wrought upon the emotions of their readers and audiences, and depended upon the swaying of those emotions for their power. They both achieved a success which has rarely been accorded to women in the literary and dramatic fields. The two women were much alike in many ways.

A Genuine Peace Move.—

The Chicago Association of Commerce recently gave a dinner to the foreign students in Chicago institutions. Eight hundred students attended the dinner. Two college presidents, representing both the Protestant and Catholic Churches, were present. The likening of the United States to a "melting pot" was changed to "a loom," which should weave a fine government from the strands of many nations. Representatives from Japan, China, Corea, and many other countries brought their messages of good will. The invitation contained the following significant paragraph:

"You, these students, will return to your native lands with new light and power to take up the task of serving civilization, and will influence broadly the countries of your birth. The nations of the world will come closer because in Chicago you have discovered the American spirit, and here laid the foundations of your future intellectual growth and constructive purposes."

This move made by the Chicago Association of Commerce is a genuine move for world peace. Slowly, but most certainly, men and women are learning the road which leads to peace. They are following, erringly it is true, but following, nevertheless, in the footprints of the Prince of Peace. It was good business for the Chicago business men, but it is also an excellent Christianity. To divorce Christianity from the ordinary activities of life is impossible, and the larger the part whch Jesus plays in the every-day relations of men the more perfectly will the world approach the realization of the kingdom of God.

Radio of Service in Education.—

Testifying before the Senate patents committee, E. F. McDonald, of Chicago, president of the National Broadcasting Association, said there are now 530 broadcasting stations, 14 of which are operated by manufacturers of radio apparatus, 27 by Churches and other religious organizations, and nearly 100 by educational institutions.

All listeners-in over radio know the large number of educational talks given by broadcasting stations which are not educational in intent. What is not yet visualized is the great effect which such broadcasting must have upon the cause of real education, as distinguished from purely scholastic education.

All over the nation, it was pointed out, there are literally hundreds of thousands of small receiving stations; on isolated farmhouse, in small towns, in communities normally otherwise out of touch with distinguished speakers and educators. Every speech, every educational address, every talk upon matters of public importance is heard and eagerly listened to by many thousands more than could crowd the greatest auditorium in the world. That such a continual hearing of educational speeches, as well as speeches about education, must have a profound effect upon American culture, education, and ideas of the value of increased appropriations of schools, is confidently believed by educators with the vision to see what radio may become, judging by what it has been in the few short years it has been available to the general public.

Illustrating the enormous scope of radio, it was testified before the committee that one station receiver 170,000 replies in a voting contest and that advertising experts estimated the ratio of replies to those reached was one in 50, giving a single station an audience of 3,000,000. Chicago stations have reached 99 per cent of the world's population, Java alone being out of the zone of receiving, as indicated by correspondence.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Atkinson, Dendron, Va., whose daughter is an Elon junior, spent Easter at the college. They were pleased with the outlook of things.

Rev. J. L. Foster and Mrs. Foster spent the Easter season at Elon College and Burlington. It looked mighty good to see these former residents at Elon again.

We were in error in stating, two weeks ago, that Prof. J. W. Fix is located at Lincoln, Kan. He is at Gresham, Neb., and doing fine work as pastor of our Church there.

Mr. J. R. McNally, Charlottesville, Va., was a recent visitor to the college. As a former citizen, he could but note and heartily approve the signs of progress evident here.

Soon the People's Church, of Dover, Del., will be housed in their modern $130,000 religious education addition to their former Church plant. We congratulate them and their city.

The United States Senate has so amended the bill taxing gifts during the donor's lifetime in excess of $50,000 that its provisions do not apply to gifts for educational, religious, or charitable purposes.

Mr. R. Edward Lasater, Winston-Salem, N. C., is a vestryman in the Episcopal Church, and Judge Radcliffe, of Indiana, a Presbyterian elder, but the love of these men for their mother Church is unabating.

Word has just been received from the hospital that Dr. Barrett is not in condition to be operated upon today—April 26th. The first operation is indefinitely postponed, though with the thought that it will be able to come off within the next week or ten days.

We have, so we are informed, the finest opportunity of our history for a Christian Church in Brooklyn, N. Y., in a residential section of 25,000 people and the field pre-empted to us. Rev. P. S. Sailer needs $50,000 for the immediate future, and ought easily to secure it.

Rev. E. B. Flory, Rev. W. P. Fletcher, and Rev. R. C. Helfenstein are attending the annual convocational lectures at Yale University. Bro. Flory is also to visit various cities and study the Church architecture, with view to a modern plant for the new Riverdale Church of Dayton, Ohio.

The twenty-sixth regular session of the Southern Christian Convention is meeting in the city of Norfolk, Va., this week with the Christian Temple, Rev. L. E. Smith, D. D., pastor. The officers are L. E. Smith, D. D., president; N. G. Newman, D. D., vice-president; I. W. Johnson, secretary; Miss Mary Andrews, assistant secretary, and W. C. Wicker, D. D., treasurer.

On April 5th and 6th, the students of the United States met in Washington to discuss law enforcement. Sixteen college presidents joined in calling the conference, and one hundred and fifty institutions were represented. The conference hopes that it has drafted resolutions which shall be carried into the colleges to promote law enforcement. This means that the young people are anxious to make effective the law of the land, and to create a better government under which to live.

The Valley Virginia Central Conference has produced a member in the person of Bro. E. Herring, who has bought and presented the congregation of which he is a member—Mt. Olivet (R)—with a Church house. We need more Herrings, don't we?

Miss Pattie Coghill is distributing the summer school posters for our approaching session at Elon, July 28th to August 3rd. Hang it in your assembly-room and do all you can to bring a large representation to the school. You will always rejoice to have done so.

Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., pastor of First Christian Church, Richmond, Va., and members—Mrs. W. T. Walters, Mrs. L. E. Carlton, Miss Sadie Boyd, and P. J. Kernodle—are attending the Southern Christian Convention, in Norfolk, Va., this week.

Dr. C. H. Rowland is getting things in fine shape in the First Church, of Greensboro. On profession of faith and by letter of transfer, seventy-five members were received Easter Sunday. A lot has been purchased for a parsonage. The atmosphere of the Church is wholesome and inspirational.

Rev. J. W. Patton preached an excellent sermon at Elon Easter Sunday morning. Dr. Newman was away for a commencement sermon, and Bro. Patton supplied for him. At night, a chorus, under the excellent training of Prof. Greenwood, gave an Easter cantata.

Rev. Raymond G. Clark, who is completing his divinity course at Yale this spring, has been called to the pastorate of Huntington, Ind., and also of West Milton, Ohio. Any Church would do well to secure his services. The same is true of Rev. Selden B. Humphrey, who is also completing at Yale this year.

Dr. F. G. Coffin has been chosen to represent our Church at the World Conference of Life and Work, which meets in Stockholm in August, 1925. It is understood that another world conference—that on "Faith and Order"—is to meet at the same time and place. Even so, Dr. Coffin will ably represent us in both

The Executive Board of the General Convention and the trustees of Union Christian College met in joint session in Terre Haute, Ind., recently to discuss the future relation of that college to the General Convention. The matter will be finally disposed of when the trustees meet in their annual session in June next.

Mr. L. D. Martin, member of our Oakland Church, Eastern Virginia Conference, graduate of Elon, post-graduate of the University of North Carolina and Yale, it is rumored, will teach history and social science in Elon next year. THE SUN is glad to see the young people of our Church prepare themselves for work in our college. This is not narrowness—it is becoming loyalty.

Why don't the Virginians force Colonel J. E. West to announce his candidacy for the governorship? He is a fearless and honest statesman, a legislator of wide and successful experience, and a Christian business man, whose character would mightily express itself in a conscientious and righteous administration of the Old Dominion's public affairs. We nominate him!

There will be only one offering this year for the Board of Christian Education, and that will be the first Sunday in November. So voted the Executive Board of the General Convention, in session at Terre Haute, Ind., last week.

On the 25th of April, Bro. P. J. Carlton and Mrs. Carlton sailed for England on the steamer Majestic, of the White Star Line. They will return not later than July 1st. Their many friends will wish them a safe voyage and a pleasant and profitable stay in Europe.

Rev. D. P. Barrett and family are scheduled to arrive in this country in May for a well-earned furlough. The exacting climatic conditions in Porto Rico have made serious inroads on the family health, and an earlier return than normal is imperative. The Church will remember them in prayer, that complete restoration of health may promise an early return to the great work they have done for us in Porto Rico these past twenty years and more.

The story of Sodom and Gomorrah has been authenticated. Dr. Melvin Grove Kyle, of the Xunia Theological Seminary and an expert in the field of archiology, has made excavations which substantiate the Bible story. He writes from Jerusalem that the rising of the Red Sea can now be explained. Dr. Kyle does not give full particulars of his discoveries. He predicts that the valley of the Red Sea will be made a winter resort that will vie with Luxor, Egypt. The discoveries of Dr. Kyle show that the writers of the Bible were sure of their ground. While we have believed them true, it is satisfying indeed to know that science has demonstrated their correctness beyond a doubt.

The Southern Christian Convention met in Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., Tuesday evening, April 29th, at 8 o'clock, and was called to order by President Rev. L. E. Smith, D. D. After worship, conducted by Dr. W. W. Staley, the organization was completed by the enrollment of delegates. The announcement of committees was as follows: Credentials—Rev. W. D. Harward, L. R. Jones, A. B. Jarvis; press—Rev. C. B. Riddle, J. H. Blanchard; finance—W. V. Leathers, K. B. Johnson, B. R. Richards; nominations—Col. E. E. Holland, Rev. S. C. Harrell, T. J. Holland, Rev. E. M. Carter, Rev. J. F. Morgan; resolutions—Rev. P. H. Fleming, D. D., Rev. J. L. Foster, B. D. Jones; apportionments—W. P. Lawrence, K. B. Johnson, C. D. West. Then followed the president's address, and Rev. John G. Truitt preached the opening sermon. Communion service was in charge of Revs. C. H. Rowland, D. D., N. G. Newman, D. D., and J. L. Foster. Music was rendered by the Church choir.

FIRST CHURCH, WINCHESTER.

Easter Sunday was a fine day with our Church in Winchester. Our first service was at 6 A. M., and a fine audience was present at this early hour. At 10:30 we met for our second service, which was a joint service of the Church and Sunday School. Three new members were received at this service. The Christian Endeavor held an interesting service at 6:45 P. M., and at 7:30 P. M. the closing service of the day took place.

All these services were interesting and very well attended. The music, with Miss Janet Rinker as choir director and Miss Anna Amelia Seabright, organist, was very fine and thoroughly enjoyed at all the services. The pastor spoke on "Easter Lilies" at 6 A. M.; "Shall We Live Again?" at 10:30 A. M., and on "The Easter Commission" at 7:30 P. M.

J. F. MORGAN. Pastor.

A MAN WHO LIVED HIS FAITH.

By R. B. Eleazer.

In the death of John J. Eagan, of Atlanta, which took place on March 13th, the nation lost one of its finest spirits and most prophetic pioneers in the realm of applied Christianity. Preeminently a Christian, he believed that the ethics of Jesus were meant to be taken seriously and worked out in all the relations of life. By inheritance, the possessor of a large fortune and later acquiring and developing a great manufacturing concern, he set himself earnestly to the task of Christianizing his possessions. He gave generously, of course, to the Church, to missions, to reform, to philanthropy of all sorts. In a successful effort to abolish Atlanta's "red-light district," he spent probably fifty thousand dollars in gathering the facts and giving them to the public. Then, when the district was cleared up, he provided for its unfortunate denizens homes for their restoration to respectable life. He financed at heavy expense an attempt to save the city from what he thought an unjust raise in the price of certain public utilities. He gave largely to the effort to conserve and develop for the people the unused water power of Georgia. No worthy cause appealed to him in vain. He valued money only as a means of rendering service.

The Stewardship of Acquisition.

But his conception of stewardship was unique. The unselfish use of money did not exhaust it, as it does with most of us. He conceived that Christian ideals should be applied equally to the acquisition of wealth—to the conditions under which employees are asked to work, the wages they receive, the profits exacted from the public, the management of the business. It was at this point that he struck out on a course widely at variance with prevailing standards and became the prophet of a new order. When other concerns closed down or cut wages after the war, he refused to do either, saying that the welfare of his employees was at stake and was his chief concern. He counted the making of men more important than the making of money. Recreational opportunities, Church and school facilities, medical care, sick benefits, pensions and the like were provided for his workers as a matter of course.

A Unique Industrial Program.

If he had gone no further, Mr. Eagan would have stood out as a unique figure. But all this was only a beginning in his program of justice. He conceived also that the workers who gave their lives to the plant were as truly investors as those who put in their money, and were as much entitled to a share in the control and profits of the concern. So he introduced profit sharing on a large scale and gave the employees elective representation on the board of directors. He worked out a plan by which the stockholders should receive not exceeding six or eight per cent on their investment, and all the rest of the profits should go to the employees. In one year, about four thousand dollars which would ordinarily have gone to stockholders, nearly all of it to himself, was thus distributed to the workers, in addition to their wages.

But this Christian business man went further yet. He recognized also that there was another party at interest in the business—the people who consume and pay for the product. So he asked to have two outsiders elected to the board of directors to represent the public, one of them to be nominated by the Federal Council of Churches and the other by a group of heavy purchasers of his product.

Factory Willed to Employees.

His will provides that his interest in the plant, comprising practically all the common stock and amounting to a very large sum, shall be held in trust by the management for the benefit of the public and the employees, the product to be sold at a fair and moderate price, and all the profits to go to the men employed. His purpose in this arrangement, as expressed in the will, was "to insure service both to the purchasing public and to labor, on the basis of the Golden Rule."

John J. Eagan believed that it was not only desirable, but possible, to reorganize industry on a thoroughly Christian basis, instead of that of cold self-interest. His spirit will be content in his efforts in this field, notable for their success, shall stimulate others to a like endeavor.

An Apostle of Racial Good-Will.

Mr. Eagan was tremendously interested also in the effort to Christianize race relations. As early as 1913 he secured for the negroes of Atlanta participation in a Y. M. C. A. building campaign. In 1919 he helped organize the Commission on Inter-racial Co-operation, and was its chairman until his death. When the Federal Council of Churches set up a similar commission, he was called upon to head that as well. He was also the moving spirit in the local inter-racial committee of Atlanta. To these organizations he devoted a great deal of time, and none of his many interests was nearer his heart.

He believed confidently that race relations present no problem that cannot be solved by Christian principles, mutual understanding, sympathy, co-operation. He had no ultimate theory of race relations, but believed that by simply doing "the next thing" in a thoroughly Christian spirit, all the difficulties can be cleared away and relations of mutual good-will and helpfulness established. This confidence was abundantly justified in the work of the several inter-racial groups of which he was the head. Bishop R. E. Jones, a leader of the colored people, paid him this remarkable tribute: "I have often despaired of any real solution of the race problem in America. I shall never do so again after knowing and working with John J. Eagan. I never knew there were in the whole world any white men so fair, so just, so devoted to true democracy as I found him to be."

While very active in his own local Church, Mr. Eagan was deeply interested also in every movement for co-operation among the Churches. He was active in the Y. M. C. A., in the Men and Religion Movement, and the Federal Council of Churches. He was the moving spirit in the Atlanta Christian Council, an association of Christian forces which wields a tremendous influence for righteousness in that city. He accepted fully both the individual and the social implications of Christianity and harmonized them completely in a life in which there were no neutral zones, no distinctions of sacred and secular. His ideals and his examples will be a challenge and an inspiration to all who are seeking the Christian way of life.

RICHMOND NOTES.

Two of the largest congregations since the opening services of the Church have been present the last two Sunday nights.

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Davis left the 19th for their home, in Norfolk, Va., after rendering two weeks' most acceptable service. Mr. Davis is a wonder on the piano, and Mrs. Davis is a fine song leader. They made a host of friends while they were in our midst.

The Easter drama presented last Sunday night was very much enjoyed by one of the largest gatherings ever seen in our Church. Entertainments of this character not only broaden the interest in Church life, but often they bring a message with more telling effect than the strongest sermon.

Our pre-Easter services were well attended, and we feel that they are going to bring helpful results.

Our Sunday School is experiencing a healthy growth. With a little extra effort, we should be able to bring our attendance to 100 within the next few Sundays.

The Southern Christian Convention meets the 29th of this month at the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va. A number of our people are planning to attend. Prof. P. J. Kernodle, managing editor of The Christian Sun; Mrs. W. T. Walters, treasurer of the Woman's Mission Board, and the pastor, who is chairman of the Board of Religious Education, are expected to make reports to the Convention.

Bro. P. J. Carlton, Church treasurer, left for New York the 23rd, whence he will sail for Europe for a two months' business trip. He was accompanied by Mrs. Carlton and his sister, Mrs. Parrot. We wish for them a safe journey and a pleasant trip. W. T. Walters.

"PATRIOTIC" CRITICISM.

According to the National Historical Association, criticism of existing histories made wholly on "patriotic grounds" is as bad as propaganda in favor of other histories which are said to be biased on religious or other grounds. The association contends that "true criticism of history textbooks should be based not upon grounds of patriotism, but only upon grounds of faithfulness to fact."

Dr. William B. Owen, past president of the National Education Association and now president of the Association for Peace Education, believes that one of the faults of present-day school histories is that they devote too much space to war, which, so it is contended, as they start in lies and misunderstanding and continue in passion and prejudice, are never subject to wholly truthful reporting. Dr. Owen believes that the best histories are those which do not put so high the historical value upon war, and do stress the accomplishments of peace and education. It is not intended to write untruthfully about war, but to give more weight, for instance, to Magna Charta and the Declaration of Independence, than to English battles and the Revolution; to put more emphasis upon the results of reconstruction and the going forward of a united nation, than upon battles and leaders of the Civil War.

CHANGE THAT SIGN.

Instead of "business is business," "do it now," "don't part here," "keep smiling," or other such mottoes that may adorn desks and office walls, the Rev. Dr. A. Edwin Keigwin urges business men to adopt the inscription on a bronze tablet recently unveiled at the West End Presbyterian Church in New York. The inscription reads:

"We believe that business principles should conform to the teaching of Christ."

Duplicates of this tablet may be obtained for offices and photographs of it for homes. One man has ordered twelve tablets to be installed in his office and branch establishments. Orders are reported as coming from many parts of the country.

If one's feet become unsteady and wandering, it is because he is thinking of the pleasure he might have, or the profit. His thoughts are upon himself. And as they continue to be saturated with self, he continues slipping along the downward way. Signals of coming disaster to others are unheeded.

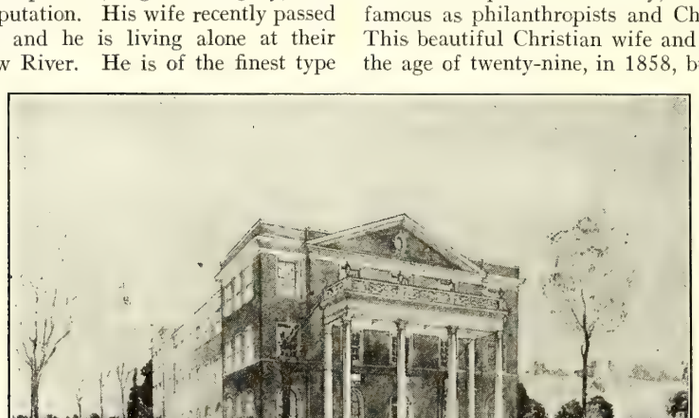
THE ARTELIA RONEY DUKE MEMORIAL.

The new science building now in course of erection at Elon College is the gift of Messrs. B. N. and J. B. Duke, in memory of their mother, Mrs. Washington Duke, whose maiden name was Artelia Roney, a native of Alamance County, and whose body rests in the cemetery at Haw River, eight miles from Elon College.

Mr. A. K. Roney, brother of Mrs. Duke, is the only surviving member of a family of twelve children born to John Roney and his wife, Mary Trollinger. Mr. Roney will be eighty-three years of age on September 29th next. He is one of the most highly respected citizens of Alamance County, a man of simple life, highest integrity, and unblemished reputation. His wife recently passed to her reward, and he is living alone at their home near Haw River. He is of the finest type of Southern gentleman—refined, honest, devout, a daily reader of the Scriptures, regular in his prayer-life. To him, religion is real, and the Bible is the Word of inspiration. It is a joy to visit this grand old patriarch in the sunset period of his life. His simple faith, his sublime trust, make his presence a hallowing influence.



Artelia Roney Duke Science Building.

John Roney inherited the ancestral home in what was then known as Melvin township, but is now a part of Haw River township, Alamance County. In Colonial days, the Roneys and Trollingers migrated to this section and have been prominent in the county's life in each generation since. Both families are noted for their sterling qualities of character and their untiring energy and industry. Thriftiness has been their middle name. As citizens, they have been law-abiding and progressive. As Christians, they have been earnest and sincere.

"My sister Artelia was my favorite sister," declared Mr. A. K. Roney. "I loved her for her piety. She was a good girl, and loved old Pisgah Church. It was there Mr. Washington Duke met her at a protracted meeting. They both loved the M. E. Church, though she loved it better, if possible, I think, and I am sure her boys love the Church as they do because their parents loved it so much. The Roneys were all Methodists, and most of the Trollingers, though some of them on both sides were members of the Christian Church. Artelia was a woman of strong mind, just like her sons," he continued.

There was no race suicide in John Roney's home. His twelve children were Ben, Henry, Polly, Catherine, John, Artelia, Calvin, Newton, Joseph, Armecia, Barbara Ann, Betty, and A. K. All of them, as we have said, have passed to their reward, save Mr. A. K. Roney, youngest of the twelve, and now in his eighty-third year, a man well preserved for his age and in full possession of all his faculties. He inherited his ancestral farm as the youngest child, but some years ago traded it to Mr. R. Q. Haley for his present farm and residence near Haw River. Near this old ancestral home of the Roneys is the Stonewall Spring, which has supplied water of superior quality for many generations, and to the Duke family in particular. It is said they have it regularly shipped to them for their personal use.

When Mr. Washington Duke, known around the world as the founder of the Duke family, came to the big meeting at old Pisgah meeting-house from his home in Orange County, he had no thought of meeting the devout and lovely woman who was to be his second wife and the mother of his two sons, B. N. and J. B. Duke, world famous as captains of industry, and equally world famous as philanthropists and Christian laymen. This beautiful Christian wife and mother died at the age of twenty-nine, in 1858, but she gave the world and the Church two of the noblest men of this generation, and her daughter, Mrs. Mary Duke Lyon, now deceased, was a most estimable leader in home and Church. Artelia Roney Duke's ashes rest in the simple cemetery at Haw River, her spirit dwells with the Lord, her life served, and her influence is perpetuated forever in the generous gifts of her husband, and her sons inspired by her noble example and character. Their gifts to the Methodist Church and to Trinity College are a testimony to the sincerity and genuineness of their devotion to the interests of the kingdom of Christ.

It was, therefore, fitting that, on the campus of the only college in Mrs. Duke's native County of Alamance, there should stand a building as testimony of her noble life and as witness of the generous hearts of her two sons. It is significant, too, that her double-first cousin, W. H. Trollinger, should have been the donor of the twenty-five-acre campus for this college, and that her remains and his should lie adjacent to each other in the ancestral burying-ground at Haw River. This cemetery has recently been beautified by a stone fence, another generous act of Mrs. Duke's two sons.

"The Artelia Roney Duke Memorial Science Building, Donated by Benjamin N. and James B. Duke, her Sons, 1923"—so reads the corner-stone of the building erected on Elon's campus to the memory of this saintly mother and devout Christian woman. It is a building in which chemistry, physics, biology and geology will be taught, with abundant facilities for laboratory and experimental work; but these branches will always be herein taught as Christian subjects. It would be a sacrilege to teach them from any other standpoint at Elon or in the building dedicated to the memory of this woman of rare and charming Christian faith and spiritual grace.

Our Elon is honored to have associated with her history the name of this noble Christian woman. And to her generous-hearted sons, B. N. and J. B. Duke, we proffer the grateful thanks of the Christian Church for their splendid assistance in making this magnificent gift to our college. We understand that the building, when completed and furnished, will cost from $90,000 to $100,000. We are grateful to these benefactors, and trust that they will find real heart satisfaction in the gratitude our people feel for their kindness and which we are anxious appropriately to convey to them in this public way.

FIVE TYPES OF MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

The other day a layman from one of our least progressive Conferences, in a distant State, remarked that the Churches in his vicinity were beginning to demand educated preachers. He seemed to consider it as evidence of spiritual decline. I rejoice to hear his statement, for education has its place in the success of ministerial effort.

But not all preachers need the same type or extent of education. I would myself differentiate at least five types, all of them necessary in their place and no one of them able to qualify all ministerial candidates for their high calling.

There is first the man who is called to the ministry late in life, and, for various reasons, unable to go to any kind of school for study. There are such men in every generation. We have some of them in our Southern Christian Convention at this time, as in all sections of our denomination, and they are doing worthy work for the Lord. We have made no provision for these men. We ought to have a Conference course for these brethren, and they should be encouraged to take it, with such assistance as the Conference Committee on Education may render, and they should pass examination on it from year to year when the Conference is in session. Report of their progress should be made to the Conference regularly.

The second type consists of those men who are called to the ministry relatively late in life, without high school training, and yet are anxious to spend a year or two in study. For these, too, we have made no definite provision. They can be admitted as special students to our colleges, but the classes being of collegiate grade, they have a serious handicap. We need a Bible training school for such candidates, where courses in Bible and religious education and the English branches are offered. Being in class with others of similar school opportunities, the progress these brethren would make would surprise you. One of our denominational schools should be set aside for this very class of candidates. Many have suggested that Union Christian College be so utilized. Its location, its history, and its outlook would seem to combine most favorably for this purpose.

Then there is the large and, I am happy to say, increasing group of young men who are entering our denominational colleges and who will conclude their ministerial preparation, in all likelihood, with the earning of their bachelor's degree. Our colleges owe it to these brethren to strengthen in the work in Bible and religious education and to permit a candidate for the A. B. degree to offer at least five three-hour-year courses in these subjects in candidacy for such bachelor's degree. These courses further should be of such standard in scholarship that the seminaries will accept five of them as constituting the first year's work in the seminary. This would shorten the seminary course to two years and would be an added inducement for those who otherwise might be deterred from the longer course to add full seminary training to their preparation. As has already been stated in her 1924 catalogue, Elon has thus strengthened her courses in these branches and has secured the co-operation of a group of seminaries that are willing to accept her graduates with the five courses as second-year men. The Christian Divinity School, at Defiance, Ohio, should become the department of Christian Education of Defiance College and should shape its courses for similar seminary credit. This should mean for us in the future an increasing number of seminary graduates in our pulpits, a condition to be devoutly hoped for.

We have already anticipated the fourth type—the college man with seminary training. Our Church is too small to maintain a standard seminary. We should encourage our young men of high aspiration to attend the seminaries already in operation and nationally recognized as standard. It would be a mistake to send them all to any one seminary. They should be distributed over some half-dozen, and in fact they are being so distributed already. We should witness a substantial growth from year to year in the number of our Christian Church college graduates who persevere in the direction of seminary training. Our Board of Christian Education stands ready to grand a scholarship of $200 for the first year of seminary work, and of $100 for each succeeding year, for any young man who holds a bachelor's degree and is desirous of seminary training. The emphasis for these men should be on courses that will prepare them for the pastorate.

The fifth class is a smaller one, but very important. It should be our deliberate aim and policy to encourage those ministerial men who show promise as college professors of Bible and religious education to add to their seminary course, graduate work leading to the Ph. D. degree in divinity and religious education. We shall not need many of this type, but the few we need and succeed in securing will hold the keys of progress for the future of our Church in all her departments

ADMIRAL SIMS URGES SUPPORT.

In an address at Washington, under the auspices of the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association, Admiral Wm. S. Sims brought the issue very close to his hearers in the following words:

"It is rather a singular thing for a naval officer to speak on prohibition.

"Nor am I especially fitted, since I cannot pose as a 'horrible example,' not being a reformed drunkard, nor can I stand as a 'holier-than-thou' because I know what rum tastes like, although I have always been a practical teetotaler.

"I can only tell you what I have seen 'rum' do to the men who were young when I was, and how the 'rum' habit makes drunkards and moral and physical wrecks. I can speak of the education of drunkards through habits of thoughtless conviviality. I can show the decrease in the drinking habit and its causes, and the material and moral effects of law violation.

"In my youth, the teetotaler was a milk sop; he was not considered a good sport nor a companionable man. The drinking of the young men caused the forming of clubs for those who would not frequent saloons. These two places were schools of drunkards, causing wrecks along the way

"Public opinion, influenced primarily by considerations of health and efficiency, has caused the present party political agitation. Gradually, the people have been educated by the testimony of doctors, by statistical facts, by the practice of athletics, by the increasing pride in physical fitness, by the effect of intemperance on industry and by the public demand for temperance among employees of railroads and mechanical industries. The influences of the advance of temperance increased until our people decided liquor interests had to be put down. According to the Villager, a weekly journal, the determining factor was machinery. The case is stated thus: 'Do you not remark that when Henry Ford and Mr. Gary demand that President Coolidge enforce prohibition they seem to speak with more authority than governors of all the States put together?'

"Rum was taken out of the navy when the inefficiency it caused was found out. When the late President Roosevelt saw America's navy so far behind that of the British, he demanded rapid firing and sure-shooting as necessary qualities of a well-equipped fleet. As a result, the cocktail disappeared from the ship.

"I believe prohibition is here to stay. One proof of the matter is in the words of late President Harding in his message of December 8th, which reads: 'The day is unlikely to come when the eighteenth amendment will be repealed. The fact may be recognized and our course adopted accordingly.'

"It cannot be long before it will be recognized that the men who traffic in alcohol are dangerous criminals, and that those who buy and drink it are accessories in crime—and that the most dangerous criminals of all are the government officials who are charged with the enforcement of the law and who violate it or aid others to do so. All this corruption and crime is directly due to the demand for alcohol by those who are drinking it. Every man who takes a drink actually assists the bootleggers or private still to supply it. In effect, he is a bootlegger and a corrupter of government officials.

"Do you young men present here tonight want to join the class of cynical violators of the law? If you do, the wets will supply you with plenty of arguments. If you pay a man to get you a bottle of whiskey, or a drink, you are paying for services of the bootlegger who smuggles it in—you are in reality a bootlegger.

"But let us leave aside the moral question and the political and social danger of violating the law, and consider the special responsibility of the young men to the future of this nation. Prohibition is hard on the regular drinkers. It is the careless conviviality of the 'cocktail habit' which leads to a gradual increase in consumption. Look at the gradual physical effect on the man of fifty. They are a disgrace to the human race. There is 'fun' in alcohol, but there is, also, great danger. It may prove too strong for you as it did for a ship's fireman who found it 'uncomfortable to stay sober all the time.'

"The influence of our young men on the future of the United States will be very great. In a few years you will be the controlling force in the nation. The future—ours, and perhaps the world's future—will be determined by your mental equipment, your moral principles, your clean flesh, your physical stamina, and your ideals of private and national life. It is up to you to stop, look and listen. It is up to you to do some serious thinking—to form the habit of thinking straight.

"It is my belief that if college students should decide to obey the law in question, and if their example should be followed by the great mass of students in all our colleges and schools, the moral influence would eventually be such as to sweep out of office every corrupt official, and to create that respect for law without which no decorcacy can succeed.

"This democracy must not be allowed to fail, because it cannot succeed unless and until the people realize the sanctity of law, and recognize that a government official who violates his oath to defend the Constitution is a dangerous criminal. No nation can resist the determined moral conviction of its young men.

"The future is in the hands of you young men and women. More than to any other class of our citizens, it is up to you!"

AMERICA ABROAD.

The influence of American ideas and ideals in the new republic of Czecho-Slovakia, as well as in other European countries, is emphasized in an article in the London Daily Telegraph, by Dr. William M. Caldwell, of McGill University, Canada. He attributes this influence largely to the activities of the Y. M. C. A.

"As for the Americanism, or the Americanization, with which the Czecho-Slovakian (social, educational and religious) tendencies are to be associated," Dr. Caldwell writes, "this is very largely, along with other influences, the outcome of the work of the American Y. M. C. A. that followed the Czech soldiers into Siberia and that returned with them to aid in building up the proper spirit for the new republic.

"It has had a wonderful effect upon the spirit and activities of the young people in many centers all over Czecho-Slovakia. These young people have adopted the magic, as it were, of the American constructive spirit in many ways. My point is that it means a great deal for their country and for the world.

"This, of course, will surprise no one who knows of the great world movement and the sane, progressive liberalism with which the Y. M. C. A. work has been associated both in America and in Europe. The important thing about it, so far as Czecho-Slovakia is concerned, is that the Americans have given it over now almost entirely into native hands.

"It is a pleasure and a necessity to speak of this Americanization of the hour, not only in Czecho-Slovakia, but elsewhere. I have been seeing a good deal of it, even in the universities of this country (England). It is certainly a great actual and possible factor with regard to the European atmosphere."

WHERE WOULD THE WORLD GO?

A resourceful Methodist preacher in Iowa put his Church into everybody's thought at a time when few people intended to think about Churches. Wilton was observing "Old Home Week." A few days before the parade, Pastor Loose was thinking about the floats which the business houses would prepare to represent them.

"Why not the Church, too?" said he, and forthwith set to work.

He designed and helped to build a float with his own automobile for its base. Here is a hint of the quality. Look at it, and you will see why the people of Wilton could not quite put the Church out of their thought amid the distractions of the day.

"The Church and the world are balanced against each other on a teeter plank. But under the Church's end of the plank is a great rock—the Rock of Ages. The world is swung out over the other end and would go down if it were not counterbalanced by the Church.

"Just beneath the world sits the devil, reaching up greedy hands to catch the world if the Church should step off the other end of the plank. On the banner over the float is this question: 'What would become of the world without the Church?' No wayfaring man, looking at the design, needed to be at a loss for the answer to that question."

But the Church won't step off!

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Printing and photography are great powers for good or evil. Both deal with life and character. They have a domestic and national influence. In the home, the family life, as well as individual life, is determined by what members read and see. The books and papers, the wall pictures and photographs insinuate themselves into the thought, imagination and asperations or ambitions of young life. When I read John Ruskin's "Stones of Venice," I said I will see that city, and I did. Why not? When I read of the "Holy City" may I not say, "I will see that city?" Would I have ever gone to Jerusalem if I had not read of Jerusalem? We live in a world of pictures. God painted His pictures upon the canvas of the sky and has written His lessons in letters of light. "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth His handywork. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge. There is no speech nor language where their voice is not heard." It is as the printed page; it speaks without a voice. Sunrise and sunset, floating cloud and star-light night are paintings beyond the brush in human hands. Spring time opens a world of beauty and releases perfumes that sweeten the air. Nature speaks to man. Nature delights the eye of man. Nature sings to man in zephers, waves, and birds. This all furnishes inspiration for the poet, the painter, the musician, the sculptor, the architect, the inventor, the Christian.

The press and photography both reach the life through the eye, which is the learning sense; even the blind must have some substitute for the eye. It is said that "seeing is believing"; and it may be said as truly that "believing is seeing." The "seen is temporal; the unseen is eternal." "We walk by faith, not by sight." When we read or look at pictures we see beyond what is on the page or the screen. Imagination clothes thought with realities and converts the good or bad sentence or picture into character. "Eve saw that the tree was good for food; she took of the fruit, and did eat." The work was done before her hand touched the fruit. The eye is the channel through which evil as well as good enters.

The press is responsible for much of the evil of this age. It hunts up the worst in society and puts it upon the page. It creates bad tastes, bad desires, and bad habits. Its power is as subtle as malaria, and as dangerous to moral health as malaria is to physical health. It needs regeneration. It is the gretest power of our day, and, if regenerated, could put an end to war, enlighten all races, make prosperous all nations, and make a friendly world. There are good publications, but the "press," as a whole, corrupts human thought and abuses its high privilege and obligation to society. The picture-world shares in the same neglect of a great opportunity. Woman, God's gift as "a help-meet for man," is used in the advertising world in all sorts of suggestive pictures that reflect on her modesty, her refinement, and her high place in the home and society. The moving picture is no improvement on the magazine and paper abuse. Imagination paints more pictures than appear on the screen—and they are usually worse or better than the picture seen.

W. W. Staley.

THE WEALTH OF THE NATIONS.

Some years ago I was turning idly through the advertising columns of a leading woman's publication. I found there a picture which interested me. It was the photograph of a large family with every mark of happiness, and beneath the words, as though they had been the words of the father, "They are worth a million dollars apiece." If this be true—and what mother who has nestled to her breast a babe, and what father who has looked down into the eyes of his child that smiled up at him, would dare to say it is not true—if this is true, I say, what immeasurable wealth do the nations of the earth possess today?

That is the richest nation which can count within its borders the largest number of children. It matters little how much of the world's supply of gold is stored in a nation's banks; it matters little what its natural resources may be—but it matters infinitely as to the number of its children. The children mean the perpetuation of a race, a name, a nation. Children mean that possibilities exist for a larger world power regardless of other things. They are promises of tomorrow, which have power to ease the aching heart of today. They are promises to that nation in which they live that it shall have a tomorrow indelibly written in the hearts of men and women; but the children within a nation's borders bring to the nation a grave responsibility. The men and women of today may determine in great measure what the world of tomorrow may be. With the possession of this wealth, as the possession of all wealth, brings with it a great responsibility.

Wealth may be a blessing or a menace. A nation's children hold the same potential power for good or ill. All is dependent upon the possessor. He it is who trains and directs the thinking of the children. It is his ideals which are inculcated in the minds of the children, and no power is strong enough to wholly dislodge those early impressions. It has been said, and with much truth, that an author writes very little of experiences after his eighteenth birthday. This power preserves the traditions and conceptions of a nation, and determines its future in the family of nations.

The American Indian made it a crime to know more than the fathers, and civilization stood and stagnated. This was true of China and Japan. It is true in great part of Turkey today, but gradually this idea is giving way to advancing thought. A child, no matter what his race or nationality may be, has a right to the best that the world can give, and those of us who live today, owe to those who hold tomorrow in their hands, the best of our thought.

What power is it which has brought the little island kingdom of England to its place as possibly the foremost world power of today? It is the attention bestowed upon the children born within its borders. In every British heart has been planted a love of country and loyalty to the ideals for which that country stood, not equaled by any other land.

What the children of today are thinking, the world of tomorrow will carry over into the field of action. What are the children of today thinking? Are their thoughts thoughts which would be healthful to the world to translate into action? This we may determine. We supply the material out of which their thoughts are built.

The school, the pulpit, the press are pouring forth ideas. Children are absorbing them, and interpreting them for themselves. Are the things which our schools, our pulpits, our press are teaching safe? Will what they are teaching make for a better world? I do not mean are they doctrinally correct, measured by some scriptural interpreter of centuries ago? But will they lead the world up or down in its thinking and acting? I do not care for the past or what it has to say other than that I may draw from it just the things I need in the building of the future. It has much that, could the world be rid of, we should be far happier and better for the losing. This is true in every field of thought and endeavor.

The world's children will determine attitudes toward labor and capital, relationships between race and race, and between nation and nation. These problems we shall leave with them, and as we lay them in their hands, what equipment of thought shall we lay there to aid them in reaching a solution?

Our schools should send them into the world equipped with a broader vision, a more liberal toleration, and a better understanding of the problems which they are to meet. Too long have the children been taught not facts, but prejudices.

Our pulpits must become great teaching forces —forces which shall direct the thinking of men; forces which shall shape policies of governments, and determine the larger relations of every nature. Our pulpits must give to the children a kindlier spirit. They must implant more of the love of the Man of Gililee in the hearts of men. They must teach truth, and not, as so frequently has been done, the interpretation of those truths. The Church has dispensed too many colored glasses, and men have but lately refused to look through them. The Church must talk of heaven, not so much of hell. It must look up, not down, and guide the feet of little children toward the throne of a loving Father and a saving Christ, and teach them that that Father and that Christ is the Father and Saviour of all men, every where making them brothers one to another.

The press must give to the children clean thoughts. Its ideals must be raised from the plain of sordid things to a purer air and a broader view. These things we must demand for those who look to us for mental and spiritual food. These things we must secure for those into whose hands we must so shortly trust the future of mankind.

This wealth that lies within the borders of the highest and lowest nation alike may be made a blessing or a curse, as we will it. As the potter may mold the vessel as he will, so we may mold the thought and action of those who constitute the wealth of the nations. Our responsibility for them is large, and it reaches beyond the borders of our own United States. It includes more than the forty million boys and girls within our borders. It includes the children of all men in every nation. Our interests are broader today than ever before. We have come to see that we are vitally affected if German philosophy is not the philosophy of Christ, and slowly we are realizing that if the women of China and Turkey are not emancipated we shall suffer. We must understand that the children of no nation may be developed for that nation alone, and more, that the children of no nation may be left undeveloped. The world must grow together if we are to be a proportioned world, and it is only in such a world that the greatest happiness may be found.

We are engaged in the erection of a world. It is an upward building and whatever does not contribute to the one great purpose is useless. The nations of the earth must see to it that their great wealth of childhood is put to the largest use in the great building program of God.

THE AMERICAN NOVEL OF TODAY.

By Wm. Thornton Whitsett.

The daily and weekly reports of librarians in every section of our country say that the majority of those taking books from the shelves choose works of fiction. Reading "the latest novel" is a habit firmly fixed upon many. In many literary circles, one is supposed to be keeping pace with literary matters if he is making the effort required to read the lates novel as it drops from the press. By far, fiction stands foremost in the public eye.

In an editorial in the September 8th issue of The Literary Review, the editor writes upon what he is pleased to term "The Shortage in Fiction." The title seems a little surprising at first sight. Most people would have said that if there is any overproduction of books it is certainly in the realm of fiction. In the matter of quantity, there seems nothing to be desired in the world of novels, but the article in question goes boldly into the matter with the claim that it is not a matter of increase in quantity that is needed, but that it is, indeed, a matter of quality that should engage our serious attention. He says:

"The trouble with American fiction is that there is not enough of it. How can the hundred thousand good readers, which we may fairly assume in the United States, be satisfied by five or ten novels and perhaps thirty short stories a year? For that is about the sum total of good American fiction."

Here he strikes right at the root of the matter. Many who are familiar with the facts and have looked fully into the matter, will be disposed to agree with the statement. We have a continual flood of so-called works of fiction that have neither logic, scholarship, nor morals to make a plea for them. Numbers of books, fit only to be turned into the sewer, are daily asking a place upon our reading-tables, and a share of our time and attention. Because they are new, some feel that they must be read. Vast sums spent in advertising and pushing some of these succeed in running their sales vastly beyond their merits. Careless critics lend their names to the exaggerated advertising used to forward this mushroom popularity, and the bewildered public is left with no sure guide as to what is worth while and what is worthless.

This editorial claims, with justice, that we have plenty of novels of sociology; plenty of propaganda; plenty of commercialized sentimentalism; more than a plenty of novels with neurotic and unhealthy tendencies—but all too few of works of fiction of the highest and best type; rich in experience; rich in the power of just interpretation of life; and written by those whose rangs of scholarship and expression are such as to make a book from their pens worth while.

One of the great troubles with us is that we are too anxious for the latest and the newest. There is much that has stood the test of time that should claim our attention. In fact, if anything is to be neglected, it should be the newest and the most untried, while from no standpoint can we afford to overlook and neglect that which stands as the finest expression in fiction of the past.

We can save ourselves much waste of time if we will select our fiction by the standards held up in these words from this well-timed editorial:

"And no book is a real book, least of all a novel a real novel, without a real man or a real woman behind it. The conception of the ineffectual, ill-balanced genius capturing the truth of the world through his own weakness is a fiction. Holding the mirror up to nature is a misleading phrase. It is not nature, but nature in oneself that must be reflected, and if the self is colorless, so will be the picture. Egoistic novels are examples of selves that are expressive, but inexperienced. Not that way lies our need, but rather for personalities which can carry the vibrations of their world. Real novels are not anaemic or superficial, like so much in American fiction. One can feel the pulse of life beating in them and know that the blood comes richly from a great heart."

WALKING IN THE SPIRIT.

(Gal. 5:16-25.)

By Rev. W. H. Chandler.

To live and walk in the Spirit, He must be received—He is the Lord's gift to His disciples. Right relationship with God the Son in His sacrificial ministry is necessary to salvation. Right relationship with God the Holy Spirit in His official ministry is necessary to sanctification and spiritual power. He makes true in us what Jesus made true for us on the cross and in resurrection. We must give Him supremacy. To live and make progress in the fullness of the Spirit we must—

1. Credit Him with an honest, steadfast purpose to abide (Jno. 14:16-23). He is not freaky, notional, changeable. He has a plan in mind for your life that includes the development of all your gifts to their greatest efficiency, your character to an expression of your Lord's virtues, and your service as a soul-winner effective. To do this, He wishes to abide, to preside, to take charge of everything of the inner life and outer circumstances. Let your abandonment to Him be real.

2. Be ready to take new things from Him (1 Cor. 2:9-16; Jno. 16:12-15). Let Him have an unprejudiced mind upon which to work. Abandon cherished beliefs when found out of harmony with the Word of truth. Be like the Bereans (Acts 17:11-12; 1 Jno. 2:27). He makes us independent of all human opinion and reasoning; fearless in our principles; unmoved by our circumstances; undeterred in our obedience to God; determined to decide all things in the light of God's Word. This does not mean that we are to have no teachers of men, but no teaching of men. Modernism and destructive criticism are the product of man's teaching. Keep taking advanced ground (Joshua 1:3; Acts 20:32).

3. Must walk in perfect sincerity before God and man. Gen. 17:1, "Walk before me and be thou perfect." Sincere—Ps. 51:6, "Behold, thou desirest truth in the inward parts" (1 Jno. 1:5; Phil. 1:10; 1 Cor. 5:8; Eph. 4:15). No exaggeration; no misrepresentation; full and prompt confession when due; reality in all things with God and man.

4. Be willing for the Lord to take anything out of your life that He may choose—habits, associations, pleasures, employments. Abide by His decision. Trust His judgment. He will take no unloving nor unwise advantage of your yieldedness to Him. You yield to infinite love, wisdom, and forbearance. He can make no mistakes. What He takes out of your life will be more than infinitely compensated by what He puts into your life.

5. Daily prayer and feeding on His Word (Ps. 55:16-17). "As for me, I will call upon God; and the Lord shall save me. Evening, and morning, and at noon, I will pray, and cry aloud: and He shall hear my voice." Dan. 6:10, "He kneeled upon his knees three times a day, and prayed, and gave thanks before his God." Acts 20:32; Jer. 15:16, "Thy words were found, and I did eat them; and Thy word was unto me the joy and rejoicing of mine heart." Ps. 119:103, "How sweet are Thy words unto my taste! yea, sweeter than honey to any mouth!" Ps. 19:10, "More to be desired are they than gold, yea than much fine gold."

6. Daily giving out as opportunity affords (Jno. 7:38). Outflowing rivers; channels.

"May every soul that touches mine,
Be it the slightest contact, get therefrom some good—
Some little grace, one kindly thought,
One inspiration yet unfelt, one bit of courage for the darkening day,
One gleam of faith to brave the thickening ills of life,
One glimpse of brighter skies beyond the gathering mists,
To make this life worth while and heaven a surer heritage."

FRANKLIN S. S. CLASS MEETING.

The Philathea Class of the Franklin Christian Church held a rally at the home of the teacher, Mrs. J. O. H. Daughtrey, on March 10th, with twenty-one members present. The class unanimously voted to change the name to the "Birdie Rowland Bible Class," in honor of Mrs. C. H. Rowland, who was our faithful and devoted teacher for many years. The event was celebrated by a 6-o'clock dinner in the Sunday School rooms of the Church on March 20th. The rooms were decorated with spring flowers and green, suggestive of St. Patrick's Day. A four-course dinner was served, with our superintendent and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. L. R. Jones, acting as host and hostess

The class holds monthly business meetings on Monday evening following the second Sunday in each month. Our meeting in April was held at the home of Miss Lydia Daughtry, with Mrs. W. A. Daughtry and Mrs. Geo. Ernest assisting the hostess. Twenty-two members were present. One of the future plans of the class is to make the lives of the shut-in members of our Church brighter by regularly visiting them.

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and W. B. Greeley, chief of the Forest Service, have many times emphasized the importance of preventing forest fires, about 36,000 of which every year sweep 11,000,000 acres of land.

Secretary Wallace has stated that eight out of every ten forest fires result from human carelessness, and will not happen once the public is brought face to face with the serious losses these fires cause. These losses fall especially heavy on the American public, since the United States uses more sawtimber than all other nations combined.

Chief Forester Greeley says it is not difficult for any one to be careful with fire while in wooded areas. Here are simple rules which, if observed, will go far toward reducing the appalling number of man-caused forest fires reported every year: Be sure your match is out before throwing it away; don't throw cigars, cigarettes and pipe ashes along the roadside; build small camp fires away from brush and small trees; never leave your camp fire unwatched; make sure your camp fire is dead (then bury it); keep in touch with forest rangers and fire wardens, and report all fires you may see, no matter how small; be as careful with fire while you are in wooded areas as you would be in your own home.

GOD'S INVENTORY OF THE CHURCH.

[Notes from a sermon by Rev. Roy C. Helfenstein, D. D., delivered on the evening of March 16th, at the opening exercises of Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va.]

"And there was given me a reed like unto a rod: and one said, rise, and measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein."—Rev. 11:1.

Following is a synopsis of his sermon. Speaking on the subject "God's Inventory of the Church," Dr. Helfenstein said in part:

"In the interest of business efficiency, commercial concerns take their annual inventory to ascertain just what their assets are and to determine what progress has been made.

It is highly appropriate and greatly beneficial for Churches to take an inventory from time to time relative to their material and spiritual assets to ascertain the progress they have made and to vindicate their right to existence. God is taking such an inventory of each Church—"One said, rise and measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein."

God is supremely concerned about what kind of a building His people use in which to worship Him. He has reason to be concerned, because the building in which people worship is called "His House." To call a building the house of God, and then to permit it to be unworthy of Him, when a congregation is able to make it worthy, is a gross injustice to Him. The building in which a congregation is satisfied to worship God reflects their devotion or their lack of devotion to God. It is a sad reflection on the faith of a congregation to be content with anything less for God's house than they would be satisfied with for their own homes. Nothing is too good for God. Nothing is too good for God's house. The old saying, "You can worship God in any kind of a building," is one of the pernicious half-truths. Such a contention is usually but a camouflage of selfishness, by people who want the best in their own homes, but who think that anything is good enough for the Church.

God expects that the building in which a congregation worships Him shall be the best they can afford, and that His people will have at least as much pride in their Church and its furnishings as they have in their home. "Measure the temple of God." Does it give testimony of a worthy love? Is it worthy of the blessings God has bestowed upon the families of the congregation? Is it worthy of the faith they profess?

The Church building itself has a spiritual significance. To every passerby and to all the residents of a community or city, the building in which a congregation is satisfied to worship bears constant testimony of the congregation's love for God, and their devotion to His kingdom.

As the angel of God measures the Christian Temple of Norfolk, he will find that its lines of beauty, its careful construction, its adequate conveniences, its furnishings, and equipment speak eloquently of the love and sacrifice of a congregation "whose hearts God has touched" and who were determined that the building in which they shall worship God should be the very best possible. Indeed, this building is an honor to God, a tribute to the congregation and a credit to the city of which it is a part.

God is not only concerned about the kind of building in which a congregation worships Him—that it shall be the best they can afford, and that it shall be worthy of their love and their faith—but He is also concerned about the altar within. "Measure the temple of God, and the altar."

The altar of the Church is not merely a railing and cushion step in the front of the Church. It is more than a place where people may kneel for prayer or Communion. The altar is the prayer-life and the prayer-emphasis of a Church. God is concerned about measuring the altar. What importance does the congregation attach to prayer? Is the Church the trysting place for the soul to meet in close contact with God, or is the Church merely a common meeting-place for the members to renew their acquaintance with each other?

The altar of a Church is even more than the prayer-life, the prayer-emphasis of a congregation. It is the spirit of the Church—the esprit de corps; that indefinable something that causes visitors at worship to realize that they are truly in the house of God. The altar also stands for the sacrificial service the Church is seeking to render. The altar of a Church, its practice of prayer, its devotion in worship, and its zeal in service to humanity, and in seeking to bring God into every relationship of life, is of supreme importance. In fact, it is this that makes a Church. Without a passion for God and for souls, and without a social ardor, a congregation cannot meet God's requirement. Any Church that has such is bound to make its impact upon the community or the city of which it is a part.

But it is not enough to measure the house of worship, and the altar or the spirit and service of a congregation. God asks for an inventory of the worshipers themselves. "Measure the temple of God, the altar and them that worship therein."

What kind of lives do the people live who call Christ Saviour and Lord? How much enthusiasm do they have for God? How much enthusiasm do they have for righteousness or right living? Are they merely serving themselves, or are they planning for service to future generations? The character of the individual members of a Church is of the greatest concern to God. And the character of the members of a congregation, their daily conduct in life, their sincerity of purpose, have more to do with the progress of the kingdom of God than has the building in which they worship and the altar within. What kind of lives do the people live? How much love for each other, and for humanity, do they have? How much loyalty to the Church, the denomination and the kingdom of God? How dependable are they in every call to duty? What is their endurance in facing opposition? How much of a forgiving spirit do they practice? How far are they willing to go to right a wrong? How anxious are they to co-operate with each other and with the other Churches of Christ in every good enterprise?

When God takes this inventory of our lives, what does He find? A Church does not receive its power from without, except as it generates power from within. A united congregation is God's point of contact to make known His power. Religion is more than a place of worship. It is more than prayer and worship and service to others. It is the presence of God in the lives of men and women—and this alone gives meaning to prayer and worship, and makes true service possible.

Foolishly, some men have thought that religion is a statement of belief, or a true definition of God, etc. But you can no more dispel the darkness of doubt and moral weakness by definitions of God, no matter how true those definitions may be, than you can light a room or propel a street car by exact definitions of electricity. Christ enthroned in the lives of those who call Him Lord and Saviour is the only answer God has to a world which is asking for an evidence to the validity of faith. The world is not so much concerned in knowing what we believe about Christ, but it wants to know how much we believe Him, how much we are willing to trust Him. Thousands have boldly contended for the faith, and then lived lives that ignobly denied it. God is not concerned so much about having an inventory taken of the various brands of theologies present in any congregation. Theologies are what men argue about, but religion is what men live by. How much of Christ, how much of His spirit, how much of His love, how much of His courage, how much of His good will, how much of His zeal for God do the people have? What is the limit to which they will go for Him? That is the question! What is your answer for Christian Temple?

MT. OLIVET CHURCH.

On Thursday night, April 10th, we closed a revival meeting at Mt. Olivet Church, Rockingham County. Notwithstanding the fact that the weather was unfavorable during most of the two weeks thatt he meeting was in progress, the attendance was very good, the size of the congregations increasing with each service until the last.

Although this was the first evangelistic meeting this Church has had in three years, and although the pastor had no one to assist him besides the Lord, much interest was manifested. There were six additions to the Church as a result of the meeting—five new converts and one coming from Bethel Christian Church.

This is one of the mission Churches of the Valley Conference. The membership, which is small, is composed, for the most part, of ladies. The building and the site are both too small. Bro. E. Herring, one of the few male members and one who loves the Christian Church and the Master's cause, has recently purchased a good, commodious Church building from the M. E. Church near Mt. Olivet, together with the furniture, fixtures, carpet and organ; and also an acre of land on the Harrisonburg-Elkton Pike, near the present site of Mt. Olivet Church. As soon as this new Church building can be moved to the new site, it is Bro. Herring's purpose and plan to deed the new Church, ground and equipment to the Mt. Olivet Christian Church. He hopes to get it ready for dedication some time this summer or early fall.

The night our recent meeting closed, the people of this fine community gave the pastor one of the biggest "poundings" he has ever received. Not only the members of our Church contributed to this pounding, but the members of the other denominations represented in the community and people who are not members of any Church gave with equal liberality. The many good things given, consisting of almost everything usually found in a person's pantry, were too numerous to mention by items in this brief article. Suffice it to say that I had about all I could bring home on my new Ford touring car. My family and I cannot thank these good people enough for so generously remembering us in this very helpful way. May our Heavenly Father abundantly bless the entire Church and community.

"ALL SCRIPTURE IS GIVEN BY INSPIRATION OF GOD."

(2 Timothy 3:16.)

By Rev. L. T. Wilds, Jr.

The Bible definition of inspiration is: "Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost" (2 Pet. 1:21). By saying that the Bible is inspired, we mean that it is in-spirited: the Spirit of God is in and through it all; it was all written under His gracious influence, with the result that we have something that is final, about which there can be no argument—God says so, and therefore it is so.

If any error is found in the Bible, it has crept in by the copying and translating of it as it has been handed down from generation to generation. And competent scholarship assures us that we have nine hundred and ninety-nine of every thousand of the original words of the New Testament and approximately the same of the Old.

We do not think that the Holy Spirit used the writers as mere machines, but gave free play to their different natures, temperaments, capacities: if the man was a Hebrew, he wrote Hebrew; if a Greek, he wrote Greek; if a man of logical mind, he wrote like Paul; if a man of emotional nature, he wrote like the Apostle John.

"All Scripture is given by inspiration of God." There are those who say that inspiration does not pertain to historical and scientific statements of the Bible, only to its religious teachings, and that therefore we need not be concerned if any of its historical or scientific references are found to be incorrect, as that does not affect the Bible as a Book of religion. Paul says all of it is inspired. For example, he calls attention to the fact that "seed" (Gen. 3:15) is the singular number (Gal. 3:16), showing that he considered the very words of the Bible to be inspired.

If there is any conflict between history and science and the Bible, it is due to the fact that error crept into the Bible through the handing it down during the thousands of years past or else to the fact that history and science have not yet come to a knowledge of the truth. The study of archaeology, the unearthing of monuments three thousand years old, is proving disputed historical statements of the Bible to be correct. Thus God is making the very stones to cry out and bear their testimony to the truth of His Word. Professor Dana, of Yale, has said that there is such harmony between modern science and the Genesis account of the creation that he was convinced that no man could have written Genesis without divine illumination. They said that Jeremiah conflicted with astronomy because he said the stars cannot be numbered; but they found that he was right when powerful telescopes were turned upon the heavens, revealing millions of solar systems like ours. They say that the Bible conflicts with the Copernican theory because it speaks of the rising and setting of the sun; but the Bible was simply using the language of men—scientists of today speak of the rising and setting of the sun, though they know that it neither rises nor sets.

We wish to indicate briefly some reasons for believing that the Bible is the Word of God.

The Men Who Wrote it Claim that Their Words Were God's.

The writers of the Old Testament styled themselves prophets of God, and the word means literally one who speaks for another. When Moses objected that he was slow of speech, God told him that He would give him Aaron to be his prophet or spokesman. They claimed to be the spokesmen of God. Moreover, the expression, "Thus saith the Lord," or its equivalent, occurs some two thousand times in the Old Testament.

New Testament writers bear testimony to the writers of the Old Testament. Paul says, "Well spake the Holy Ghost by Easias (Isaiah) that prophet unto our fathers." Peter says, "Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." And how frequently did Jesus Himself quote from the Old Testament, thereby setting His imprimatur upon it. "And beginning at Moses and all the prophets, He expounded unto them in all the scriptures the things concerning Himself."

And what did the New Testament writers claim for themselves? Paul says, "Which things also we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth." John says, "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the Churches."

What did these writers of the Bible have to back such a tremendous claim? God delegated to them the power to work the works of God; the miracles that they wrought were their heavenly credentials. Moses wanted to know how he was going to make the people believe that he was speaking for God, and God gave him the power to do the supernatural. Their possession of the power of God was the proof that they were speaking the words of God.

Their claim was backed also by their noble characters. True, they were not perfect men; but with all of their faults it would be hard to find nobler characters than Moses and David and Paul and John and the others. Indeed, one of the strongest proofs of the honesty and truthfulness of these men is that they recorded their own failures and sins. Fiction covers up the faults of its heroes; God's Word lays them bare.

These men willingly suffered persecution unto the death for what they claimed to be the truth of God; and that fact is a strong indication of their honesty and sincerity. The only objection that might be offered is that, while they were sincere in believing, they were speaking for God, they were simply deluded. But they were not men of the character to be easily deluded; they were not idle dreamers, peculiar, idiosyncratic; they were sound, sensible, practical, men of common sense—men like Moses the peerless leader, and David the king, and Paul the apostle.

Two Facts About the Bible that Cannot be Explained Otherwise.

The first of these is the unity of the Bible. There are 66 books, written by some 40 writers, living centuries apart (covering a period of some 1,500 years); and yet these 66 books, when thrown together, constitute just one book of which they are as 66 chapters—one book with one great central character—God—and one great theme—salvation. How are you going to explain this phenomenon, except that back of the minds of all was one mind—the mind of God the Holy Spirit?

The other fact is the prophecies of the Bible. What mind but God's has the power to look into the future and predict its detailed events? No man can tell what shall be even on the morrow. He can guess at it and sometimes hit it right, but that is all. There are some 666 prophecies in the Old Testament, half of which point to Jesus Christ and in due time fulfilled to the letter. Back of these prophecies must have been the omniscient mind of God.

The Godly Character of the Contents of the Bible.

We could spend many lifetimes on this fact alone.

All the way through, we are led to exclaim, "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God!"

The ethics of the Bible by far excels that of Aristotle, the greatest of human moralists.

There is nothing in all uninspired literature for comforting and quieting the human heart like the twenty-third psalm.

What human author has ever imagined a character that can compare to the central character of this Book, the Man of Nazareth, who is more glorious than any other as the sun is more glorious than any star.

Coleridge said: "I know the Bible is inspired, because it finds me at greater depths of my being than any other book."

President Woodrow Wilson sent this message to the American soldier during the world war: "When you have read the Bible, you will know that it is the Word of God, because you will have found it to be the key to your own heart, your happiness and your own duty."

"Hold it reverently, for you have a living book in your hand; speak to it, and it will answer you; bend down and listen—you shall hear in it the heart-throbs of God."

Its Influence Upon Men and Women.

It proves itself to be the Word of God because it has wrought the works of God.

Consider its power in transformed character and life. No man has ever said that he was transformed by reading Shakespeare or Tennyson and the like; millions have testified that they have been made new men through the influence of the Bible.

When our forefathers landed at Jamestown, Va., they buried in the earth a copy of the Bible, thereby signifying that upon it they would build a new nation. And all that is great and glorious in American history and life is due to those whose inspiration and rule of life has been the Word of God.

Wendell Phillips says: "The answer to the Shastas is India, to Confucianism is China, to the Koran is Turkey, to the Bible is the Christian civilization of Europe and America."

The best external witness to the Bible as the Word of God is just Christianity, which is "the salt of the earth" that keeps it from quick moral decay, and which has been the prime mover in everything that is for the betterment of humanity —all charitable institutions, all just and humane laws, the elevation of woman from a slave to her rightful position in society, every struggle for civil and religious liberty. They all have found their inspiration in the high mountain-levels of Bible teaching.

We might well add to the above the testimony of the hearts of millions of the sanest and soundest and best of earth that this book appeals to them as the very truth of God. "The Spirit Himself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God. And does He not bear witness with our spirit also that the words of the Bible are His words?

Years ago, Robt. G. Ingersoll, in one of his lectures, predicted that twenty-five years later the Bible would have been consigned to oblivion except by a few white-haired women. One who heard him make that statement said that twenty-five years later he was in England and visited the Oxford Press, where he was told that they were turning out that year 12,000,000 copies of the Bible. The American Bible Society is turning out copies of the gospels at the rate of 10,000 an hour; and the Bible is published today in 770 dialects or languages, and is the most widely read Book in all the world.

It has been likened to a fire-proof safe that has come through many fires, but with every document in its place and without even the smell of fire upon it.

"Last eve I paused beside a blacksmith's door
And heard the anvil ring the vesper chime;
Then looking in, I saw upon the floor
Old hammers worn with beating years of time.
"And so, I thought, the anvil of God's Word
For ages skeptic blows have beat upon;
Yet though the noise of falling blows was heard,
The anvil is unharmed—the hammers gone."

Topic: "Jehoida's Victory Over Baal."

Lesson: 1 Kings 14:21-15:24, 22; 2 Kings 11:12.

Devotional Reading: Psalm 1.

Golden Text: "Be strong in the Lord, and in the strength of His might."—Eph. 6:10.

"They built high places and images and groves on every high hill and under every green tree. And there were Sodomites in the land." In these words, the writer gives us a picture of the religious conditions in the time of Rehoboam. Needless to say, all this was contrary to the spirit of the worship of Jehovah and a direct violation of the commandments. Such worship was formal, materialistic, and grossly indecent and immoral.

Things were not much better under Abijah or Abijam, the son of Rehoboam. For "he walked in the sins of his father." But when Asa, the son of Abijah, came to the throne, things took a turn for the better. Asa "did that which was right" and instituted sweeping reforms in Judah. He took away the Sodomites and removed all the idols. He even removed his mother because she had made an idol in a grove. But—how often that little word "but" ruins things!—"but the high places were not removed." The reform had not been thorough; there had been a compromise.

Jehoshapaht, Asa's son, was also better than the average king of Judah. "He feared God and did well for his kingdom. He sent priests and Levites to each city to instruct the people in the law, and he set himself sternly against idol-worship." For the most part, he devoted himself to the service of his kingdom and was a good ruler.

His son Jehoram was as worthless as he was wicked. Like many other men, he wrecked his life by marrying the wrong kind of woman. She was none other than Athaliah, the daughter of Ahab and the famous and infamous Jezebel. Thus Jehoram brought to the court and into his life the degrading influences of Baal worship. He even went so far as to build a temple in Jerusalem for his deity. His son Ahaziah was no better. He could not be expected to be much better, for he was under the evil influence of Athaliah, the queen-mother.

When Ahaziah died, Athaliah, with some of the insight, ambition, courage and deviltry of her mother Jezebel, made bold to seize the throne and to establish herself as queen. She put to death, as she thought, all the heirs apparent to the throne. But as is always the case, evil never fully achieves its goal, for Jehosheba, the daughter of King Jehoram, hid Joash, then a baby of one year, in one of the storage rooms of the temple and kept him there for six years. She was aided in this strategy by Jehoiada the priest, who aroused the sympathy and enlisted the support of leaders of the people, and on an appointed day, and in full accord with the wishes of the people, Joash was brought forth and crowned as king. Athaliah, hearing the acclamations of the people, rushed into the temple shouting, "Treason! treason!" She was rushed out again and slain by the guards.

Joash served Jehovah during the early years of his reign. He found in Jehoiada a faithful and a wise counselor, and a loyal servant of Jehovah. Reforms were instituted, and the temple was repaired after a long delay. Later, Joash departed from the way of the Lord and died a tragic death.

Some Teaching Points.

1. When God has a purpose to work out, He has instruments or persons at hand by which His purposes shall be accomplished.
2. No evil work can be so well done that nothing remains to haunt the evildoer.
3. A negation without a corresponding affirmation is of no avail for spiritual purposes.
4. God's house ought to be kept in repair.
5. Unknown and obscure persons have done immeasurable service for God.
6. There must be no compromise with evil.
7. "Sin let loose, speaks punishment at hand."
8. Past service is no guarantee of Jehovah's favor if one departs from Jehovah's way.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

May 11, 1924.

Topic: "Being a Christian in the Home." (Mothers' Day.)

Lesson: Eph. 6:1-4; Luke 2:19, 52.

Daily Readings: Marks of a Christian.—Gal. 5:22-26. A worthy home life.—Eph. 4:1-6. Christian tenderness.—Eph. 4:29-32. Tempered tempers.—Jas. 3:1-18. Christian youth.—Luke 2:41-52. Home sense.—1 Pet. 5:5-11.

"There is no place like home." No matter where we are, or how much we have, there is no place like a real home. Of course, there are some people who never go home until they have no other place to go, but that is a reflection on either the persons themselves or the kind of home they have. Right-thinking men and women and boys and girls know that there is no place like home.

But there is a great deal of difference between a home and a house. A house may be ever so large and luxuriously furnished, and yet not be a home. And a house may be ever so small and poorly furnished and yet be the finest kind of home. Home is not so much a matter of size and things as it is a matter of spirit. As the poet has said:

"Home's not merely four square walls,
Though with pictures hung and gilded;
Home is where affection calls—
Filled with shrines the heart has builded."

And as our popular poet, Edgar A. Guest, has said: "It takes a heap of livin' in a house to make it a home."

Home is not only a great place. It is a most strategic place. It is here that children spend their earliest years, and hence their most impressionable years. It is here that they form their habits—habits that often persist through life and make or mar their destiny. It is here that they learn the great lesson of how to live with others, or failing to learn that lesson, go out into the world wrong with themselves and a nuisance to everybody else. It is here that they learn the great fundamental things of life, and later years only develop and enlarge what they have learned in the home. Home is the foundation of the nation, and the most strategic place in the whole world so far as character and ideals are concerned.

It goes without saying, then, that our homes ought to be the very best places we can possibly make them. And the only salvation for our boys and girls is to grow up in a Christian home. The Christian home is the solution to many and practically all the problems that confront the world today. Being a Christian in the home is, therefore, a most timely and most practical topic.

Being a Christian in the home is perhaps the hardest test of Christianity. It is easy enough for boys and girls to be good when they are in Church or out in company or with their sweethearts. But it is not so easy sometimes, or at least it does not seem so easy, to be a Christian—that is, to be like Christ, for that is what being a Christian involves: trying to be like Christ—in the home among the people with whom we live every day, and of whom we see so much. If a person can be a Christian in the home, he can be a Christian anywhere.

The question which each one of us should ask is this: "What would Jesus do in the home if He were in my place?" or "What would Jesus have me to do in my home?" If each one of us Christian Endeavorers will think about our own homes and our own lives, we will probably, yea most assuredly, discover many things that we must not do, and many things we must do, if we are to be Christians in the home.

In order to make the topic practical and specific, I have submitted a list of questions for discussion. Have members of the society discuss these questions.

1. Why is it important to have a Christian home?
2. What difference would it make in the community if the homes were Christian?
3. What would being a Christian in the home involve for a father?
4. A mother?
5. A brother?
6. A sister?
7. A servant?
8. What place would the family altar have in a Christian home?
9. What can a Christian Endeavorer do to help make his home a Christian home?
10. What responsibility do older brothers and sisters have as Christians in the home?

"A drunkard said to his daughter: 'Why do you stand me, and endure my habits and my tongue?' She answered: 'I love you.' And that sacrifice of love won him."

Being a Christian in the home ought to make us (1) more thoughtful of others, (2) more kind, (3) more patient, (4) more forgiving, (5) more obedient, (6) more sacrificial, (7) more given to co-operation.

Did you know that the Herald of Gospel Liberty, Dr. Alva M. Kerr, editor, is one of the most-often-quoted religious journals in the country? If you can subscribe for two Church papers, make Dr. Kerr's paper your second. The Sun should, of course, be first, and is in our Southern Church.

INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL SCHOOLS FOR LEADERSHIP TRAINING.

By Dr. H. Shelton Smith.

Their Past.

The first International Training School at Lake Geneva, Wisconsin, was held in 1912, and it had only eleven graduating classes. Yet out of these eleven classes, this mother school has contributed to the cause of Christian education, three International Council superintendents, twenty-nine state general secretaries, sixty four divisional superintendents, twelve city and county secretaries, to say nothing of the great number of volunteer State and county officers and scores of teachers and administrators of local Church schools. This is a record that few educational agencies in this country could equal or even approach. Last summer, at the close of the school, forty-five students from twenty States received their diplomas and went back to their homes to become specialists in all phases of work in the modern Church school.

The work at Lake Geneva has proved so effective that two other schools have had to be organized, one in the East and another in the Far West, to provide for a large number of students who want to equip themselves for greater usefulness in behalf of the childhood and youth of this generation.

Their Purpose.

With the merger of the International Sunday School Association and the Sunday School Council of Evangelical Denominations, at Kansas City, Mo., in 1922, the purpose of the new International Council of Religious Education was subsequently enlarged to serve both denominational and territorial interests in religious education. Our International Training Schools are, therefore, now charged with the additional responsibility of providing training for denominational workers as well as those engaged in the service of the International Council and its auxiliaries. The action of the International Council, taken in 1923, reads: "Just as the International Council of Religious Education is an interdenominational organization in which both the denominational and the territorial groups are represented, so the International Council Schools should be interdenominational schools." The courses offered and the instructors secured are in keeping with this action. All three International Schools exist to train men and women for Christian service in every phase of religious education.

Their Location.

These schools offer the opportunity of outdoor life amid rare and beautiful natural surroundings. Geneva Glen is situated in the Rocky Mountain range, at the foothills of Turkey Creek Canyon, twenty-eight miles west of Denver, Col. The camp site is nearly seven thousand feet above sea level, and the moment one steps from his cottage he may begin the ascent of rugged mountainsides. The nearly one hundred acres of mountain and meadow land, on which have recently been built four-room cabins, assembly-halls and other housing equipment sufficient to take care of about one hundred and fifty students and faculty, representing an investment of $60,000.

A more desirable spot could not be found in the United States for holding a summer school than Conference Point-on-Lake Geneva, Wis. Located on the most prominent point on the northwest shore of Lake Geneva, students are afforded a majestic view of Williams Bay. Lake Geneva is known afar as the Galilee of North America. An extended shore line, with rare boating and bathing facilities, welcomes lovers of "God's great out-of-doors." The Geneva properties, consisting of forty acres of wooded land with tents, cottages and administration buildings sufficient to accommodate four hundred students and faculty, are valued at $250,000.

Geneva Point is located on Lake Winnipesaukee, N. H., fifteen miles from the nearest railroad station. A three-hour boat ride completes the journey to camp. Over two hundred acres of meadow and woods bordering on a three-mile shore line offer New England campers unending opportunities for hiking, swimming and open-air diversion. The scenic White Mountains and the far-reaching Ossipees constitute a charm and sheer natural beauty too picturesque for description. Those who have visited this site in former years have no hesitancy in pronouncing it one of the most fascinating summer resorts in the United States. Cottages, tents and administration buildings will accommodate approximately one hundred and fifty students and faculty.

Their Program.

The International Council will offer for the first time next summer the new advanced training course, which is of college grade, and has been approved by the International Council and the Sunday School boards of the co-operating denominational bodies. It goes beyond the standard training course and provides unquestioned opportunity for those who are preparing to undertake more extensive courses in educational leadership. Those who have completed the standard course will find it greatly to their advantage in beginning the new advanced course. Students, however, who have other qualifications and have not taken all, or any, of the standard training course units may register in these schools with profit.

The subjects offered in all three schools for 1924 are designed to cover every aspect of religious education touching both the needs of the local Church and those of the community at large. Officers and teachers of local Churches, directors of religious education and superintendents of the larger units, who are interested in securing help on Bible study, the history and principles of religious education, the principles of curriculum-building, week-day schools of religion, vacation Church schools, principles and program of worship, religious dramatization and pageantry, principles and program of leadership as applied to the children's division, young people's division, and the adult division, will find their needs abundantly provided for in these schools.

The 1924 instructors constitute some of the most outstanding leaders in the field of religious education.

Their Dates.

The dates of the International Schools for the summer of 1924 are as follows:

Geneva Glen, Col.—June 30th to July 18th.

Lake Geneva, Wis.—July 21st to August 7th.

Lake Winnipesaukee, N. H.—August 11th to 29th.

It will be seen that each school continues in session for sixteen week days and two Sundays.

Their Cost.

Each student will be charged a registration fee of five dollars ($5.00). All applications for registration should be accompanied by check or money order for this amount. Information blanks and registration cards may be secured from State council (association) offices or International Council headquarters.

Board and room may be had in each of the training schools for the entire duration of the school at the nominal cost of $30.00 with two in a room, and $36.00 with one in a room.

Their Future.

Religious education is becoming rapidly the most vital and urgent enterprise of the Church. Opportunities open to those of adequate training in this field are unlimited. The regular Sunday School will be in the future an agency demonstrating and receiving the best that capacity and training can provide. The daily vacation Bible school needs a new type of leadership. The week-day school of religion is one of the most promising movements on the horizon for the future, and its demands are continuous and insistent for a type of leadership that it is difficult at present to produce. The leadership for all of these tasks, in large numbers of trained people, does not exist today and must be trained for tomorrow. The International Schools recognize this challenge and gladly offer all their resources for the purpose of equipping strong men and women for the new day in Christian education. Their future is in the hands of the Protestant forces of North America.

The new International Training School Bulletin, which deals fully with such items as courses offered, faculty and conditions of entrance, will gladly be sent to any one interested upon request. Since the capacity of the schools is limited, those who may be interested should make application for registration at their earliest convenience. Registrations are already arriving daily. The International Council, 5 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago, stands ready to answer all requests for information promptly.

THE WORD OF GOD.

This Book contains the mind of God, the state of man, the way of salvation, the doom of sinners, and the happiness of believers. Its doctrines are holy, its precepts are binding, its histories are true, and its decisions are immutable. Read it to be wise, believe it to be safe, and practice it to be holy. It contains light to direct you, food to support you, and comfort to cheer you. It is the traveler's map, the pilgrim's staff, the pilot's compass, the soldier's sword, and the Christian's chart. Here paradise is restored, heaven opened, and hell disclosed. Christ is its grand object, our good its design, and the glory of God its end. Read it slowly, frequently and prayerfully. Let it fill the memory, rule the heart and guide the feet. It is a mine of wealth, a paradise of glory, and a river of pleasure. It is given you in life, will be opened in the judgment, and remembered forever. It involves the highest responsibility, will reward the highest labor, and condemn all who trifle with its sacred contents.—(Author unknown.)

Boy Scouts Unite.

The Boy Scouts of America, and the Lone Scouts were united at the Washington meeting recently. The union, however, is a personal union thus far, the officers being the same for both.

Fifteen years ago the Boy Scouts of America were incorporated by W. D. Boyce, the publisher. Six years later, to meet the need of the rural boy, who could not have the benefit of the troop, he incorporated the Lone Scouts of America. Mr. Boyce did this at his own expense. Later he asked other interested men to assist, and found them ready to do so. He says that he has long felt that the two should form one organization, since they exist for the same purpose, and now he has succeeded in some degree of arranging this union.

PRAYER AND MAN.

"Man ought always to pray, and faint not."—

To all comprehensive-thinking people, the necessity for constant and habitual and vital prayer needs no argument. It is the first native tendency and the deepest impulse of the soul, so much so that it has been taken for granted throughout all the ages. For all time man has been talking to God and God has been talking back to man; and for these ages all great men have been those whose hearts were open to God and whose lives were like an open door to the infinite. It has also been learned that he who does not pray deprives himself the highest function of the soul. These being the facts, should the question ever be raised as to the efficacy of prayer, much less to fail to make it a part of our life? Can it be that all the praying people of all the ages and races have been mistaken?

Prayer.—Our Father, Thou who hast created us prayerful beings and made this function of our souls first and foremost in our actions; and Thou who givest unto all who sincerely ask of Thee, and upraidest not, forbid that we shall neglect this blessing in our lives. Make high and holy desires supreme in us, and in the name of Jesus grant them. Forgive us and grant unto us free and open intercourse in our little family circle. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

TUESDAY.

CHARACTER CREED AND CONDUCT.

"Speak thou the things that become sound doctrine."—Titus 2:1.

Character, creed and conduct are closely related and interdependent. Character is what a man is, creed what he believes, conduct what he does. Creed is usually the outcome of character. Badness or goodness is the make-weight of intellectual opinion. The magnetic needle is disturbed by the iron in the vessel beneath it. Doctrinal preaching is sometimes disparaged. Ethical preaching is preferred. Doctrine is simply teaching, and people are always suffering and perishing for lack of knowledge. Ethics is simply the logical result in conduct of believing certain doctrines.

The relation between creed and conduct is that of cause and effect. Some suppose that if a man holds to certain doctrines he will surely be saved, no matter what kind of a life he lives. Others maintain that if a man's conduct conforms to certain standards, he cannot be lost, no matter what he believes or disbelieves. Both of these views are false in fact and mischievous in tendency. It makes a great deal of difference what a man believes and what kind of a life he lives. He is bound to believe the truth and to live in accordance with it. In the early Church, doctrine was made the test of fellowship.

Doctrine, however, is a means to an end, not an end in itself. That end is holy living. The scriptural method is to have pure doctrine first, and then a life in full accord therewith as becometh godliness.—Selected.

Prayer.—(Let the head of the family lead in the prayer, all joining in the Lord's Prayer at the close.)

WEDNESDAY.

DON'T BE A PIKER AT HOME.

"Herein I exercise myself to have a conscience void of offense . . ."—Acts 24:16.

Perhaps if you and your crowd did not give your approbation and a slap of approval to that fellow of your acquaintance whose wife is worrying over the actions of her husband, the man might change his ways.

Some men would rather stand high with the crowd than to be well thought of by the home-folk.

Thousands of men will lose $10 in a poker game and laugh about it, but if their wives bought $10 hats, which would be worn a whole season as against the poker loss in one evening, they would growl and grumble.

Are you one of these inconsistent individuals?

And here is another thing.

Is it not true that you will pay—insist upon paying—for the dinner for a friend or for the crowd, but you would say you could not spend an equal amount to buy a dinner for your family or to afford them an evening of amusement.

Some wives are so constituted that they do not

Perhaps there is no criterion by which to estimate a Christian's life, so just and so simple, as that of his fidelity to his own family. It is the most favorable soil for a man's graces. Neglect it and it is sure to grow a crop of weeds that will give trouble.

Prayer.—Our Father, so bring it about that our families may be to us after the fashion of the heavenly family. In our little circle compel our thoughts to rise up to the great Heavenly Father, and to the following of our Saviour until we shall be members of the great family. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

THURSDAY.

OUR DUTY TOWARDS OTHERS.

"Make straight paths for your feet, that that which is lame be not turned out of the way."—Heb. 12:13 (R. V.).

We do not live alone. Others depend upon us. We are an example to them. If our lives are good and true, they are strengthened. But if we are ruled by our passions, they, too, tend to drift. And they justify themselves by us.

Sometimes men go to destruction from the feeling that no one cares for them. If people should care for each other, then each must meet his own tests rightly and truly, for others follow him. If we considered less our own affairs and wishes, and more the welfare of others, it would be easier for us to do right. Possessed by love, our difficulties and afflictions would seem less; tasks would be lighter; hardship and sacrifice would be welcome. Anything would be possible to us for the helping of others. Desires and passions would fade away. The way of the Master was not gratification, but service. And service means straight paths for ourselves.—J. H. Mills.

Prayer.—(Pray that we may not be led away by our desires for pleasure, or by the lusts of the flesh, but that we may be good examples for others. Pray that our little ones may learn the value and importance of doing kindly acts at every opportunity, and that they may learn that the soul grows stronger and the character expands with experience in service for God.)

FRIDAY.

THE LORD ALWAYS VICTORIOUS.

Read Heb. 12:11-15.

"The Lord of Host shall be exalted."

To exalt the Lord of Host has been a great need of all the ages. There never was an age when it was more needed than now. Disregard for the work of the Lord is rampant.

Now, for the comfort and reassurance of those whose hearts are troubled, let me draw your attention to the adversative conjunction at the beginning of this passage. All the powers of darkness may conspire, "but" there is a limit to their machinations, for the thing that always has taken place will take place again, and "the Lord of Hosts shall be exalted."

How sad those men on the way to Emmaus, as they talk of the great disappointment which had so recently come to them and the others. "We hoped!" Those two words are like an impenetrable cloud over the future. And still God was in the shadow, and out of the darkness of that hour came the brightest dawn of all history. God's enemies and even some of His people forget to take into consideration "God's ultimate." And so, in this modern day, we should remember that it is— Beneath the shelter of Thy wing
The saints have dwelt secure;
Sufficient is Thine arm alone,
And our defense is sure."

—Rev. I. D. Lyttle.

SATURDAY.

ABOUNDING GRACE.

Read 2 Cor. 9:8-11.

"God is able to make all grace abound unto you."

What is abounding grace? The Greek meaning has the idea of an "overpouring" supply. The figure is that of a pitcher of water being poured out and the supply never exhausting.

If, as we wrote some time ago, God's grace is His mercy, His pardon, His favor, His kindness, His free and undeserved love, His repair power of the human soul—His abounding grace is the "overpouring of these things. He says, "My soul shall supply every need of yours by His riches in glory." To Paul, "My grace is sufficient for thee." No wonder Paul gloried in his infirmities. Every misfortune of his, every trial, every sorrow, every persecution was to him a special outpouring of God's grace. In Christ, trials and tribulations become windows of heaven for the outpouring of God's grace for us.

Prayer.—Our Father, "make bare Thine arm" in all our experiences, that Thy love may find supreme expression in us. Nail our sins to the cross, and wash us and make us whiter than snow. In His name we ask it. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"The Sabbath was made for man."—Mark 2:27.

A godlike observance of the Sabbath is necessary for our moral health. Moral conduct and character is influenced by the habit of resting from the more sordid cares and efforts of life. To so keep it, contributes to contentment, cheerfulness, clear judgment, sensitive conscience, strength and directness of will. While it is true that all of these things are to some extent dependent upon the health of the body, it is also true that none of these excellencies can reach their best or even be cultivated without regular opportunities for contemplation of moral truth and exalted ideals. Nations fail for the lack of this. France is a trite example. Blackstone said, "A corruption of morals usually follows a profanation of the Sabbath." Every nation that has kept the Sabbath according to the purposes with which it has been endowed has prospered. So it is with the individual. We do not need the superstition, rigor and restriction of our puritan fathers, but we do need more of love, more of singing, more of prayer, more of joy, more of honor to God, more of life. Pray for and practice these graces, and give thanks.

Prayer.—Our Father, give us a keen insight into the things of life for the Sabbath Day, things that bring harmony and develop the graceful and lovely faculties of the soul, and help us to consecrate every Sabbath to the purposes for which it was bestowed. For Christ's sake we ask it. Amen.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

Easter joys were many for the children at the Christian Orphanage. Sunday morning filled the hearts of the little girls with happiness when all of them were given a pretty little Easter dress that had been made by some tender-hearted mother whose heart was filled with loving sympathy for the little girl who received the dress and whose life was made joyful on the beautiful Easter morn. Our little folks looked real pretty Easter morning as they started off to Sunday School happy as little birds in a cherry tree.

On Easter Monday they had a good time, too. All the high school children went on their annual picnic and some of the boys went fishing, but they did not catch any, and the little tots had a big time hunting eggs. Mrs. J. D. Kernodle's Sunday School clas sfurnished eggs for the baby home children to have an egg hunt. For a number of years, Mrs. Walter Harden had charge of the Young People's class in the Graham Christian Church and always enjoyed giving our little children a joyful time on Easter. We regret that Mrs. Harden or Mrs. Kernodle neither could be present and enjoy the fun.

The young lady students of Elon College came over and added to the joys of the occasion by giving an egg hunt.

Pope's Chapel Sunday School also donated a crate of eggs to give the children an egg hunt. I only wish those who were so kind to the children could have been present and enjoyed the occasion. The Durham Ice Cream Company furnished cream for Easter without cost. We are grateful indeed.

Our Easter offerings have started off nicely, and all the Churches that have sent in have made the offering larger than last year. You will notice that we have passed our fifth mile-post this year. Twenty-two more to reach. We should count off at least three in the month of May.

The following have been sent in since our last report: Woman's Missionary Society, Burlington Church, N. C., 4 boxes candy Easter eggs; Ladies Aid Society, East End Christian Church, Newport News, Va., 58 yds. gingham, lawn and crepe, 14 dresses; Mrs. W. J. Ballentine, Fuquay Springs, N. C., 1 dress; Mrs. Dora Ballentine, Fuquay Springs, N. C., 1 dress; C. A. Ballentine, Fuquay Springs, N. C., 1 dress; Ladies' Aid Society, old Zion Church, Norfolk, Va., 58 dresses, 12 princess slips, 6 pr. bloomers, 3 blouses, 1 pr. pants, 4 boxes candy eggs; Mary Brinkley, Virginia Parker, Frances Williams, Easter toys for children; Woman's Missionary Society, Mt. Carmel Church, Va., 12 dresses, 26 yds. gingham; Mrs. G. D. Hunt, Wadley, Ala., 10 dresses, 2 boys' suits, underclothes, 3 towels; Ladies' Aid Society, Durham, N. C., 12 suits underwear, 2 slips, 2 boys' suits; Young People's Missionary Class, Graham Church, 1 basket eggs; Mrs. A. G. Massey, Secy., Dover, Del., 3 middy blouses, 1 slip, 5 dresses; Mr. and Mrs. G. J. Elkins, Burlington, 12 lbs. cake; Mrs. O. D. Henneman, Disputanta, Va., 1 dress; Mrs. W. A. Light, Logansport, Ind., 4 dresses, 1 sheet, 1 pr. pillow cases; Mrs. M. J. Lee, Suffolk, 2 dresses.

VARIETY.

Being a Y. M. C. A. representative in a European port seems to be a varied enough job for any one. The international scope of the association demands that all types of service be extended to people of all nations. The following extracts from workers' reports give some idea of what is done:

"Assisted two Russians suffering from trachoma. Sent a telegram for a Ruthenian. Advised two Roumanians. Procured shelter for a penniless Canadian. Secured room for an Estonian and gave advice to a German refugee. Helped two stranded Americans get home. Assisted a Hungarian waiting for money from America. Gave information to a young Austrian. Found accommodation for three Swiss."

At Havre, there are 150 Russians who will come to America better equipped than many other immigrants. When they arrived at the French port to embark for this country they were told that the Lithuanian and Russian quota was exhausted and that they could not sail until July. They were at a loose end until daily classes in English were suggested by the Y. M. C. A. man. Social games and other activities have also been organized for them.

OUR PLEDGES to Men and Millions are Sacred, Solemn and Binding.

These obligations were made through the Church to the Kingdom of God and to all that pertains to building up that Kingdom in the world, so far as our Christian Church is concerned. As Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has so pertinently pointed out: "A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations--'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42)--but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

Many are making great sacrifices to meet these obligations and pay these pledges. Every one who fails to do so not only produces paralysis in his own moral system, but to that extent paralyses the efforts and sacrifices that the faithful and the loyal make.

BEAR IN MIND MEN AND MILLIONS MEAN AND STAND FOR ALL THAT THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH MEANS AND STANDS FOR.

—REMEMBER—

that the fourth year ends April 30, 1924.

After that, we have only one more year in which to meet these obligations. Unless we put forth a mighty effort to pay some on these pledges during the last quarter of the fourth year, there is great danger that we will fail entirely, because of the bulk of our pledge looming up before us in a one-year period.

Paying SOMETHING by April 30, 1924, will make it easy to pay ALL by April 30, 1925. Where there is a will there is a way, and God always helps those who try to their capacity to help themselves.

EVERETT.

W. P. Everett, son of Jarrett and Virginia Everett and one of the most widely known citizens of Nansemond County, died at his home on January 31st at the age of 73 years. During his young manhood, he was married to Miss Alice Langston, to which union were born six children, four of whom survive. Since childhood he had been a member of Holy Neck Christian Church. He was much devoted to his Church, and was always faithful to the obligations of the Christian life. Until feeble health overtook him, he was seldom absent from the services, and his counsel was highly regarded by those with whom he was associated in the Church. He retained his interest in the affairs of the kingdom of His Lord to the last. He had been a reader of The Christian Sun for more than half a century.

Surviving are two sons, I. A. Everett, Gates, N. C., and T. L. Everett, Portsmouth, Va.; two daughters, Mrs. G. T. Langston and Mrs. Henry Langston, of Gates, N. C.; also one sister, Mrs. Sallie B. Lawrence, Gates, N. C., and eighteen grandchildren. As a leader in his community and a friend to all, he will be greatly missed. A faithful Christian has gone to his reward.

A large crowd assembled at his home on the day of the funeral to pay the last tribute of respect. Services were conducted by the writer.

Does Your Blood Need Iron?

How To Make The Test That Tells.

A PALE face, a nervous irritable disposition, a lack of strength and endurance—these are the warning signals that Nature gives when your blood is getting thin, pale, watery and starving for iron. Iron is constantly leaving the body, especially toward the period of middle age and you must make up for this iron deficiency if you want to escape disease and be strong and well.

When the iron in your blood runs low signs of old age creep into your system. In such cases ordinary iron-containing foods seldom supply a sufficient quantity of this important element to make up for the waste. Therefore, many physicians now prescribe a concentrated form of organic iron—Nuxated Iron—which contains iron like the iron in your blood.

If you are not sure of your condition, go to your doctor and have him take your blood-count, or else make the following test yourself: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired; next take two five-grain tablets of Nuxated Iron three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see how much you have gained. All good druggists sell Nuxated Iron, on the distinct understanding that if you are not satisfied your money will be refunded.

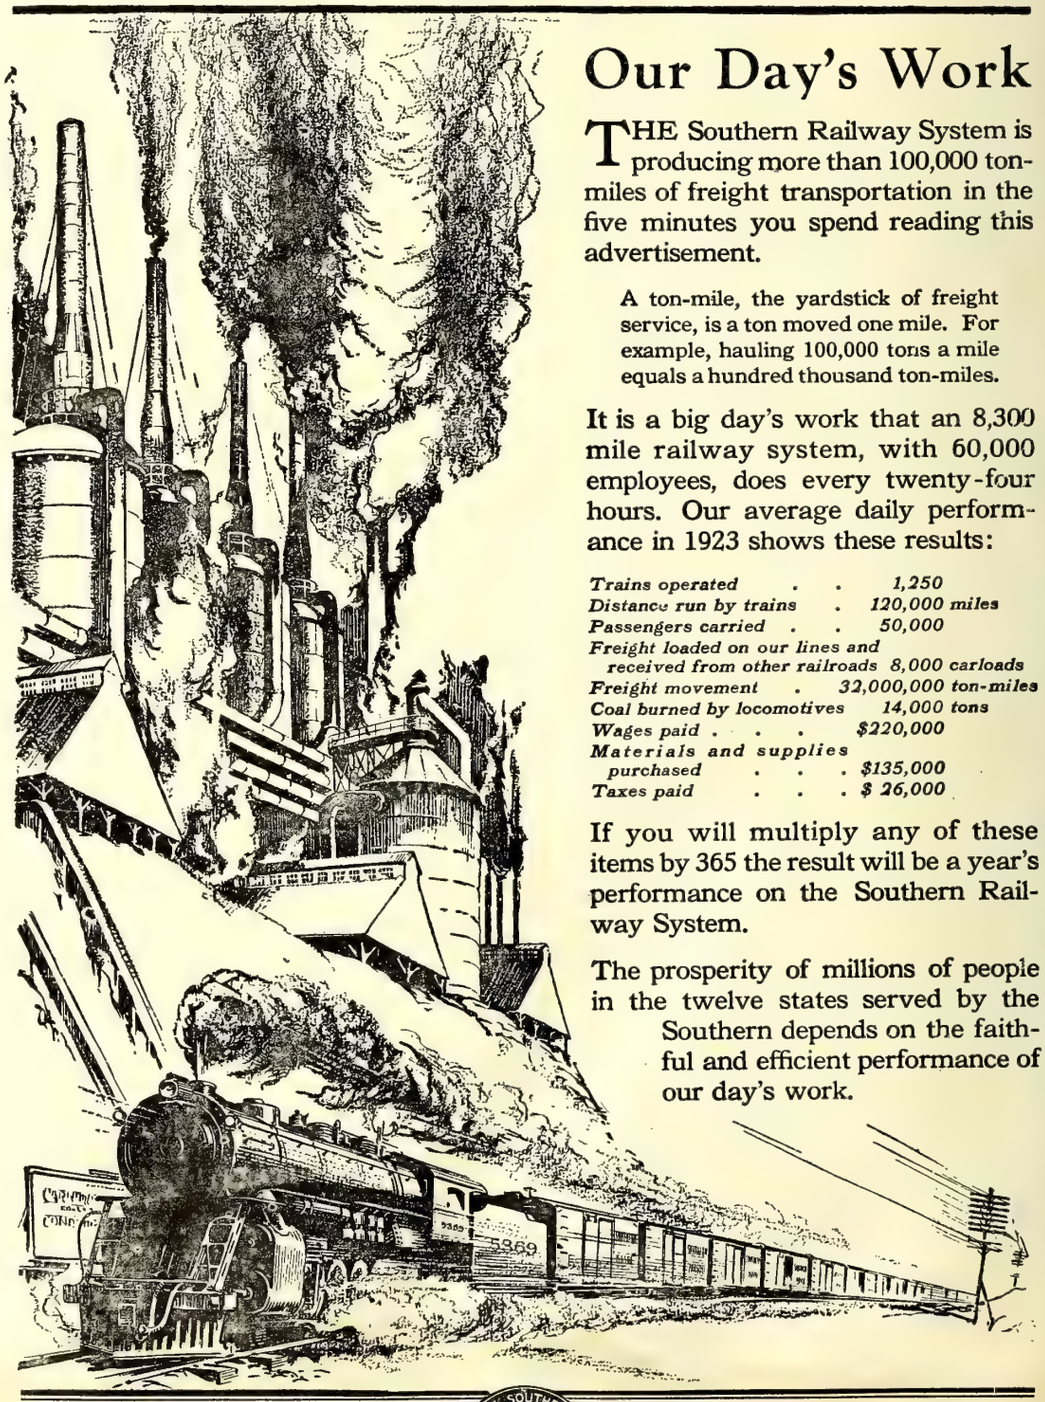
SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM



Our Day's Work

THE Southern Railway System is producing more than 100,000 ton-miles of freight transportation in the five minutes you spend reading this advertisement.

A ton-mile, the yardstick of freight service, is a ton moved one mile. For example, hauling 100,000 tons a mile equals a hundred thousand ton-miles.

It is a big day's work that an 8,300 mile railway system, with 60,000 employees, does every twenty-four hours. Our average daily performance in 1923 shows these results:

Trains operated	1,250
Distance run by trains	120,000 miles
Passengers carried	50,000
Freight loaded on our lines and received from other railroads	8,000 carloads
Freight movement	32,000,000 ton-miles
Coal burned by locomotives	14,000 tons
Wages paid	$220,000
Materials and supplies purchased	$135,000
Taxes paid	$ 26,000

If you will multiply any of these items by 365 the result will be a year's performance on the Southern Railway System.

The prosperity of millions of people in the twelve states served by the Southern depends on the faithful and efficient performance of our day's work.

A beautiful and lovely double wedding was celebrated at the home of the writer on Thursday evening at 7:30 o'clock when Mr. Dwight Brady and Miss Edna Moffitt, and Mr. Carl Pool and Miss Verta Phillips were each joined in matrimony. The writer wishes them many years of happiness. A. K. SCOTTEN.

Why Drugs Fail

Many chronic diseases fail to respond to drug treatment, even in the hands of the best physicians, whereas acute diseases usually respond readily. When a disease has become chronic, drugs often seem to do as much harm as they do good, for the system rebels against them. It is just this class of cases which derive the greatest benefit from drinking Shivar, America's best stomach, liver and kidney Water. If you suffer with chronic dyspepsia, indigestion, sick headache, rheumatism, kidney or liver disease, uric poisoning or other curable conditions due to impure blood, do not hesitate to accept the Spring's liberal offer as printed below. Their records show that only two in a hundred, on the average, have reported "no benefit." This is a wonderful record from a truly wonderful Spring. Sign the following letter:

Shivar Springs,
Box 16-H, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if I report no benefit you agree to refund the price of the water in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return within a month.

CARR—BALLARD.

A beautiful home marriage was celebrated on Sunday morning, April 6th, when Julian Carr and Catherine Lois Ballard were united in holy matrimony. The marriage took place at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Elisha Ballard, of Walters. Mr. Carr is the son of Mr. S. T. Carr and Mrs. Mary E. Carr; he is a prosperous farmer and highly respected by all that know him. Miss Ballard is the daughter of Mr. Elisha Ballard and Mrs. Doria Ballard. She is a young girl, of a very high Christian character, and much loved by all.

Both of them live in Walters. They are faithful members of Mt. Carmel Christian Church and are known by all to be some of the very best young people of Walters. They have a host of relatives and friends, who wish them a long and happy life. The marriage ceremony was performed by the writer, in the presence of many relatives and friends.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By Rev. S. M. Lynam.

Russia Gets Seminaries.—

The second of the ten theological seminaries to be erected in Russia by the American Churches opened for work at Lenigrad, formerly Petrograd, recently. Others are to follow as rapidly as possible, and all are to be located at strategic points throughout the Russian domain.

Quakers Set Precedent.—

The Society of Friends, in their Philadelphia meeting, early in April set a precedent. For the first time in 244 years, men and women were permitted to meet together. The Quakers have long advocated woman's rights and have long had women ministers, but not until the last meeting of the society did they permit the sexes to join in the same meeting. More than twelve hundred delegates attended the Philadelphia meeting.

An Eastern Woman Judge.—

According to a dispatch from Prague, Dr. Jarmilia Vessela is acting as judge in the new republic of Czecho-Slovakia. Dr. Vessela is the first woman to hold the position of judge in that country. Not many years ago it would have been impossible for a woman to have held such a place of trust and honor. The world moves steadily forward along the lines of progress. Civilization may be judged by the treatment of its women, and that thermometer is a true index to the advance of the world.

Another Amendment.—

An amendment to the Constitution of the United States has been proposed, and has passed the House of Representatives. The amendment provides for child-labor regulations by the Federal government. The child-labor laws of the Federal government have all been declared unconstitutional, which makes an amendment necessary. The proposed measure would empower Congress to regulate or prohibit child labor up to the age of eighteen years. The amendment passed the House by fifty-eight more than the required two-thirds.

University Mission School.—

The extension department of the University of Chicago is to give a series of classes and lectures on the subject of missions. The course is to begin on May 29th, and will be held once each week for the succeeding six weeks. Many of the strongest members of the university faculty are scheduled for this work, and the program promises great things.

The Church is waking to the immensity and the dignity of its missionary task when a great university finds interest strong enough to demand a regular course for the study and discussion of missions.

Clemenceau Changes Vocation.—

Former French Premier Clemenceau, at the advanced age of eighty-three, has just completed a play, it is announced. The ability of this eminent statesman to change his lifework at such a remarkable age is astonishing. It is also indicative of a superior mind, which has held leadership for him through the multiplicity of variations attendant upon the French government during his life.

Governor McCray Sentenced.—

Former Governor Warren T. McCray, of Indiana, has been sentenced to ten years' imprisonment in the Atlanta Penitentiary and fined $10,000. Governor McCray was charged with misappropriation of State funds. He admitted the misappropriation, but denied that he did it with bad intention. He was also charged with attempting to use the mails to defraud. He resigned the office of Governor of Indiana after his conviction. His resignation took effect at 10 o'clock on April 30th. At that hour, Lieutenant-Governor Emmett F. Branch was sworn into office. Federal Judge A. B. Anderson imposed the sentence.

Women to Study Peace.—

The League of Women for Peace and Better International Relations is meeting in Washington May 1st to 7th. Miss Jane Addams is president of the league. The program provides for a discussion of many phases of the peace problem, and it ought to result in great good. Following the Washington meeting, the women are to conduct a summer school in Chicago. At this summer school the "Human Factors in World Peace" are to be carefully studied. The cost is to be placed at a minimum, so that as many as possible may attend. These movements must result in an education which will ultimately fruit in world peace.

Mission Funds Increase.—

The mission funds of the Presbyterian Church have undergone a phenomenal increase. The final figures have not been made public, but it is stated that enough has been collected to take care of the present budget adequately. Due to the fact that the Presbyterians faced a deficit of a million dollars, and already owed more than seven hundred thousand, it was thought best to curtail expenditures. It was necessary to cut the mission budget some 20 per cent. This deficit has now been cared for, and it is believed that money sufficient to care for the damages of the Japanese earthquake is now available.

This increase in giving is not confined to the Presbyterian Church. It is true of all the evangelical Churches except the Methodist. The interest in missions seems to be more widespread than ever before.

A Missionary Back at Home.—

Dr. Schweitzer has returned to his work in Africa. He is a well-known theologian and musician, and gave up a most brilliant career for mission work among the negroes of French Africa. His work was interrupted by the World War, and the ill health of his wife has made an earlier return impossible. He has spent his time completing his "History of Civilization," and in giving organ recitals all through Europe to raise money for a hospital in the province in which he works. Westminster was crowded when he gave his Bach recital in London. He is attended by an Oxford University graduate, who will serve as a general helper, and aid in the perfecting of Dr. Schweitzer's English.

General Carr Dies.—

General Julian S. Carr, Durham, N. C., died at Chicago on April 29th. General Carr is one of the best-known North Carolina citizens. He was a most excellent business man and a philanthropist. In his passing, the State and the nation have sustained a great loss. The body of the general will be returned to Durham for burial. The funeral ceremony is to be very simple.

General Carr declined the nomination for Governor of North Carolina in 1896. He preferred always to be a plain citizen. It was he who secured the removal of Trinity College to Durham, and who donated the land on which the college now stands. It is in keeping with the character of the man that he wanted his friends to send no flowers to his funeral, but to give the money in books to the Durham public library on the flyleaf of which should be written "To the memory of Julian S. Carr."

National Forests and Monuments.—

There are twenty-nine national monuments in the United States which have been created by presidential proclamation. These monuments mark historic places and are places and objects of historic and scientific interest. These monuments keep alive the American traditions, and breathe life into the American spirit.

There are 146 national forests in the United States. Ten million people visited these forests last year. It is an excellent thing that the national government is doing in preserving these forests when those in private control are being despoiled so rapidly and ruthlessly. The American people must keep many trees if this is to be a productive land, and trees mean birds and animals, of which we can scarcely have too many. Trees and birds and flowers minister to the souls of men as well as to their bodies, and all the Christians of this fair land should join in keeping it fair.

NOTES-PERSONALS

CONVENTION BRIEFS.

A strong stand was taken by the Convention on law enforcement. Resolutions were prepared to be sent to Congress.

There were ministers living within the greater Norfolk area who never looked in on the Convention. It was a pity.

There was great regret that illness kept Dr. J. P. Barrett, Rev. Geo. D. Eastes, and Rev. B. F. Black from the Convention.

The Convention voted a sensible and practical method of closer co-operation with the General Convention. The printed minutes will tell. Read them.

Steps were instituted to standardize both Elon and Bethlehem Colleges under the recent college standards. This was certainly a great forward movement.

The Board of Religious Education is to take an offering for the support of the General Convention work of Christian education on the first Sunday in November.

The time for the final payment on Men and Millions pledges was extended to December 31, 1926, and strong resolutions were passed, urging the people to pay in full.

The Conferences of the Far South were more largely represented than any other, with the single exception of the Eastern Virginia and by a fine group of laymen and ministers.

Dr. W. S. Long, Rev. J. D. Wicker, and Rev. P. T. Klapp were active members of the Convention. Their friends and admirers rejoiced to see them present and in such excellent health.

Dr. W. W. Staley was at his best during the Convention. He made a speech sparkling with humor on Thursday night, and all through the sessions his witticisms enlivened the atmosphere.

The minutes of the Convention are shortly to be printed in pamphlet form for distribution. The secretary said they were ready for the printer upon adjournment. It is important that they be issued immediately.

The spirit of Christian brotherhood characterized the Convention. There was frequent unanimity in the disposition of matters, but every where there was difference of opinion there was tolerence and mutual respect.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN is to be printed by the Central Publishing Company, of Richmond, as during the past two years. No Church paper is put out in better mechanical manner than our own. The Convention expressed high appreciation of Prof. Kernodle's work. He continues also as managing editor.

The Christian Temple entertained the Convention gloriously. Breakfast and lodging were provided in the homes of the congregation, dinner and supper in the social room of the great Church that honors God and our people there. The Church is beautiful. No description of it can do it justice, but the more you see of it, the better you like it. Dr. Smith has done a great work in Norfolk.

President Smith's opening address to the Convention was a plea for the strengthening of our work of ministerial education, and Rev. John G. Truitt's sermon following it was an eloquent plea for the life hid with Christ in God.

From the General Convention there were present Mr. Hermon Eldredge, Dr. W. P. Minton, Dr. and Mrs. W. H. Denison, and Mrs. McD. Howsare. These consecrated and efficient workers added greatly to the work of the Convention.

Owing to the extension of the time for payment of Men and Millions pledges, the Convention, in accordance with pledges given, could not enter into the proposed denomination-wide campaign for $1,425,000 for our various colleges at this time.

During Wednesday and Thursday mornings the Woman's Board was in session. More people attended their sessions than the Convention itself at the same hour. Mrs. W. H. Carroll, Burlington, N. C., continues as president of the Woman's Board.

Dr. S. A. Howell and a group of our other colored workers were present and sang for the Convention. Dr. L. E. Smith, Dr. W. W. Staley, and Dr. J. O. Atkinson were chosen as fraternal messengers to the Afro-Christian Convention, which meets in Baltimore in June.

Dr. L. E. Smith was the unanimous choice of the Convention to succeed himself as president. So was Dr. I. W. Johnson as secretary. Dr. Johnson is a born secretary. He is official editor of the "Christian Annual" from now on. The other officers of the Convention were also re-elected.

Nearly one hundred accredited delegates were in attendance, most of them ministers. Not a single layman was present, either from the Western North Carolina or the Valley of Virginia Central Conference.

Strong laymen were there, however; men accustomed to handle big issues in a successful way, men like Lieutenant-Governor West, Col. E. E. Holland, Judge J. F. West, Hon. K. B. Johnson, Dr. W. P. Lawrence, Supt. Chas. D. Johnston, Prof. L. L. Vaughan, J. M. Darden, P. J. Kernodle, John King, L. H. Jones, C. D. West, C. H. Stephenson, J. A. Kimball, and numerous others. Their voices were frequently heard in the discussions. They served on important committees. Their counsel greatly influenced the Convention in its decisions.

The death of Dr. J. Pressley Barrett struck the Convention to its heart. It was known that he was seriously ill, but it was hoped that he would recover. The Convention attended his funeral, held at Suffolk, in a body and sat in reserved seats. Dr. W. W. Staley was in charge. Dr. W. S. Long and Rev. H. S. Hardcastle read appropriate scriptures, while Dr. L. E. Smith offered a prayer full of sympathy, faith, and Christian comfort. Brief tributes were paid the deceased by Dr. N. G. Newman, Dr. W. P. Minton, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Dr. T. Edwin Baird, and Mrs. Baird, Col. J. E. West, Chaplain H. E. Rountree, Dr. W. P. Lawrence, Rev. T. E. White, Rev. P. T. Klapp, Rev E. M. Carter, Mr. A. R. Eley, and W. A. Harper, acting editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Telegrams from many parts of the country were read by Dr. Staley. The floral offering beggared description and attested the affection of the people for their fallen leader. Becomingly was the great man laid to rest in the presence of saddened and weeping loved ones and friends.

J. D. Gunter, of Sanford, N. C., a member of the Southern Christian Convention, visited relatives in Richmond this week and made a call at the office of THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

Rev. Geo. D. Eastes died Sunday night in the Lakeview Hospital, Suffolk, Va. His funeral was held Tuesday afternoon at Holland. One of the finest-spirited men of our brotherhood thus passes to his reward.

Dr. Marion Lawrence, the world-famous Sunday School worker, the gift of our Church to Christian leadership, died on May 1st. His last words were these, so like his beautiful life: "I wish to express my love for my associates and friends, and pray for them all God's richest blessings. We shall meet again. 'He that liveth and believeth in me shall never die'; Jesus said it. I believe it."

TWO COLLEGE LOSSES.

Within the span of a single day, Furman University, in South Carolina, lost a former president, and Elon College, in North Carolina, lost its most valuable publicist and worker in the home and foreign missionary field. Dr. Chas. Manly was the second president of Furman University, having succeeded its founder, and having successfully conducted that institution through its early years of struggle. He was an educator with a notable record. Dr. J. Pressley Barrett, who died at Winston-Salem, was for eight years editor of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, an organ of the Christian Church, and one of the oldest religious papers in the country. The Southern Christian Convention was in session at Norfolk, and had just re-elected him editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, at Elon, when it received word of his death. Dr. Barrett was one of the most active factors in promotion of the welfare of Elon College, and was largely instrumental in founding the Christian Orphanage at that place.

This denomination represents one of the most earnest of religious bodies in the country. In sincerity of purpose and devotion to principles, it strikingly reminds of the Quakers. It always speaks out against the flagrancies of the day, as is instanced in a resolution passed the day Dr. Barrett died in condemnation of "the practice of certain men in Congress and others in public office of patronizing the bootleggers."—Charlotte Observer.

REIDSVILLE MEETING.

The Woman's Missionary Society held its first anniversary meeting in the basement of the Church Monday night, April 21, 1924. This society was organized one year ago at the home of Mrs. W. S. Allen, with ten members. Now we have thirty-one members. Besides the dues, we have raised $15.00 to be sent to Miss Morey for mountain work.

After the business session, we had the following program:

1. Talk—Conditions of men and some of the needs of illiterates, by Mrs. W. S. Allen.
2. Song by Young People's Society.
3. Our own missionaries, by Mrs. W. S. Smith.
4. Talk on missions, by the pastor, Rev. J. A. Ledbetter.

Following the program, the society served delicious refreshments. The ladies of the Church were invited to this meeting and we succeeded in getting several to become members of the society.

After the social hour, the society adjourned to meet with Mrs. J. J. Brown in May.

MRS. W. S. ALLEN.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON TEMPERANCE TO S. C. C.

Whereas, we, as a nation, are now passing through a period of very significant reconstruction, which condition is recognized as a result of the recent World War; and

Whereas, these opponents of law and order are taking advantage of present conditions in their attempt to prove the failure of the eighteenth amendment; and

Whereas, actual statistics show that crime, per se, is decreasing; and

Whereas, we believe that the burden of responsibility finally comes back to the individual citizen; and

Whereas, we believe that the disposition of the less conscientious citizen to disregard the sanctity of his ballot, and himself violate the law for personal profit, is due to the example set by men of influence and wealth who are filling official position in public life; therefore, be it resolved:

First, That we, the Southern Christian Convention, in biennial session assembled at Norfolk, Va., place ourselves on record, as we have in the past, as favoring unqualifiedly every effort being made to stem this tide of lawlessness.

Second, That we favor, and most heartily approve, the action now being taken by the good women of our land to more firmly establish a higher standard of law enforcement. Particularly do we pledge our support to the Woman's Law Enforcement League of America, which body has recently met in a most significant convention in our national capital.

Third, That we pledge our support to those members of our national Congress who are standing true to the eighteenth amendment.

Fourth, That we condemn unreservedly the practice of certain other members of Congress and men in public office elsewhere, who are openly and flagrantly violating their oath of office by patronizing the bootlegger, and who are using their official position to promote and practice graft, and who are themselves otherwise violating the law.

Fifth, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to our chief executive, President Coolidge; to the members of Congress who represent the constituency composing this Convention, and to the Woman's Law Enforcement League of America.

J. W. MANNING,
Chairman.

GIVE CHILDREN THEIR RIGHTS.

That a vast number of our children are being deprived of their rights to receive early education was declared in a recent address delivered by Major Bradley Martin, president of the National Kindergarten Association. Major Martin said, in part:

"In the kindergarten, every song, every game, story, and project has a definite mission. The curriculum is designed to promote honesty, fair play and unselfishness; and the atmosphere of a kindergarten is made up of just the right elements for the well-rounded growth and development of young life.

"The kindergarten, which is the link between home and school, fosters a sympathetic understanding between teacher and parent through its mothers' meetings and home visiting—an understanding which exerts an invaluable influence throughout the child's entire school life.

"I wonder if you realize how small a proportion of the children of this land of education and culture have the opportunity of kindergarten training. Town after town is found where no kindergarten has ever been established, and cities seldom have adequate accommodation. It is a common occurrence for a mother to be told that there is no room for her child. How could it be otherwise since figures show that only one child in nine is provided for in this way? Now, just what does this mean? It is impossible to understand unless you know what the kindergarten means to the average child.

"But only 500,000 of the children in the United States of America may have this happiness; four million are denied it. As I said before, only one in nine goes to kindergarten. Where are the other eight? What kind of training are the 4,000,000 having? Are they getting a fair start in life?

"The founders of the National Kindergarten Association were convinced that the great mass of people did not realize that the children were being deprived of something vital. They saw that it did not occur to those people that the kindergarten age is the most impressionable. The need, then, was to bring about an awakening. This is what the Association is doing today. It is influencing parents, school authorities and State legislation with regard to the establishment of kindergartens on petition of citizens."

Vacation time is drawing near, and many schools are closing, with no definite plan for including kindergarten training in their courses next fall. If your school is one of these, try to secure a kindergarten for the fall term. Write for further advice, information and literature to the National Kindergarten Association, 8 West Fortieth Street, New York City.

Major Bradley Martin, president of the National Kindergarten Association, 8 West Fortieth Street, New York City, will talk over the radio from WEAF on Friday, May 16th, at 11:10 A. M. Listen in.

MAKING DREAMS COME TRUE.

"All achievements, great and small,
Once were but a seed
Lying hid in unguessed minds,
To fulfill men's need.
Blessed be the active thought
That makes the dream a deed."

It is the privilege of the teacher of young people to help make dreams come true! There is no limit to the power of loving, sympathetic Christian teaching. Through its influence lives are made, and without it there is grief. This month and next, throughout our country, hundreds of young people are coming home from camps and conferences and summer schools, where they have begun to dream great dreams. These Christian training schools have been drawing them nearer to Christ and nearer to the Church. They come home, many of them, with dreams that are not even guessed. But they are dreams which are the beginning of very great things.

A loving, Christian heart is the first requisite of the teacher who will help make these dreams come true. This very spirit will draw her to long to know more—more about the lesson she is to teach; and, more important, more about the boy and girls whom she is to teach. To such a teacher, who will have much to do with shaping the mind and thought and character of the lives of her pupils, of the future of the Church and nation, the following books are suggested to help interpret the task which is so all-important:

"Teen-Age Tangles," by Leora M. Blanchard, is a teacher's experience with live young people told simply. Every story told is a page from real life, and shows how a teacher may be a power for good in winning the youthful life. No teacher can carefully read this book without having a wider and clearer vision of the possibilities of work with the teen-age through the Sunday School.

"Community Forces in Religious Education," by Walter Fisks, is one of the specialization books in the international teacher training course in the young people's division. Here is a book which introduces youth, and then clearly shows the various forces which should work together, to help him become a strong Christian character. This is not a task of the Sunday School alone, but of every agency that touches the life for good and for God.

"Evangelism of Youth," by Albert H. Gage, is a book which carries a message of vital importance to pastors, parents, and Church school officers and teachers. The book gives intelligence and direction to evangelism, and its supreme purpose is to help Churches and youth to win youth to the Lord Jesus, through the suggestion of a plan that has been tested and which works. Study it before planning your fall program.

The "Young People's Manual," a handbook prepared by the National Young People's Board of the Religious Education Council of Canada, is a splendid and helpful contribution to handbooks on young people's work. The contents are divided into three parts—first, which is introductory, discussing young people and their relation to the kingdom of God; the second, which presents underlying principles in the lives of the young people themselves and in young people's work, and part three which suggests practical methods through organization, Sunday and midweek sessions, equipment, training of leadership, and a wealth of practical material. This book is adaptable to the work of young people's leaders every where.

"All-the-Year-Round Activities for Young People," by Muriel White, suggests activities in a four-fold program for each month of the whole year. Special days and interests are remembered from January to December. Needs—physical, mental, social and spiritual—are provided for. In this book may be found the answer to the question often heard, "What shall we do?"

Many other books, general in their scope, or dealing with definite phases of our work, might be suggested. In these five, the young people's leader will find much that is inspiring, practical, helpful. Vacation time, long summer afternoons, pleasant evenings, may be your opportunity to read one or more of these, and then you may be thinking more with your young people who are dreaming dreams in summer school or camp, or at home or on vacation. By reading, you will be living and growing with them. You will not be calling that Sunday School class a "hopeless place" as long as there is a young life there. The leaders of days to come may be there. May he be found! May her dreams of the best come true! The intelligent, loving teacher may be the answer, for—

"The multitude moves on its way,
As multitudes must do;
Here and there a leader toils,
Brings his visions true.
One of the many, man apart—
Which are you?

FURNITURE FROM PACKING-BOXES.

One of the significant practical features of the recent term closing at Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, was an exhibit of household utilities and substantial furniture made from salvaged packing-boxes and tin containers. This work is done in the missionary manual-training course, and its objective is two-fold. It helps the missionary in isolated places to add to his own comfort and convenience at no expense, and it demonstrates to the native the value of thrift.

The most significant pieces of furniture were an iceless refrigerator and a porch set, consisting of a Dutch seat, the back of which swung over to provide a table, a rocker and a straight chair, all attractively painted. The gem among the tin utilities was the perforated sprinkler top made from the top of a blacking-box.

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, Editor,
Elon College, N. C.

THE EDITOR SLEEPS.

Our hearts are bowed in sorrow. Our beloved editor sleeps. On April 30th, Dr. Barrett was operated on in the Lawrence Hospital, Winston-Salem, N. C. A telegram was received that the operation was successful, but complications arose, and at 2 P. M. on May 1st, the spirit of the great man took its flight God-ward. We had hoped, we had prayed that God would grant us this great life for a few more years. We still mourn his passing away. We shall cherish his blessed memory.

His funeral was held in Suffolk, Va., on the afternoon of May 2nd, with Dr. W. W. Staley in charge and with the co-operation and assistance of a large number of our ministers. The tributes of praise, of flowers and of tears were beautiful, and attested the universal appreciation for our brother.

A special committee of the Convention prepared an "appreciation" of Dr. Barrett, which was read at the evening service on May 1st and unanimously adopted. We print it here in full, as follows:

REV. JOHN PRESSLEY BARRETT, D. D.
An Appreciation.

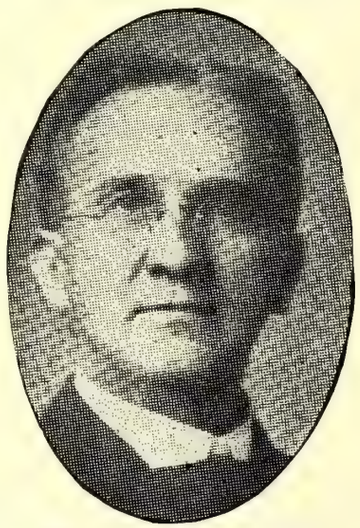
"There is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel." A prince of the Church was the Rev. John Pressley Barrett, D. D., who passed to his reward in the Lawrence Hospital, Winston-Salem, N. C., at 2 o'clock this afternoon. No man in the Christian Church had the confidence of the consecrated lay and ministerial workers of our brotherhood in more marked degree than our fallen brother. Those of simple faith, those to whom the Bible is the inspired Word of God, felt they had in him a champion of the highest order. And now he is no more. No more shall his impassioned eloquence stir our hearts through the spoken word. No more shall his versatile pen indite for an expectant host the words of inspiration and uplift. A great defender of the faith sleeps. Our hearts bleed for his taking, though we are glad to have given our day and generation the noble life of service our brother lived among us.

Dr. Barrett was born in Isle of Wight County, Va., in the neighborhood of Antioch Christian Church, in 1851. From his childhood his life was characterized by piety and consecration. There was never a doubt in his mind that God had called him to His ministry. He prepared himself for his lifework in the Suffolk Collegiate Institute and Richmond College, now the University of Richmond. He early developed a rare felicity of expression and rapidly won recognition as one of our leading writers. It is safe to say that during the past half century no man in our Church has written more for our periodicals than Dr. Barrett. The people read his writings, and that gave him a tremendous influence. He served as editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN (two terms) for many years, and of the Herald of Gospel Liberty for twelve years. He was at other times editor of other Church publications and a frequent contributor to general periodicals. He died in harness as editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. He had no dread of departing. For him, there was no moaning of the bar.

His activity as a writer was not limited to his editorial work. He was the author of many powerful books. His first volume was entitled "Iola, or Facing the Truth." It revealed a mind of rich imaginative power and a style characterized by a rare command of idiomatic English. The book exerted an enormous influence in the Southern Christian Convention. Other books from his pen were "The Centennial of Religious Journalism," "Forty Years on the Firing Line," "Fruit-Bearing Truths," "Modern Light Bearers," and "Garden Spots in the Old Testament." It is not given to many men to be so fruitful in permanent service to the kingdom through their writings.

Dr. Barrett, as an editor, championed the various enterprises of the Church. He boosted Christian education, orphanage work, and missions in particular. He stood for these causes when it meant to stand almost alone. And by his insistent pleading, he won the hearts of the people to their support. As pastor of the Memorial Temple, he infused such a spirit of benevolence in the people that, first of any Church of any denomination in Virginia, that congregation gave as much money for missions as it paid its pastor. His pastorates at Raleigh, N. C., and Covington, Ohio, were signal in their kingdom achievements.

Dr. Barrett was a man of vision. He dared follow his vision to its logical consequences. He never counted the cost when the line of duty was clear to him. He was a man of many friendships. He loved his friends, but no influence could be brought to bear upon him to swerve one iota from what he conceived to be the path of his duty. Friendships of a lifetime were broken in many instances in the interest of truth, as God gave it to him to see the truth. The truth of God was to him the inspiration of his every act and thought. It was the sublimest conception he could entertain.



REV. JOHN PRESSLEY BARRETT, D. D.

If our brother had been called upon to select an epitaph for himself, there is no doubt he would have responded with the humility that ever characterized him—"Defender of the Faith." This he certainly was. The faith to him was a living reality. It had the power of salvation, the promise of the endless life into which his spirit has entered. His faith was nurtured by prayer. When he prayed, you felt that God heard, so intimately assuring were his words. He taught his people to believe and pray, whether as pastor or as editor. Spiritual results crowned his life's ministry. Blessed be the memory of our fallen brother. Peace to his ashes, and the consolation of the Spirit to his bereaved wife, daughter, and other relatives. The greatness of his service, the certainty of his reward, will ever remain to them an inspiration and a benediction as they are to the Church of his choice, to whose promotion his splendid talents were devoted in self-forgetting abandon.

Therefore, be it resolved, That the Southern Christian Convention, in session at Norfolk, Va., has learned, with deep sorrow, of the death of its faithful and beloved editor, Dr. J. Pressley Barrett, and that this appreciation of his life, prepared at its request, be spread on its minutes, sent to Mrs. Barrett, and offered to the press for publication.

Resolved further, That the Convention adjourn in his honor at 1 o'clock on the afternoon of May 2nd, and in a body attend his funeral at Suffolk, Va., leaving the Church at 2 o'clock, automobiles having been provided by the congregation of the Christian Temple.

Resolved third, That the president of the Convention appoint six laymen as active, and six ministers, with himself as chairman, as honorary pallbearers for the funeral, and that this committee be authorized to provide a suitable floral design for the occasion and to render the bill for the same to the secretary of the Convention, who is hereby instructed to pay the same.

Resolved fourth, That we bow in humble submission to the will of God and pray, upon his family and the Church, the blessing of our Father, who doeth all things well.

A REMARKABLE ILLUSTRATION OF THE CHRISTIAN MAN IN BUSINESS.

"A millwright in our employ, making 90 cents an hour in before-the-war days, was always in financial difficulty. Our welfare man visited his home and found four kinds of meat cooking at the same time. He then returned to our plant and interviewed the man and made an agreement to come to his home that night. After a rather lengthy conference, our man became the business manager of this home. The weekly pay envelope went to our man. Soon the debts were paid and a home bargained for. It is now paid for and well furnished. There is a family automobile and happy children in school, and this man would fight for our plant. The man and his wife have learned to save and properly manage.

"It is always our plant with our eleven hundred men. Every employee of them does his best for us, because he knows we will do our best for him and for our customers. The company and the men pay dollar for dollar into our relief fund. Sometimes the relief fund is insufficient for prolonged illness with a large family, and the savings are exhausted. The company advances money in all such cases without interest, and it is paid back over a term of months or years, as circumstances may require. This is our interpretation of the Golden Rule in business.

"We provide at the company's expense an athletic field, a country club, and abundant opportunity for wholesome social life and amusement. Baseball is one of my specialties. I produced Joe Meginity, of the New York Giants. He is one of our products. He is working in our plant right now as a machinist, and he is a good one, too. When Decatur was dropped from the Triple-I League, we took our plant team and licked all the Triple-I teams. Now we are back in their class again, or rather they are in ours.

"No, sir; we never hear of the union here. Every man in our employ feels this plant is his.

He would fight for it, and he is as honest with it as we are with him. We do not want to make a penny by cutting the quality nor by charging an excessive profit. Our men take a pride in giving the company an honest day's labor. Our motto is Christianity applied to business relations, and it includes our buyers as well as our men."

Such were the answers to my questions directed to a Tarheel-born business man of big success, A. E. Staley, now of Decatur, Ill. His business ideals account for his remarkable achievements. Mr. Staley was born fifty-six years ago on the farm of his father, William Staley, near Julian, in Randolph County. He went to the four-month public school and to old Shiloh M. P. Church. In school, he learned how to add, subtract, multiply, and divide where fractions were not involved. He can't work fractions even yet. He never got as far along as English grammar. In Church, he learned the principles of Christian brotherhood which have been his pillar of cloud by day and his pillar of fire by night in every experience and relationship of life. When a mere lad, he became a Sunday School teacher. The Church is to Mr. Staley the finest institution in the world. He loves the Church and is active in all its enterprises.

A traveling salesman observed him when a young man, and recognizing him to be possessed of promising outlook, induced him to begin to take orders for groceries. He did so well that the house called him to headquarters and made him general manager of sales in the home city. Twenty-six years ago, with fifteen hundred dollars capital, he began packing his own starch. His success soon brought on him the jealousy of the starch trust. He found he could not buy in America. So he had to buy American starch in Europe and ship it back to Baltimore on the very ship it went over on. In self-defense, he had to begin making starch on his own account.

He had been fortunate, when a starch-packer, in building up a splendid clientele of customers. He went out and practiced selling securities as preliminary to organizing a company to manufacture starch. Having acquired the technique of securities-selling, he went to his old customers and sold them his stock. He acquired a defunct starch plant at Decatur, Ill., and began grinding a thousand bushels of corn a day. But his competitors could undersell him. The overhead was too great. His only hope was in quantity productoin. True to his life policy of honesty, he closed the plant down, went to his customers again, told them the whole truth, and so sold them more stock. Soon he opened up with an increased capacity. Today his mammoth plant consumes 650 tons of coal and 35,000 bushels of corn daily, giving employment at good wages to 1,100 persons in the plant and offices. Before the year is over, the plant will be grinding 40,000, perhaps 50,000 bushels daily, and within five years Mr. Staley's aspiration is to have it consuming more corn than any starch plant in the world. It is now the largest independent starch plant in the world.

It takes four hours to go through this giant city of industrial organization and energy. Nothing is wasted. Starch is the major product, but the by-products in oils, fats, food products, meals, syrups and stock feeds are great industries in themselves. There are more than a dozen of these by-products. Big business always lowers the cost of its product by wise and economical methods of utilization of what in smaller plants are waste materials. Big business men get rich not by crushing the life out of little fellows, but by saving what they waste. There isn't a big business in the world of which it is not true that it has made its millions out of by-products and waste materials by the application of brains and science to industry. Mr. Staley's success, with a plant valued now at $12,000,000 and growing in value by millions annually, is certainly attributable to his wise utilization of the by-products of corn in the manufacture of starch. He employs a staff of chemists to discover for him other by-products.

One of the highest satisfactions of Mr. Staley's business achievements is the fact that he now ships starch to the ancestral seat of the Staley family, at Staley Bridge, near Manchester, England. The old family manor house is still extant there. Early in the sixteenth century, the Staleys fell into disfavor because of their political and religious views. They fled to Holland for safety, and beyond the middle of the century came to America. They landed along the Chesapeake Bay and settled in Frederic, Md., and at Harper's Ferry, W. Va. In 1767, three brothers of them came to North Carolina, where they established homes. Their descendants are among the best citizens of Randolph, Alamance, Guilford, and Chatham Counties. Among the distinguished members of the family was Col. John Staley, of the Confederate Army, for whom the town of Staley, in Randolph County, is named. George Staley, too, was a remarkable man. He was seven feet tall, well proportioned from his feet to his head, weighing nearly 600 pounds. He was a local preacher and a remarkably influential man. Rev. Martin Staley, of the Christian Church and founder of the Pleasant Hill (Alamance County) Christian Church, was another distinguished member of the family. It was in this Church that the first temperance society in the world began. Dr. W. W. Staley, Suffolk, Va., formerly president of Elon College, and a most distinguished clergyman; Chief Justice Staley, of the New York State Supreme Court, and A. E. Staley, founder and president of the A. E. Staley Manufacturing Company, Decatur, Ill., are among the distinguished living descendants of these three pre-Revolutionary War brothers who migrated, as we have said, to North Carolina in 1767, and all three of whom lie buried in the graveyard of the Richland Lutheran Church, in Randolph County, near the Alamance line.

Gene Staley, as Mr. Staley is familiarly known to his boyhood community, is a most genial man, and evidently of Nordic blood, as all the Staleys are, with their tendency to large stature, blue eyes, and red hair. Of powerful physique, he would be taken in any crowd for a leader of men. Had he not already told you of his limited education, you would readily conclude he had graduated from some great university, so chaste and impressive is his diction. And as a public speaker, he is often in demand. He likes his jokes, and is past master in effective narration. He is the type of man destined to achieve distinction in whatever line of work he should choose. His father was anxious that his son should preach. Well, he does! His whole life is a sermon in demonstration of Christian principles as applicable to business life.

People love Mr. Staley; not only his employees, but all who know him. A railroad man confided in me, when I asked if he knew him, that he considered him the best man he had ever seen. "If we had a few others like him," he said, "Decatur would be one of the biggest cities in the country." The taxi driver declared that everybody (Decatur has 45,000 population) knew Mr. Staley and regretted he was as yet unable to get a job with him. The janitor of the office building in which I found him assured me it would be all right to go right to the broker's office, where he was busy. "He's always glad to see a fellow, Mr. Staley is," he confided. And the grain broker, when Mr. Staley stepped out to another phone, continued the unbroken chorus of praise by assuring me that, while Mr. Staley is the richest man in Decatur, he is mighty clever to poor folks and loves to make others happy. Mr. Staley himself told me, with beaming enthusiasm, of his plans to help his poorer brothers in the years that his friends trust await him. "I remember my own poverty," he said, "when I couldn't have rubbed two pennies the one over the other if my life had depended upon it. Money can be used to do an infinite amount of good or an infinite amount of harm. My aspiration is to do good with the wealth my Lord has given me."

And then this Christian business man of the Golden Rule in practice preached me a thrilling sermon on money and its uses in the hands of Christian men. While consciousness lasts, A. E. Staley will not be forgot. Here is a man!

THE NEW EDITORIAL STAFF.

The Christian Sun is to have a staff of editors to succeed Dr. Barrett. The plan is not an untried one and ought to guarantee the continued excellency of our paper. No salary is to be paid any of the editors. Their work is to be a work of service and of love for the cause.

The editor-in-chief is Dr. J. O. Atkinson, for many years editor of The Christian Sun, a man of splendid editorial gifts, and having the affection of all our people. He will bring to his editorial duties a prestige that will greatly help the paper. He will determine the policies of the paper.

There are four contributing editors—Dr. W. W. Staley, Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, Dr. R. C. Helfenstein, and W. A. Harper. Rev. S. M. Lynam is to be news editor. These brethren will aid Dr. Atkinson in every way they can to help the paper.

Prof. P. J. Kernodle remains as managing editor. His wide experience in the publishing business eminently qualifies him for the position.

The new editorial staff will be in charge as soon as Dr. Atkinson matures his plans and policies.

ORANGEPORT.

The Orangeport Christian Endeavor Society planned to hold its meeting at 7:30 on Easter Sunday morning. Our weather man had promised us fair weather for the day, but even weather men make mistakes. Early in the morning the snow began to fall, and continued until afternoon; but a good number of our young people came through the storm to attend the early service, and all seemed to feel repaid for their effort.

A good congregation was present at the regular morning service. As we held our Endeavor service in the morning, there was no service at our Church in the evening, and several of our people attended a pageant given at the Plymouth Congregational Church, at Lockport.

We felt that the day had been spent in a pleasant and profitable manner, notwithstanding the morning snowstorm.

War Still an Eventuality.

Evidently it is so regarded in England, for the British House of Commons, on March 17th, defeated a motion to reduce the army by 150,000 men by a vote of 347 to 13. The motion was a Labor protest against "the militaristic trend of the government's army policy." Probably the government still recalls the terrible days when England's brave "little army" was almost annihilated in its gallant effort to save France. If it had not been such a "little" army, the war would not have lasted for four years.

REPORT OF BOARD OF EDUCATION.

General Considerations.

The heartening note of progress and hope in our day is the growing insistence that we need more religious instruction. Investigations into the spiritual condition of the flower of our young manhood during the World War initiated this demand. More recent tests applied to public and high school pupils with reference to their ethical reactions have given further proof that impending paganism threatens our nation unless the religious instruction of our youth is more amply provided for.

These facts are not occasions of pessimism, but challenges to construct a program of religious education (we prefer to call it Christian education), reaching all the way from our homes, through our Churches and communities, to our colleges and universities. Diagnosis must precede prescription. The disease must be definitely located before the surgeon can operate. Threatening "spiritual illiteracy" is our sickness today. The remedy is Christian education. We must consistently and intelligently provide it. And we are providing it. The daily vacation Bible school, week-day schools for religious instruction, provision for teaching religion in State universities, the strengthening of the Christian colleges, are integrating steps in a statesman-like effort to solve the most pressing religious problem of our time. Part of this program, so far as our Convention is concerned, is under the jurisdiction of the Board of Religious Education. The college and university aspects of the program inhere in this board.

Christian Education in State Universities.

The separation of Church and State in matters of education, largely the work of our own Horace Mann, was wise and inevitable in a land guaranteeing liberty of conscience in religious belief and practice, but this separation imposed on the Christian community a burden to educate the people in religion which we have not fully appreciated nor adequately provided for. We have sensed our duty and acknowledged our responsibility, and this presages victorious advance for the future.

The principle of the separation of Church and State means that religion cannot be taught at public expense in tax-supported institutions. At first this legal hindrance took the practical form of criticism of such institutions as Godless. They have, however, continued to grow and increase in favor and patronage, and in voiew of this fact a more considerate Christian attitude has seen, in these great centers of student population, the finest mission field in America. Today we recognize that the Churches are under obligation to provide religious instruction for the thousands of the children of Christian homes who annually flock to these institutions. The methods of approaching this matter are many, but all of them hopeful.

In North Carolina, our Church is co-operating with other Churches to bring about arrangements for religious instruction which the university will credit toward graduation. The plan of co-operation and control has not been fully matured, but the prospect is promising. We pledge our full sympathy to all such movements and rejoice that our day is given to see such forward steps entered upon for Christian ministry to State university students.

Christian Education in Denominational Colleges.

But while realizing the strategic value of religious instruction for the students of State university and other tax-supported institutions, we do not in the least diminish our insistence that the denominational colleges need strengthening. The very growth of the State system of higher education makes it obligatory on the various Churches to give added physical equipment and a more adequate endowment to the denominational schools. It is a case of keep up or quit. The Christian Church is in no mood to quit.

Speaking of the denominational colleges, the committee on the war and the religious outlook has this splendid testimony: "Such institutions as have been described do not overemphasize moralizing or preaching. They see to it that among the winds that blow about and upon the college campus is the wind of religion. The student hears the voice of it. He may not know whence it cometh or whither it goeth. He may hear it on the athletic field, or in the biological laboratory, or in the philosophical library. It surprises him not more to hear it in these places than from the desk of the preacher or the Bible teacher. Everywhere during his college course he finds a new unfolding of his universe, of nature and of human nature around him, and the laws by which they operate; and he finds the leaven of religion within the processes that yield him his enlarging knowledge. Danger is minimized that he will form the habit of making obsolete approaches to truth. He will not be aware of the alleged chasm between evolution and revelation. He will have heard of it as a bit of history, but he will have his faith grounded in a unitary, not a bisected world. He has brought his religious impulses to college; the college has provided a rich environment which has allowed them healthful development. It cannot be said with mathematical precision how many colleges are able to command even inadequately all the influences and instrumentalities which we have been describing above. Almost every denomination has a few colleges of which this is an approximately true picture. The positive Christian quality of their graduates is a matter of common knowledge."

American life, American democracy, the American social order, need just "such institutions" as these at the center of the higher educational system, where "Christian character first and always" is the goal, the gripping objective. This Convention fosters two such institutions, and of them we now speak.

Bethlehem College.

Bethlehem College, of junior grade, with preparatory department, opened its doors September 12, 1923. The campus contains fifty acres, adjoining the prosperous town of Wadley, Ala. President Marshall W. Hook and his co-workers in the faculty and trustees have served our cause heroically during the initial year of this enterprise. During the year, fifty students have been enrolled, and next year the prospect looks good for one hundred.

The building, so far, has cost $11,344.11, and $2,020.89 are needed to finish it. The institution now owes on equipment $2,500, on outstanding operating bills $2,300, and on money borrowed to build, $6,000. To furnish the building properly, it is estimated that $2,500 will be needed. The operating expenses next year are estimated at $7,000. This means that Bethlehem needs from every source within a year a minimum of $25,000 in round numbers. President Hook would add to this an administration building, the cost of which he does not suggest. The present building is a dormitory, part of which is being used for administrative and other school purposes.

Elon College.

Elon College is enjoying the crisis of her heroic history. Born in poverty, nurtured in sacrifice, threatened with destruction by a disastrous fire, hedged about with standardizing tests she must meet or lose her prestige, Elon faces the future battered but undismayed. No college ever arose more triumphant from ashes than our Elon. And while the problems which confront her have sent many an institution tottering to her demise, Elon has all the vigor of youth and resiliency in her spirit.

The rebuilding program swings steadily forward toward completion. The cost of this program is estimated as follows: five buildings, $425,000; furniture, $75,000; campus fence and improvement of grounds, $52,000—total, $552,000. There has been paid in cash toward this program the following sums: P. J. Carlton, $50,000; J. M. Darden, $50,000; M. Orban, Jr., $45,000; B. N. and J. B. Duke, $50,000; Alamance County citizens, $23,753.57; other interested friends and insurance, $42,733.40—a total of $261,486.97. There has been borrowed from banks against subscriptions $148,750. There is needed now to complete the building program $141,763.03, toward which Mr. W. F. Corwith has agreed to give $25,000, Mr. M. Orban, Jr., $20,000, and Mr. P. J. Carlton approximately $35,000, leaving a net balance of $61,763.03 yet to be provided.

Before the fire, Elon had an indebtedness incurred over a term of years for buildings and occasional annual deficits in the sum of $114,750. When the rebuilding program is completed, Elon will be in debt perhaps $300,000, all of which will be covered by subscriptions except the original indebtedness, and we hope even that.

Elon has resources as follows: Value of plant after fire and before rebuilding began as estimated by an expert appraiser of the Virginia Trust Company, $389,810; value of rebuilding program to date (April 10th), $401,682.78, and when completed, $552,000; and endowment, $417,195.95—total at present, $1,208,688.73, and when complete $1,359,005.95. Her net worth when the building program is complete will, therefore, likely be $1,059,005.95.

Elon must have at least a million dollars of endowment to be the college our hearts desire her to be. She must have $500,000 endowment immediately to meet the North Carolina State requirements. We must also join the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools as soon as we can qualify financially.

The attendance at Elon during 1922-23 was 329; during 1923-24, it was 316. The graduating class for 1923 had 41 members, and that of 1924 has 40 members. Seven ministerial students are in the graduating class this year, six of them of our own Church. Three young women of the class are volunteers for the foreign field in our Church.

Death of Trustees.

Elon has lost two splendid trustees and devoted friends in the death of Mr. J. D. Gray and Rev. W. G. Clements. The Convention should cause appropriate resolutions to be spread on its minutes respecting these faithful servants of the cause of Christian education.

Recommendations.

1. That "College Day" continue to be celebrated in each congregation on the Sunday or other day most suitable to each congregation.

2. That a special effort be made to increase the attendance on our colleges by our own young people.

3. That trustees be elected for "The Southern Christian Convention Trust Fund," and they be authorized to incorporate themselves to receive and administer funds for the S. C. C. and its institutions and enterprises.

4. That the Convention issue its bonds, signed by its president, and countersigned by its secretary on behalf of the Convention, and sealed with the corporation seal, to cover the indebtedness and financial requirements of Elon and Bethlehem Colleges, providing over a term of years for the retirement of the interest and principal of the same, thus placing the schools on a safe financial basis. This would require $500,000—$400,000 for Elon and $100,000 for Bethlehem.

5. That the Convention express its official thanks for assistance rendered Elon to the following persons: P. J. Carlton, B. N. and J. B. Duke, J. M. Darden, W. F. Corwith, M. Orban, Jr., and W. E. Sharpe (for the citizens of Alamance County), and the others who have aided in the emergency campaign.

6. That the Southern Christian Convention, as voted in the Burlington session of the General Convention, enter into the denomination-wide educational campaign for $1,425,000 for our colleges, the date for the beginning of the campaign to be January 1, 1924. [On this, action was postponed till the next session of the Convention, in view of the two-year extension of Men and Millions pledges.]

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Our special Easter offering is starting off nicely, and a number of our Churches are making much larger offerings than they did last year. Some of them have made offerings six times as large as last year. That is very incouraging indeed. It will be necessary to make them larger to reach our goal of $3,500. We want you to watch our reports from week to week, and if you see we are going to fall short we want you to mail us your personal check to help us cross the mark. We will have to put a little more energy in the final part of the race. We must not fail. You have never failed to reach a goal we have set. You must reach this one. We are counting on you to see that we do not fail.

Applications come to us every week. This question arises. Shall we stand still and rest easy with what we have, or shall we go forward and build more buildings and take more children and do a larger work? What is the Church going to do about it?

The following has been sent in since our last report: Ladies' Aid Society, Burlington, N. C., 5 sheets; Miss Ora Scott, Harrisonburg, Va., 2 sheets; Mrs. E. H. Davis, Harrisonburg, Va., 2 dresses; Ladies' Aid Society, Graham Christian Church, 3 tablecloths.

ONE-DAY SCHOOL OF MISSIONS.

The one-day school of missions of the Churches of Wake, Hornett and Johnston Counties met at Piney Plains Christian Church Sunday morning, April 13th, presided over by Mrs. L. L. Vaughan. The meeting was opened with a song service, conducted by Mr. Denton. The congregation repeated the twenty-third psalm in concert. A devotional service was led by Mr. Denton. Prayer was offered for the following four things: (1) missionaries in the various mission fields; (2) for those who plan and direct our work; (3) for our Convention and Conference officials; (4) for divine guidance in the present meeting.

The message by the district leader, Mrs. L. L. Vaughan, was given in the theme of "What Service do I Render?" The minutes of last meeting were read and approved. Song by the Catawba Church choir, led by Mr. Denton.

Mrs. W. H. Denison gave an address on "The Growth of the Kingdom," which brought in a forceful way our responsibility for evangelism in fields far and near.

Miss Pattie Coghill, field secretary of our Woman's Board, brought a mesage on the aims of the mission work and how to make them living and vital to our young people.

The following committees were appointed: nominating, place, resolution. An offering of $8.38 was given, which was for the purpose of the expenses of the meeting and our mountain work.

The meeting adjourned for dinner. The devotions for the afternoon session were led by Mr. C. H. Stephenson. The following Churches were represented: Raleigh, Catawba Springs, Wake Chapel and Piney Plains.

Dr. Atkinson gave an address on "Our Mission Work and its Further Needs." In his usual manner, he thrilled his audience with the profound needs of our mission fields. The nominating committee named the same officers for the following year. The place of next meeting was left open. The meeting adjourned with prayer.

Mrs. L. L. Vaughan,
District Leader.

Secretary.

MINISTERS, LAY DELEGATES AND FAMIL

SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION IN BIENNIAL SESSION, NORFOLK, VA.

The Convention was called to order by the president, Rev. L. E. Smith, D. D., who, after the preliminary exercises, delivered the opening address on "The Ministry of Our Convention." He made a plea for definite steps to be taken to increase funds for the ministry. Rev. John G. Truitt, pastor of the First Christian Church, Berkley, Va., preached the Convention sermon.

Second Day.

Convention opened its second day at Christian Temple at 9 o'clock with a song service led by Rev. J. F. Morgan, of Winchester, Va. Devotional period was conducted by Rev. James H. Lightbourne, of Holland, Va.

Following roll call, reading of the minutes and enrollment of the delegates, the greater part of the morning was devoted to reports of committees. Rev. W. C. Wicker, D. D., treasurer, made a statement of the financial condition of the Convention, and Rev. L. E. Smith, D. D., reported as chairman of executive board.

Superannuated Ministers.

The board of superannuation met with Rev. J. O. Atkinson, of Elon College, N. C., chairman. The report of Dr. D. A. Long, chairman of the committee on temperance, was submitted. The report of W. K. Holt, chairman of board of trustees for the orphanage, was made, which was followed by an address. Chas. D. Johnston, superintendent, represented the claims of the orphanage.

The afternoon session was featured by talks on missionary subjects, following a report of Lieutenant-Governor J. E. West for the mission board. Colonel West was also to speak on "The Bearing of Our Men and Millions Movement on Our Future Missionary Activities."

Other speakers on the program were Rev. J. O. Atkinson, of Elon College, N. C.; J. F. West, Jr., of Waverly, Va.; J. A. Williams, of Franklin, Va.; Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., of Suffolk, Va.; J. M. Darden, of Suffolk, Va.; Rev. Roy C. Helfenstein, D. D., of Dover, Del., and Mrs. W. H. Carroll, president of the Southern Woman's Board, Burlington, N. C.

Dr. W. H. Denison delivered a very practical address on "The Relation of Stewardship to Missions." Mrs. Athelia Howsare also delivered an address on "Our Women and the Missionary Task." Mrs. Howsare has a daughter who is doing mission work among the Indians.

Sam Davis, blind pianist, and his wife were present, and they favored the Convention with a musical number. Special prayer was offered for members of the Convention who are seriously ill.

The Woman's Missionary Convention was in session throughout the morning. The session was devoted to addresses and reports. The spirit of optimism and progress was evident. The Convention was entertained by the women of the Church at luncheon and supper.

At the evening session, the address was made by Dr. W. P. Minton, missionary secretary for the General Convention of the Christian Church. A missionary pageant was presented under the direction of Mrs. M. L. Bryant, with music in charge of the Church choir.

Third Day.

After the opening and devotional exercises, the Convention proceeded to business. It was a busy day, with reports of various committees, touching on finances and the relation of the Southern Christian Convention to the General Convention. The afternoon was devoted to the discussion of educational subjects and miscellaneous business. The nominating committee reported.

Rev. L. E. Smith, D. D., pastor of Christian Temple, was re-elected president of the Convention, and Rev. N. G. Newman, D. D., was elected vice-president. Other officers are Rev. I. W. Johnson, D. D., secretary; Miss Mary Andrews, assistant secretary, and Rev. W. C. Wicker, D. D., treasurer.

J. R. Foster, B. D. Jones, J. M. Darden and Dr. G. S. Watson were elected trustees of the Christian Orphanage; W. T. Walters, J. F. Morgan, E. T. Holland, W. M. Brown, J. W. Payne, C. H. Stephenson, and Mrs. J. W. Patton were named on the Board of Religious Education.

New board of supervisors is composed of J. O. Atkinson, T. E. White, B. D. Jones, W. K. Holt, and Mrs. C. H. Rowland. Members of board of publications are D. R. Fonville, P. H. Fleming, L. L. Vaughan, N. G. Newman, and Stanley C. Harrell.

Lieutenant-Governor J. E. West, G. O. Lankford, H. W. Elder, J. M. Darden, W. W. Staley, C. H. Rowland, K. B. Johnson, J. A. Williams, Mrs. W. A. Harper and Mrs. W. H. Carroll were chosen to form the mission board.

Executive committee members are Rev. L. E. Smith, D. D., I. W. Johnson, D. D., and E. E. Holland; and Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., is mission secretary.

Trustees Nominated.

The following were nominated as trustees of Elon College: Ben T. Holden, Floyd Hurst, D. R. Fonville, R. C. Helfenstein, D. D., Rev. J. F. Morgan, J. O. Atkinson, D. D., Dr. S. T. A. Kent, G. O. Lankford, D. D., Dr. G. S. Watson, J. Beale Johnson, Rev. J. W. Wellons, M. Orban, Jr., Rev. S. C. Harrell, C. D. Johnson, Harvin Gray, Rev. J. Lee Johnson, I. W. Johnson, D. D., K. B. Johnson, W. F. Corwith, C. H. Stephenson, Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, H. A. Carlton, and J. A. Kimball.

Resolutions were adopted condemning "the practice of certain men in Congress and others in public office" who openly and flagrantly violate their oath of office by patronizing the bootleggers were passed. The Convention pledged its support of every effort being made to stop the tide of lawlessness, and especially the Woman's Law Enforcement League of America."

Action followed report of the temperance committee that "opponents of law and order are taking advantage of present conditions in an attempt to prove the failure of the eighteenth amendment.

IN BIENNIAL SESSION AT NORFOLK, VIRGINIA, A

THERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.

It was resolved that a copy of the resolutions should be forwarded to President Coolidge, to members of Congress representing the constituents composing the convention, and to the Woman's Law Enforcement League.

On receipt of a telegram announcing the death in Winston-Salem, N. C., of Rev. John Pressley Barrett, there was a suspension of business. He died at 2 o'clock, following an operation which was performed the day before. Dr. Barrett was seventy-three years old. He had been ill for several weeks. Dr. Barrett was at one time pastor of the Norfolk Memorial Temple. It was announced that the funeral services would be held at 4 o'clock the next day in the Suffolk Christian Church, conducted by Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., of that city.

Pallbearers were chosen as follows: Active—Dr. W. A. Harper, Lieutenant-Governor J. E. West, Col. E. E. Holland, K. B. Johnson, A. B. Farmer and J. M. Darden. Honorary—Rev. L. E. Smith, D. D., Rev. W. H. Denison, D. D., Rev. P. T. Clapp, Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., Rev. W. P. Minton, D. D., Dr. W. S. Long, Dr. T. E. Baird, and James A. Eley. Burial was in Cedar Hill Cemetery, Suffolk, Va.

Evening Session.

Addresses at the evening session were made by Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., of Suffolk, and Hermon Eldredge. Music was in charge of the choir.

Friday Morning.

After hearing reports of auditing and other committees, the chief of which was the special committee on publications, and the transaction of other miscellaneous business, the Convention adjourned. Provision had been made to take the Convention to attend the funeral exercises of Dr. J. P. Barrett. After the serving of lunch, the members left at 2 o'clock in cars provided by the Christian Temple.

Aids Mission Work.

Dr. Barrett was for a number of years editor of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, Dayton, Ohio, the oldest religious newspaper in the United States. He was a pioneer in missionary work, both home and foreign. He was also instrumental in the founding of the Christian Orphanage at Elon College, N. C.

Born in Isle of Wight County, Va., in 1851, in the neighborhood of Antioch Christian Church, Dr. Barrett, from his childhood, was characterized by piety and consecration. He prepared himself for the ministry in Suffolk Collegiate Institute and Richmond College. His last marriage was to Mrs. Mamie Watkins, of Windsor, Va.

Dr. Barrett was author of a number of books which exerted an enormous influence. When news of his death was received at the Convention in session, all business was suspended and resolutions of sorrow were passed.

Surviving Dr. Barrett, beides his wife, are a daughter, Mrs. Bun Hearn, of Wilson, N. C.; three brothers—R. H. and Mills T. Barrett, of Windsor, and Rev. J. W. Barrett, pastor of the Church of God, Norfolk—and two sisters, Mrs. J. W. Bradshaw and Mrs. Mattie Bowden, of Windsor.

High Praise for the Welcome.

High praise for the spirit of welcome displayed in Norfolk was expressed by delegates to the twenty-sixth regular session of the Southern Christian Convention, which met in Christian Temple.

"Our impression of Norfolk is one which will be a lasting one, because of the spirit of welcome we found every place we went. The Chamber of Commerce we found ready to serve us, and the traffic officers were the most considerate," declared Rev. M. W. Sutcliffe, of Havre de Grace, Md. "Old Virginia has lived up to her world-wide reputation."

Others remarked on the energy and progressiveness of Norfolk people, and the beauty of the residential districts.

Impressed With Norfolk.

"I am greatly impressed with Norfolk as a beautiful residence city and with its strategic situation commercially," said Hermon Eldredge, of Erie, Pa. "I know of no American city favored with greater natural adventages. But citizens of vision and industry and character are needed to make any great city, and Norfolk's schools and Churches show that this is appreciated."

"Twenty-four hours of Norfolk create a desire for forty-eight, and a week for an indefinite sojourn."—Rev. William D. Parry, D. D., Raleigh, N. C.

"I am enjoying not only the sessions of the Convention, but Norfolk also. The progress and growth of the city within recent years have been wonderful. With the development of the port of Hampton Roads, Norfolk is destined to become the largest and most important city on the Atlantic coast."—Judge J. F. West, Waverly, Va.

"One day's observation—a city of many attractions and possibilities, full of pep and a spirit of progress."—Rev. C. H. Stephenson, Raleigh.

"I am impressed with the beauty and spirit of progress that must be evident to any visitor to the city."—Rev. G. O. Lankford, Burlington.

Death of Rev. Dr. Barrett.

The following is from the editorial columns of the Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch, May 3, 1924:

"After half a century of unremitting toil in the service of his Master, Rev. Dr. J. Pressley Barrett has gone to his reward. As minister, editor and pioneer in missionary work, Dr. Barrett did much to further the cause of religion at home and in foreign lands. He was well remembered and much beloved in Norfolk, where for a number of years he was pastor of the Memorial Christian Temple. Dr. Barrett was a man of strong mentality. He was gifted as a speaker and as a writer; he was strong, clear and appealing. As editor of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, and later on of The Christian Sun, he made his name widely known. He was also author of a number of books which received a wide circulation and did much for religion.

"Dr. Barrett had passed the three-score and ten years allotted as the span of life. He fought a good fight, he kept he faith, and he has gone to a well-earned rest and reward."

(The above collections, of course, do not cover items coming through the regular channels of Conferences, Men and Millions nor Convention, since these items go directly to the treasurer of the Convention, and are transmitted to the treasurer of the Mission Board by drafts from the president of this Convention.)

Sunday School Missions.

One of the most significant and gratifying items of our missionary work is the constantly growing interest in missions in our Sunday Schools. Practically all of our most active schools have now adopted the plan worked out by this Convention and ratified by all of our Sunday School Conventions, of giving one offering a month for missions, one-half for home and one-half for foreign missions. We urge that this plan be continued and emphasized until all our schools shall have a part continuously, not only in giving to missions, but in studying and learning about missions. In very many of our schools there is a missionary program or address before the whole school, either every Sunday or once per month. Donations from Sunday Schools the past year amounted to $3,015.03. One-half of this amount goes to the support of our mountain work and the other half to foreign missions, as already stated. We have the faith to believe that we shall in the future have not only more funds for missionary purposes, but more recruits for the missionary field. Missionary teaching must be to the youths, if it is to be effectual, and there is no better place for this than in the Sunday School.

Our Mountain Work.

There are at present two organized Christian Churches in Carroll County, Va., and three or four additional preaching places, where there are good prospects for Churches. Rev. M. T. Sorrell is the pastor in charge. We have assisting him in the work, Mrs. M. T. Sorrell and Miss Margaret H. Morey, giving all their time to the day and Sunday School work, and Miss Rigney, a native of the mountains, who has been assisting the past several months because of our inability to secure an outside teacher for the work at Rocky Ford. We have a combined Church and school building at Elk Spur, which is serving a most useful purpose, both for the day school for which there are separate rooms, and for Sunday worship for which there is an adequate auditorium.

We have recently built, at an expense of about $1,200, a five-room bungalow for our preacher and teachers at Elk Spur.

There is pressing demand for another building at once, for the two former congregations, which have now consolidated into one. The land for this building has already been donated, and much lumber and timber and assistance promised in erecting the building, as soon as we are ready. We recommend that this building be erected just as soon as funds are available. We are conducting a day school and Sunday School in the Rigney home, near the site of this proposed building, and also using the home as our regular preaching place twice per month. The work in Carroll County, Va., is certainly a most worthy one, and opportunity for real service is great indeed. The people are appreciative, and a genuine community spirit is being developed by our Christian forces at work there.

Foreign Missions.

Since our last report to this body, we have paid to the foreign work in Japan $3,311.29; to Porto Rico, $1,053 33; to the general fund (for Japan and Porto Rico), $4,318.95, and for relief and reconstruction in Japan, $921.84—a total for the year of $9,605.41. We are very glad to report that five missionaries were sent out the past year—three to Japan and two to Porto Rico. There are other volunteers for the mission field, most of whom are now at colleges, preparing, and will soon be ready to go out for us. Rev. and Mrs. D. P. Barrett, who were the sole representatives on the foreign field for this body, have been faithful in the discharge of their duties, as have our other missionaries in Porto Rico and Japan, and the work goes well. Brother and Sister Barrett are much broken in health, and are soon to come home on furlough for a much-needed rest.

Our Burlington Christian Sunday School is to be most heartily congratulated on the zeal they display in behalf of foreign missions by the support of Miss Stacy in Japan, at a salary of $1,000 a year, and the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., on its support of Mrs. Toshio in Japan, at $15 per month; Miss Olive Williams in Porto Rico, at a salary of $720 per year, and two other missionaries on the home field. We cannot commend too highly the example of these two Churches and sincerely trust that others of our Sunday Schools and Churches will follow in this lead.

Men and Millions.

The board has looked after collecting Men and Millions the past year to the best of its ability and understanding. Our secretary and his helpers have held group-meetings and personal conferences with practically every pastor and captain in every Church. While our collections have not been as liberal as we had hoped, they have been gratifying, and we believe that the morale of the movement is increasing, rather than decreasing, with age. For the most part, the people who can pay are making an effort to do so, and in many instances real sacrifices are being made to meet Men and Millions obligations. Wherever pastors and captains have co-operated, collections have been good, and the spirit of the movement is fine. Where these do not co-operate, there is great difficulty, as a rule, in collecting. We have ninety-eight of the books and are collecting from the central office. We have, so far, been unable to secure some over sixty, in cases where they are desired. There were forty Churches that did not make subscriptions. These funds, as collected, are turned over to Executive Secretary C. D. Johnston at the end of each month, and accounts are kept by him with the Churches. Through him, the money has been transmitted to the treasurer, C. D. West, who handles same according to vouchers drawn and presented by Executive Secretary C. D. Johnston. Independently of these reports, we have endeavored to recreate interest in the movement and in every enterprise of the Church through sermons, addresses, the printed page and personal letters.

We recommend that the time for collecting the pledges be extended, in keeping with the recommendations of the finance committee. We have the faith to believe that those who pledged, for the most part, not only did so in good faith at the time, but will live up to that faith as their own financial conditions will allow. We have most encouraging promises and prospects for collecting a larger part of the funds, provided the time limit is extended.

Comment.

This board is under pledge to assist at Raleigh, N. C., in a substantial way, as soon as our present outstanding obligations will allow. We are happy to report that a substantial and adequate Church structure is being erected there now on the site of the former building. We have nowhere a more faithful and loyal band of Christian workers than in our Raleigh Church, and the board desires to see, as our cause there so richly deserves, a Church house worthy of our cause in the capital city of North Carolina.

South Norfolk, Va., has not had for years a house of worship adequate to their demands and needs, and the board is glad to report not only a favorable outlook for a new building, but work already begun in collecting funds by the local congregation. We are under necessity of assisting in this larger building project as soon as other outstanding obligations will allow.

We have assisted Christian Temple, Norfolk, to the extent of $40,000, all of which has been paid, though in order to meet demands upon us we were under constraint of borrowing $12,000, of which one thousand has been repaid and our obligations on this account now amount to $11,000 in the form of a promissory note. The congregation of Christian Temple more than met the challenge of the board, the board originally agreeing to pay a maximum of $40,000, on condition that Christian Temple raise $110,000, thus assuring a building costing $150,000. The cost of the present building, we are assured, is twice that amount and more. We congratulate the congregation and this body on the happy and auspicious outcome of this undertaking.

Our Church in Richmond was opened for services last summer, and is now occupied by an enthusiastic and growing congregation. This board paid half in the purchase price of the lot, and had paid the pastor's salary from the beginning. The Woman's Board of the Convention has Richmond as their home mission special, and are undertaking to pay $6,000 a year for a period of five years. The Richmond Church is an honor to our cause in the Virginia capital, and gives promise of steady growth and development.

We assisted our People's Church, at Dover, as an emergency matter, to the extent of $5,000, the Church there having raised for their enlarged building program $100,000. By this act, the board undertook to show our Dover people our deep interest in their great task and our appreciation of their generosity in kingdom service.

Our North Alabama work, to which we are contributing this year only $300, is most promising indeed, and gives evidence of growing into a Conference of Churches within a few years.

Other places named in this report as receiving aid have all had our careful and prayerful consideration, and we have done the best we knew in the distribution of funds at our disposal.

Throughout the bounds of the Convention there are evidences of an awakening in matters of Church building and needs for houses of worship in centers where we do not now have them. We can only enter these centers and render aid as funds are available.

We feel that many Churches and peoples who did not contribute to Men and Millions will help in carrying forward the work the next few years, and the board has voted that these Churches and people be given an opportunity to assist in our missionary effort and the great and ever-growing task before us.

Increase in Membership.

According to the "Annual" of this year, the total membership of the Churches composing the Conferences of this Convention increased in numbers from 28,418 to a total of 28,635, an increase of 217 members the past year. To this should be added the membership of the congregations in Carroll County, Va., which last year was thirty-four.

We are grateful to these good schools for their liberal offerings to our mission cause. We trust that this number shall greatly increase, as funds are so much needed now to carry forward our missionary work at home in Carroll County, Va., and abroad in Japan. We are happy at what these wide-awake schools are now doing.

Sincerely,
J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary.

SCHOOL OF MISSIONS.

The Surry and Sussex Counties one-day school of missions was held at New Lebanon Christian Church on Wednesday, April 9, 1924. The meeting was called to order by Superintendent Mrs. W. S. Barrett. "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name" was sung. Devotional service was conducted by superintendent. The twenty-third psalm and the Lord's prayer were repeated in concert. Prayer for our men and women in the various mission fields, for those who plan our work and direct our forces, for our Convention and Conference officials, and for this meeting, that it may be divinely guided, by Rev. W. B. Fuller.

Address of welcome was given by Mrs. Dennis Cofer, and was very fittingly responded to by Rev. Jas. L. Foster. A message by the district leader was an inspiration to all. Roll called, and the following Churches were represented: Waverly—woman's society, young people, and willing workers; Spring Hill—young people and willing workers; Centerville—Young people; Wakefield —woman's society; New Lebanon—young people; Dendron—woman's society and young people.

Violin solo by Mrs. Owen, accompanied by Mrs. Leadbetter. Minutes of 1923 meeting read and approved. Mrs. W. H. Denison, president of the General Woman's Missionary Board, and Miss Pattie Coghill, field secretary of the Southern Christian Convention, were introduced to the body by Dr. J. O. Atkinson, after which very interesting and helpful addresses were made by both Mrs. Denison and Miss Coghill. Instrumental duet by Mrs. Owen and Mrs. Leadbetter.

The superintendent appointed the following committees: resolutions—Mrs. E. M. Richardson, Mrs. Jas. L. Foster, and Miss Irene Cotten; place —Mrs. Blanche Moffitt, Mrs. A. Matthews, and Mrs. Dennis Cofer; nominations—Mrs. L. T. Williams, Mrs. Philip Hines, and Mrs. R. T. West. Adjourned for lunch. Dismissed by Rev. Fuller. A sumptuous dinner was served by the ladies of New Lebanon and Union Christian Churches, which was much enjoyed by all.

At the afternoon session, devotional was conducted by Mrs. Jas. L. Foster; lesson taken from the 111th psalm, followed by prayer. Song by the Young People's Society of New Lebanon. Address by Dr. J. O. Atkinson, mission secretary, was of the usual high type and very instructive. He also told of the progress and some of the needs in the mountain work. After this, a special offering amounting to $72.50 was made to defray the expenses of digging a well in the mountains.

Quartette by ladies of the Dendron Christian Church, accompanied by Miss Irene Cotten. A round-table was conducted by Mrs. Denison. Report of committees: place—Spring Hill Christian Church extended an invitation to meet with them in 1925; resolutions—your committee on resolutions beg leave to submit the following: Resolved, first, we felt at home at once by the hearty welcome address of Mrs. Cofer, and wish to thank her for same; also for the response and other encouraging words of Rev. J. L. Foster; and second, we heartily appreciate the helpful and forceful addresses of our three missionary workers—Mrs. Denison, Miss Coghill, and Dr. Atkinson—who came to us for this district rally; and also we heartily commend these meetings for the inspiration they give us to take back to our Churches. We hope they will be continued from year to year to encourage our efforts in mission work; third, we wish to express our appreciation for the work done by our superintendent in her untiring efforts in getting such a large attendance from our Churches; also to Mesdames Owen and Leadbetter for the two very enjoyable musical numbers, to the young people of this Church for the beautiful song rendered, and for the lovely selection by the ladies quartette of Dendron; fourth, we appreciate the words of our workers in regard to our mission literature and hope the Christian Missionary especially will soon be in every home of our Convention; fifth, last but not least, we have thoroughly enjoyed the hospitality of the ladies of New Lebanon and Union Churches and their efforts in preparing a lunch that was bountiful, appetizing and nourishing, and served in such a delightful manner; also we appreciate the duet by Mesdames Cockes and Price, which was an appropriate closing to a "Happy Day." Nominations—We, the nominating committee do hereby submit the following: superintendent, Mrs. W. S. Barrett; assistant superintendent, Mrs. O. M. Cockes; secretary, Miss Evelyn Little. These reports were adopted as read. Offering, $7.16.

Instrumental duet, "Oh! Happy Day," by Mrs. Cockes and Mrs. Price. We were then dismissed, with prayer by Dr. Atkinson.

Mrs. W. S. Barrett, Superintendent.
Mrs. E. T. Atkinson, Secretary Pro Tem.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

May 18, 1924.

Topic: "Isaiah and the Assyrian Crisis."

Golden Text: "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble."—Psa. 46:1.

Lesson: 2 Kings, chs. 18-20; Isaiah, chs. 36-38.

Devotional Reading: Psa. 46.

We come to better reading when we come to Hezekiah's life and activities. For he was head and shoulders above the kings we have met during the past few weeks in these lessons. "He did that which was right in the sight of the Lord, according to all that David his father did. He removed the high places and broke the images and cut down the groves. . . . He trusted in the Lord God of Israel, and departed not from following Him, but kept His commandments, which the Lord commanded Moses. And the Lord was with him; and he prospered whithersoever he went forth; and he rebelled against the King of Assyria, and served him not." This is the character sketch we have of Hezekiah. He was a good man and a good king.

"And he rebelled against the King of Assyria, and served him not." And thereby hangs a tale. For under Ahaz, Judah had paid tribute to Assyria. And now that this tribute was about to be cut off, Assyria was to be heard from. Accordingly, Sennacherib came into Judah and took many of the fenced cities and laid siege to Jerusalem. Hezekiah realized his imprudence, and becoming fearful, made overtures to Sennacherib and submitted to another heavy tribute or tax. The sum was so large, and times were so hard, that Hezekiah was forced to take the silver from the house of the Lord, the treasures of the king's house, and even the gold from the doors of the temple. It would seem that Assyria would be satisfied.

But Assyria was starting out on a career of world-conquest, and having tasted blood, she was soon on the war-path again. The King of Assyria sent an army under the command of shrewd and bold generals against Jerusalem. In a blustering and insolent way, one of the generals, Rabshakeh, demanded the surrender of the city. His speech was a masterpiece of its kind. He reminded the Jews of Assyria's greatness and of her conquests, and suggested that the gods of other nations had not been able to withstand the hosts of the Assyrian god. He also suggests that the Jews could not dare to hope for help from Egypt, for Egypt was itself a "bruised reed." He went even so far as to insinuate, in fact he openly charged, that Hezekiah was deceiving the people. His logic was, apparently, flawless. It seemed that Judah was leading a lost cause, and the best thing to do was to surrender at once.

Only one side of the case had been heard, however, and all the evidence was not in. Hezekiah, in desperation, sent for Isaiah, asking the prophet to pray in behalf of Judah. (What a parable of life. When folks are in trouble they instinctively seek out the man of God. Only this morning a woman called me and asked me to pray for her sister, who was in trouble.) Isaiah was the man for the hour. He declared that Jehovah would dofend His own honor, and that He would wreak vengeance on the Assyrian forces. There should be no fear. For the King of Assyria should not come into the city, and moreover he would be visited by destruction on his army. And his words came true that very night.

Hezekiah later became ill, but his life was spared, and he lived to a good old age. He very imprudently showed the treasures of the house of the Lord to an embassy from Babylon, and thus called down a rebuke on the part of Isaiah, and also gave impetus to that movement on the part of Babylon which eventuated in the captivity of Judah.

Some Teaching Points.

1. God hears and answers prayer.
2. Answer to prayer often comes in unexpected ways.
3. God often answers prayer through another person.
4. Man's extremity is God's opportunity.
5. "Daily prayer will help to lessen daily cares."
6. Godliness, not material resources, is a nation's best defense.
7. One statesman is worth more than a dozen politicians.
8. True patriotism consists not in waving a flag, but in striving to make our country righteous as well as strong.
9. Even kings can find wise counsel and strength in men of God.
10. God uses other nations to accomplish His purposes.
11. Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord.
12. "Pride goeth before a fall, and a haughty spirit before destruction."
13. Jehovah delivers those who trust in Him.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

May 18, 1924.

Topic: "God's Holy Day—What it is For, and Why."—Ex. 20:8-11; Mark 2:27-28.

Daily Readings: Sabbath for rest.—Dt. 5:12-15. For helpfulness.—Luke 14:1-6. For meditation.—Rev. 1:9-20. For Church-going.—Mark 6:1-6. For praise.—Psa. 92:1-5. For preaching.—Acts 13:14-17, 42-44.

The signs of the times point to rapid extinction of the Sabbath Day. In fact, there are some sections of our country, and especially some sections of our big cities, where they do not have any Sunday. Stores and places of amusement are open and do a big business on Sunday, while trains and automobiles are rushing people to and fro, mostly on pleasure trips. And even in many smaller towns and in rural communities the Sabbath has lost much of its dignity and certainly much of its religious spirit.

And this is wrong, decidedly wrong. The person or the nation that bids defiance to one of God's laws is playing fast and loose with the penalty of sin. And Sabbath observance and the sanctity of Sunday, is one of God's eternal laws. It is written, not only in the Ten Commandments; it is written in the law of life. A stated period for rest, recreation, worship is as necessary to a well-rounded life as are food and air. God commanded us to remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy, not simply to discipline us, but because He loved us and knew what was best for us. And he who thinks that we are old-fashioned and old-fogied because we raise a cry against the wanton desecration of the Sabbath, needs to remember that it is the will of God.

There is, of course, the possibility of going to extremes in Sabbath observance. I doubt very much whether it would be expedient to go back to some of the puritanical ideas in regard to the Sabbath. But we had better do that and have something of their character and godliness than to swing to the other extreme. I do know this. There is a great deal that goes on in Christian communities, and that is participated in by professing Christians, that is in defiance of the letter and the spirit of Sunday or the Sabbath.

Sunday should combine at least three elements. It should be a day of rest. Animals, as well as men need at least one day a week for rest. It has been scientifically proved that animals and men do better work where this rule obtains. And Sunday is the time for such rest. One has only to observe the activities of our modern world to see that with a great many, perhaps a majority, Sunday is anything else but a day of rest. People come to their work on Monday morning more tired than they were on Saturday night, because of their dissipation on Sunday.

In the second place, Sunday should be a day of recreation. Sunday should furnish us a change from the usual activities of the week. This opens up, of course, a broad field. For after all, the matter resolves itself in the issue of what constitutes wholesome recreation for Sunday. It is difficult, of course, to legislate for details. But I have no hesitancy in saying that a great deal of our modern Sunday recreation life is un-Christian. Many people make a plea for commercialized games and recreational activities on Sunday, and as a rule the people who frequent such places are the people who have been there during the week.

In the third place, and of supreme importance, Sunday should be a day of worship. Whatever the Sabbath might have been, our Christian Sunday ought to be a day of worship. He who has allowed a Sunday to go by without giving heed to the needs of the soul has missed the higher meaning of the Sabbath. And he who habitually does this is committing spiritual suicide.

Some Thoughts on the Lesson.

If six days' work cannot support us, a seventh day's work will not help, for it will weaken us for the other day's work.

Satan does not all at once seek to destroy the Sabbath. He seeks to undermine it by introducing apparently innocent sports. Slowly other things are advocated.

The Sabbath laws must be written in our hearts. We might obey them outwardly while hating them inwardly. We need the Sabbath spirit, and then laws will not trouble us.

Evil forces are organized like an army against the Sabbath, not because they hate the Sabbath, but because they want to make money from people who wish to be amused.

THE CHURCH THAT IS TO BE.

Too long has the Church struggled along with inadequate equipment toward the accomplishment of the purpose whereunto it was established, namely: the coming of His kingdom among men. It is true that the Church has developed wonderfully both in spirit and effectiveness since its establishment, but there are more excellent things yet to be accomplished in the very near future—say, the next half-decade. It is the duty and privilege of the laymen and ministers alike to co-operate and sacrifice to bring about the realization of our Christian idealism, the brotherhood of man.

One of the important duties of the Church is to train all its members for active Christian service, and to do this effectively the Church of the future will use the most modern methods of teaching and training. Christian education as a means of nurturing the child within the folds of the kingdom looking forward toward its union with the Church, will be emphasized as the best method of winning souls to Christ.

In order to render the most effective service, the Church must have better physical equipment. No longer must the Master's work suffer for lack of separate class-rooms for pupils, proper teaching equipment, and adequate provision for recreation. The leaders in the Church of tomorrow will recognize the fact that we can serve God when we play as well as when we pray. In recognition of this fact, the new Church will be equipped with a gymnasium, athletic grounds and other provisions for social, physical, and spiritual development.

In its development, the Church will work on several distinct principles. Instead of being a parasite on the flesh of civilization as some of our forefathers who were forced to pay taxes to support it thought it was, it will fruit in loving service to God and brother-man. Evangelism that will save, missions which will win souls to Christ, and social service that shall bless him who receives, but even more him who ministers—these three shall be the moving spirits of the Church that is to be.

The gospel of the future shall be a gospel that satisfies. It will be based primarily upon a heart experience of the saving power of Christ. Men shall come to emphasize deeds and not creeds. It will be a gospel of service, not of theology. This gospel will be a social gospel, a gospel which will save for service now and not for safety from punishment in the hereafter.

It is the duty of the Church to rebuke wickedness and destroy sin wherever it is found, but its duty does not stop here. What is the use of closing the gambling joints, the immoral shows, and eliminating other social evils if the Church does not put something better in its place. So, in order to be successful, the Church must provide a systematic, organized and correlated program of Christian education.

The Sunday School has proven a failure in teaching Christianity to the youth of today. This is due to lack of time, insufficient equipment, teachers who are not properly trained, and lack of good leaders. The week-day school of religion is the rainbow in the sky of Christianity, promising a future made bright and Christ-like through its ministry. We are coming more and more to realize the importance of Christian education, and if we devote, say an hour a day to religious instructions and training instead of the miserly fifty-two a year, half of which is taken up otherwise than teaching, we shall have a citizenry which will be Christian beyond our fondest dreams. It is our duty to provide for the education of the spirit and heart and the emotions of youth as well as to educate the intellect. The World War demonstrated the curse of the trained intellect and the cruel and pagan heart. Knowledge is power, and power without a Christian heart and Christian motive to direct it is a dangerous thing.

In view of the great need and the present tendency in that direction, it is not a far-fetched prophecy that the Church of tomorrow will be one great Church, and that petty theological beliefs will be melted in the warm flood of love which shall unite the brethren even as Christ prayed it should. In a lesser degree, this was true during the World War when all Churches united in sending chaplains with the soldiers and provided a minister for every twelve hundred men. During this crisal time, the Protestants and Catholics worked together in perfect accord. So it shall be in the future, and then we shall behold how good and how pleasant it is for the brethren to dwell together in unity.

The Golden Rule reached the high-water mark of Hebrew prophetic and legal teaching, but the Church of the future will be guided by the spirit of the New Testament standard which soars high above in its majestic splendor of breadth and reach. Hear what the Master has to say on this subject. His standard is found in John 15:12, and in it is given the essence of spiritual life. It is divine love. Hear His command, O Church that is to be, hear it and live—"This is my commandment, that ye love one another, as I have loved you."

With more adequate physical equipment, sufficient time for religious instruction, and enlarged conception of Christianity, leaders and teachers who are willing to sacrifice and agonize that the Church of the living God shall go forward and that the gates of hell shall not prevail against it, the Church of the future is facing a path which will brighten more and more unto the perfect day, when the brethren shall love one another even as Christ loved us, and His spirit shall reign over the whole earth and all men shall worship him and proclaim Him King.

W. S. WEATHERS.

The Senate has just passed the bonus bill, providing adjusted compensation for the American soldiers in the late war. It takes the form of insurance, the cash option provision having been stricken out. The bill will now go to conference for a few minor adjustments with the House, which passed it some time ago. It will then go to the President for his signature. Some believe that he will veto the measure. The Democrats, though supporting the bill, are not entirely satisfied, and expect to amend later.

Dr. Dwight H. Day resigned as mission treasurer of the Presbyterian Church. Dr. Day had served in this position for eighteen years. He came to it from a prosperous business career in New York, and has put the Church mission work on a firm foundation. He is widely known outside the confines of his Church, and has done much for missions the world over.

The automobile pays more in license fees than is spent on good roads in this country. The nation can afford more and better roads; it can afford more and better schools. Good roads everywhere mean good schools everywhere—both together mean good citizens everywhere.

More meat was produced and eaten in the United States in 1923 than ever before in a single year. The Department of Agriculture estimates the consumption of meat at 18,481,000,000 pounds, or 167 pounds for every man, woman and child in the United States. Total production figures were not announced.

OUR PLEDGES to Men and Millions are Sacred, Solemn and Binding.

These obligations were made through the Church to the Kingdom of God and to all that pertains to building up that Kingdom in the world, so far as our Christian Church is concerned. As Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has so pertinently pointed out: "A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations--'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42)--but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

Many are making great sacrifices to meet these obligations and pay these pledges. Every one who fails to do so not only produces paralysis in his own moral system, but to that extent paralyses the efforts and sacrifices that the faithful and the loyal make.

BEAR IN MIND MEN AND MILLIONS MEAN AND STAND FOR ALL THAT THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH MEANS AND STANDS FOR.

—REMEMBER—

that the fourth year ends April 30, 1924.

After that, we have only one more year in which to meet these obligations. Unless we put forth a mighty effort to pay some on these pledges during the last quarter of the fourth year, there is great danger that we will fail entirely, because of the bulk of our pledge looming up before us in a one-year period.

Paying SOMETHING by April 30, 1924, will make it easy to pay ALL by April 30, 1925. Where there is a will there is a way, and God always helps those who try to their capacity to help themselves.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Sister Ada Bradshaw, beloved wife of Bro. Jacob E. Bradshaw, departed this life to the life beyond on April 9, 1924, age 54 years. Besides a devoted husband, she leaves to mourn their loss three sons, five grandchildren and a host of friends who were drawn so close to her by her sweet Christian character. Her life was exemplary, she being a devout Christian, a devoted wife and a loving mother. A great portion of her life she was a true and loyal member of Isle of Wight Church. Her faith in God was vivid and vital, her belief in prayer steadfast and unshaken, and her influence in the community was for good and for God.

When the summons came for her departure she was ready and willing to go. She was one of the first ladies of the Church to organize the Ladies' Aid Society, and was ever ready to do her share in whatever was to be done. Her Church and society was a part of her last rational conversation. Therefore, be it resolved:

First, That the Ladies' Aid and Missionary Society of Isle of Wight Church has lost a faithful and loyal member.

Second, That, while we mourn her departure, we bow in humble submission to the will of the all-wise Father, who "doeth all things well."

Third, That we pledge ourselves to nobler efforts in behalf of our societies in furthering the cause of Christ. Truly it can be said of her, "She hath done what she could."

Fourth, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the society records, one sent to her bereaved husband, and one sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

McLENNAN.

Sister Cornie Cannada McLennan, the wife of Bro. D. A. McLennan and daughter of the late Ruffin and Mary Cannada, died at her home near Chapel Hill, April 9th. Had she lived thirteen days longer she would have been 64 years of age. Besides her devoted husband, she leaves seven sons and two daughters—J. W., R. B. and D. C., of Greensboro; J. E., of Spencer; Dallas, Brady, Aubry and Miss Pearl, of Chapel Hill, and Miss Nellie, of Durham.

Sister McLennan became a member of Damascus Christian Church in early life, and since that time she and her devoted husband have been actively interested in the work of their Church. She ever held before her children, teaching them by precept and example, the value of clean Christian character. It was not a work in vain, for today they do honor to her life, in that several of them hold very responsible positions and all of them are professed followers of her Christ and are held in high esteem by all who know them. Six of these noble sons tenderly bore her remains to their last resting-place.

The immense gathering of friends at her funeral and the very profuse floral offering evidenced the high esteem in which she was held in her own community and several other parts of the State.

B. J. HOWARD.

FAISON.

God, in His infinite love and mercy, has seen fit to take from our midst a beloved member of Union Christian Church, Mrs. M. L. Faison, who died on March 8, 1924. Be it, therefore, resolved

That in the death of this earnest, faithful servant of God, the Church of which she was a member for many years has sustained a great loss. She was of noble Christian character, ever ready to lend a hand in the upbuilding of worthy objects, a willing worker in the service of our Lord. Our loss is her eternal gain.

That we tender our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved children and relatives and pray that God will sustain and help them through the dark hours, that they may be able to look up through their tears and say, "Thy will be done."

That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family and to The Christian Sun for publication, and a copy be filed on the Church record.

MILES.

Mrs. Sallie R. Miles, wife of A. Y. Miles, of Gilesonville, N. C., was born May 14, 1872, and died April 11, 1924. The funeral was conducted at Bethel Christian Church by her pastor. Her remains were placed in the Church cemetery. The Eastern Star Lodge conducted the service at the grave, she being a member of this lodge.

She joined Bethel Christian Church in early life. She was a charter member of this Church and remained faithful until she was called home. She leaves to mourn their loss a husband, ten children and a host of relatives and friends.

May the Lord bless the bereaved ones and help us all to live close to Him.

J. F. APPLE.

GARRISON.

Mrs. Nancy A. Kernodle Garrison, wife of T. N. W. Garrison, was born May 30, 1851, and died April 17, 1924, aged 72 years 10 months and 17 days. Her funeral was conducted by her pastor, the writer, at Bethlehem Christian Church, and her remains laid to rest in the Church cemetery. She joined Bethlehem Church in early life, and remained a faithful member until God called her home.

May the Lord bless and comfort the companion she leaves behind, and may her influence still live with us, helping us to live closer to Him who conquered death for every one.

Why Drugs Fail

Many chronic diseases fail to respond to drug treatment, even in the hands of the best physicians, whereas acute diseases usually respond readily. When a disease has become chronic, drugs often seem to do as much harm as they do good, for the system rebels against them. It is just this class of cases which derive the greatest benefit from drinking Shivar, America's best stomach, liver and kidney Water. If you suffer with chronic dyspepsia, indigestion, sick headache, rheumatism, kidney or liver disease, uric poisoning or other curable conditions due to impure blood, do not hesitate to accept the Spring's liberal offer as printed below. Their records show that only two in a hundred, on the average, have reported "no benefit." This is a wonderful record from a truly wonderful Spring. Sign the following letter:

Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if I report no benefit you agree to refund the price of the water in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return within a month.

New Strength and Energy For the Weak and Aged

To be strong, vigorous and active you must have plenty of good, rich, red blood of the kind that organic iron—Nuxated Iron—helps make. Nuxated Iron is like the iron in your blood and like the iron in spinach, lentils and apples, while metallic iron is iron just as it comes from the action of strong acids on small pieces of iron. Over 4,000,000 people annually are using Nuxated Iron. It quickly helps make rich red blood, revitalize wornout, exhausted nerves and give new strength and energy. At all druggists. The Woman's Own Car

All Chevrolet models are popular with women on account of their beauty of line and finish and ease of handling.

The new four-passenger coupe was designed especially for women. Its stylish, distinguished appearance makes immediate appeal, and closer examination promotes enthusiasm. Best of all—the price is surprisingly low for so high-grade a production, equipped as it is with a Fisher Body, two extra wide doors that make feasible graceful entrance to and exit from the car Single, comfortable driver's seat, ample room for two in the rear seat, and a fourth folding seat for an extra passenger.

Comfortably, tastefully upholstered and artistically trimmed with good-grade hardware.

Plate-glass windows on all four sides. Cord tires on easily demountable rims, with extra rim.

Although designed with especial consideration of our women friends, we find this model is also favored by many men, for business and family use. Merchandise samples can be carried inside the car instead of in the rear compartment. Evenings and week ends the same car admirably meets the requirements of the small family.

IN MEMORIAM.

In memory of Irene V. Barrett, who died one year ago.
Silently and sadly beneath the tomb,
But not forgotten, there the flowers bloom,
Lies a dear one whom we love;
One we feel has gone above.

Patient and enduring the awful days,
She passed them by in many ways.
That awful morning! I'll never forget,
And that sad good-night I think of yet.

All that loving hands could do
Could not heal her—not even to soothe;
Prayer went up day and night,
But God saw fit, and it was right.

For she was ready, and wanted to go
Out of this world of pain and woe.
It was sad to tell us all good-by,
But hope to meet her again on high.

We miss thee, Irene, in the home;
We miss thee in company and when alone;
We miss thee at Church, for this I care—
We remember you here, and every where.

But we hope to meet you, and your smiling face to find,
In the heaven bright, beyond the stars that shine.
Mother and father coming to welcome you some more;
Sisters and brothers journeying to that happy shore.

Oh! what a happy meeting in that home of rest—sweet rest!
We are trying to live to your last earthly request.
Where no sorrow comes, no tears in the sky,
The circle will be unbroken in the sweet by and by.

HOWELL.

Jet. H. Howell, son of Thomas and Lucinda Howell, was born January 25, 1882, and died April 4, 1924, aged 42 years 2 months and 9 days. On Christmas Day, 1903, he was united in marriage with Miss Mary Babb, to which union were born three children—Maud Lee, Robert Edward and Mary Elizabeth, all of whom are living.

Bro. Howell was for many years a faithful member of Holy Neck Church, and for several years served as deacon. His devotion to his Church was beautiful, and his Christian life exemplary. He enjoyed the highest esteem of all who knew him.

Surviving, besides his wife and children, are three sisters—Mrs. B. F. Fowler, Holland, Va.; Mrs. Ed. Bashford, Portsmouth, Va.; Mrs. Eva Etheridge, Norfolk, Va.; also one brother, H. H. Howell, Portsmouth, Va. With these relatives who deeply mourn his untimely passing, he will be greatly missed by a large circle of friends, and especially will he be missed in his Church.

Funeral services were conducted Sunday afternoon at Holy Neck Church by the undersigned, assisted by the Revs. J. H. Lightbourne and L. F. Paulette. Despite a heavy downpour of rain throughout the day, the Church was crowded to the doors, and some who came to show their love and respect could not get in. GEO. D. EASTES.

Song Writers Enter Suit.—

Music publishers and writers of popular songs have started a suit in the courts to have it determined whether or not radios can broadcast their songs without the consent of the publishers or owners of the copyright. Irvin Berlin, Harry Von Tilzer, and many other popular song writers and publishers are concerned in the suit.

Jew Gets Road Sentence.—

A Jew, by the name of Cohen, was sentenced to the county roads of Guilford County, in the municipal court of Greensboro, by Judge D. H. Collins recently. It is pointed out that Cohen is the first member of the Hebrew race to get a road sentence in the State of North Carolina. Cohen was charged with having whiskey in his possession. Nineteen gallons were found in his home, and about a quart in his grocery store.

A Tornado Sweeps South.—

On April 30th a terrific tornado swept over portions of seven Southern States, leaving death and destruction in its wake, 113 persons being killed outright in the storm and 500 others injured more or less severely. It is estimated that property damage from the storm will surpass ten million dollars. A number of the stricken areas are calling for help, and the Red Cross is doing all possible in rehabilitating the destroyed property, and is ministering to the injured.

Grace Koningen Wins.—

Grace Koningen, a Holstein-Friesian cow, raised and owned by the Montana State College of Agriculture, is the champion milk producer of the United States. In one year she produced 32,295 pounds, or more than sixteen tons of milk. The former record was 31,581 pounds, produced by Adironac Wietske Dairy Maid. The record of Grace Koningen seems almost unbelievable, but it shows the marvelous power of a well-fed cow.

A Cemetery Unearthed.—

English archaeologists have unearthed a cemetery of the sixth century at Stratford-on-the-Avon. They regard it as a great discovery and of much value in the study of early English history. Probably the most important thing found was a shield which had been buried with a great chieftain. It is made of iron and inlaid with bronze and gold. More than two hundred interments were made in this cemetery, some forty of which had been cremated and the ashes buried in an earthen urn. The graves reveal much concerning the customs of people in pre-Christian England.

Persia Deposes Sultan.—

Sultan Ahmed Mirza, the young Shah of Persia, who is only twenty-six years old, has been deposed by the Persian Parliament, and his two-year-old son named as his successor. The report of the deposition of the sultan comes from Teheran, the capital of Persia. It seems that the young shah liked Paris better than his native land. He has been absent from Persia so long that the Parliament has decided to make a change. There have been reports that the Persians were planning a republic, but such plans, if they ever existed, seem to have been abandoned.

Our Largest Spending Unit.—

The veterans' bureau for the relief of the soldiers of the late war is perhaps the government's largest spending unit. It is said that it now consumes $126 out of every one thousand of Uncle Sam's money. Two billion dollars have been paid out since the war. All this money has been used in pensioning wounded soldiers and in rehabilitation work among the soldiers. The United States has been exceedingly generous to those who fought in the late war. But why should they have had to fight? War costs at best too much in life, in suffering and in money. We have learned that at least from the last war.

Egypt Has First Parliament.—

Egypt, governed for ages by the pharaohs, and in more recent times dominated by Turkish sultans, and still more recently under a military protectorate of Great Britain—now has a Parliament elected by the people. It is the first really democratic body ever to assemble in the valley of the Nile. Egypt's first Parliament was formally opened by King Fuad. The occasion was marked by Oriental splendor and popular rejoicing. The king headed a great procession which marched through the streets of Cairo to the new Parliament house. There he made his opening speech and outlined the government policies. J. Morton Howell, United States minister to Egypt, marched in the procession and was greeted with shouts of "Long live America!" America holds a high place of leadership among the nations of the world, and with that leadership there is great opportunity and great responsibility. As citizens of the United States, we should be very careful whither we lead the world.

Once Out of Debt.—

It was nearly a century ago, in December, 1834, the Secretary of the Treasury Taney, in his annual report to Congress, announced that the entire national debt would be paid or provided for during the ensuing year. "Thus the United States will present that happy and probably, in modern times, unprecedented spectacle of a people substantially free from the smallest portion of debt," to quote from the report.

Secretary Taney's predecessor, Secretary McLane, had predicted the total extinguishment of the national debt three years before, and it is evident that the officials of that day had no confidence in the theory, attributed to Hamilton but probably never advanced as a general truth, that "a public debt is a public blessing," for the final wiping out of the last bond occurred but seventeen years after the close of the War of 1812, in which much of the debt was created.

Had later financial administration been as thrifty, Uncle Sam might long ago have paid the Civil War debt, which still drags along to the enrichment of the bondholders.—Ex.

Immigration Bill Passed.—

The immigration bill passed the House on April 13th, and the Senate on April 18th. The former immigration provision, which expires on June 30th this year, provided that foreigners might come to this country from each foreign country on the quota of 3 per cent of their nationals in this country according to the census of 1910. The present bill, as passed by Congress, provides that a quota of only 2 per cent of the nationals of each country, as shown by the census of 1890, may enter this country. Under the law now in force, about 150,000 foreigners have been admitted each year. Under the new bill, the total will be reduced to 165,000 each year.

The bill, as recently passed, excludes all Orientals from this country. This exclusion clause includes Japanese, Chinese, and Hindus. There has been for some time a rigid restriction of Oriental immigration, but a few Japanese have been admitted each year (about 600) under what is known as "the gentleman's agreement." This might have been continued had not Hanihara, the Japanese ambassador, handed Secretary Hughes a statement bearing on the subject in which he declared that should a restriction measure be passed, "grave consequences" might result. The Senate understood this phrase as a threat, and immediately passed the exclusion clause. Only four Senators voted in the negative.

President Coolidge has not as yet signed the bill, and no intimation of what may be expected from the White House is yet known. The Tokyo government is indignant over the passage of the bill. On the Pacific coast, where feeling against the Japanese is very strong, the applause of the action of Congress is practically unanimous. Elsewhere throughout the country, there is a feeling of regret at the disturbance of amicable relations between the United States and Japan.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. J. W. Patton preached at both services at Durham last Sunday, in the absence of the pastor, Rev. S. C. Harrell.

This is the final issue of THE SUN under Dr. Barrett's second administration. Next week Dr. Atkinson and his editorial staff begin their duties.

Dr. Atkinson and Superintendent Johnston were at Needham's Grove, Randolph County, last Sunday. They were impressed with the promise of the field there.

Rev. B. F. Black is improved, he thinks. The brotherhood will gladly remember this noble chaplain of the A. E. F. and faithful Christian minister in their prayers.

Don't forget the Chautauqua and School of Christian Methods at Elon College July 28 to August 3. Those who attend one of these Chautauquas always want to attend another.

Dr. Barrett remembered the Christian Orphanage with a bequest of $500. He left the residue of his library to the college. Just before the fire he gave the college about five hundred volumes.

Mr. W. E. MacClenny has placed our entire Church under obligation by his research work—work of a high order, too—into our early history. He is continuing his investigations. Read his report in this issue.

Miss Beulah Lawrence, Jonesboro, N. C., in renewing, has some splendid things to say for THE CHRISTIAN SUN. We appreciate them every one. Our people do like our paper and that encourages us to work all the harder.

Dr. W. C. Wicker is in the field almost constantly these days, looking after his duties as educational secretary of the Masons. As assistant grand lecturer of the same order, Rev. J. W. Patton spends most of his time in the field.

The Elon professors continue to "break up" high schools, and from all reports succeed in splendid fashion in the performance of their duty. This is good advertisement for the college, and it does a professor good to make a speech on such an occasion.

Mr. A. M. Johnson, Fuquay Springs, N. C., passed to his reward on Monday, the 5th of May. For many years he has been an intense sufferer, but his faith in God grew brighter with each succeeding sun. He was an inspiration to his neighbors. God rest his noble soul in peace!

The Elon commencement this time, May 25 to 27, bids fair to be largely attended. On the afternoon of the 27th, the Alamance building will be formally tendered and accepted. It is hoped that large numbers of our people will attend the exercises throughout. Don't forget the date—May 25-27.

The death of Rev. Geo. D. Eastes is a severe blow to our ministry. His funeral was conducted in Holland at the Christian Church there on Wednesday at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. Rev. J. H. Lightbourne was in charge. Interment was in the Oak Grove Cemetery, Portsmouth, Va. Full account will appear later.

Rev. W. T. Scott, in July, will begin editing the "Christian Endeavor Topics" for THE SUN. Brother Hardcastle continues to write the "Sunday School Lesson Comments," but did not feel he could continue both. Bro. Hardcastle's work has certainly won for him high commendation. We feel sure Bro. Scott will deserve a similar praise.

Elon won both times in the triangular debate with Erskine and Presbyterian Colleges. Elon is making quite a reputation in intercollegiate debating, having won four out of six decisions this year. Elon's debaters in the recent debate were H. C. Hainer, J. T. Banks, F. L. Gibbs and J. N. Denton.

The publicity work of the Southern Christian Convention was handled splendidly. Credit is especially due to Mr. J. H. Blanchard, Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, and Miss Mary Andrews, assistant secretary of the Convention. Publicity work counts. Why should a gathering of Christian workers put their light under a bushel by keeping their deeds from the public press?

The Convention adopted a progressive budget plan. Beginning with the 1926 session of the Convention, $10,000 additional annually is to be asked of the Conferences. Between now and then, the Conferences are to be asked to approve this plan and to pass it on down to the local Churches for ratification. Dr. J. O. Atkinson, mission secretary, was elected to present to the Conferences and Churches the claims and methods of Christian stewardship and Church finance. It seems to us that it would be hard to improve on this plan.

Have you been keeping up with the Sunday School literature of our Church? It is vastly improved in mechanical appearance and contents as well. If you do not subscribe for the Journal of Christian Education, you should be ashamed of yourself. Every officer of every organization in any way connected with any Church of our denomination needs this journal. Write the Christian Publishing Association, Dayton, Ohio, for sample copies of it, and of any other literature our Church issues.

FORWARD-LOOKING PEOPLE.

I regard the Sunday School as the forward-looking institution of the Church, stated a leading speaker at a religious education convention. The reference is apt and suggestive. It came from a man who, because of his secretarial duties, was not often able to be in Sunday Schools.

The Sunday School, in the first place, is made up largely of children and youth. Naturally, they look forward. They partake of the optimism of spring. Then, the teachers and officers who associate with the young people catch the hopefulness and energy of their associates. People do not grow old when they do such work. The years may increase, but their hearts "keep step" with youth.

Further than that, Christianity and the gospel message always inspire the forward look. Christ brought hope and joy to mankind. The Bible, which is the chief textbook of the Sunday School, though interspersed with warnings, generally breathes of better days and triumphs for the truth.

The Sunday School is noted for starting things. It always keeps some new projects in view. The hope of the future is wrapped in the fortunes of the forward-looking Sunday School folks.—Vanguard.

WORD OF THANKS.

On Thursday evening, April 17th, we were paid a visit by several members of Hayes Chapel Church at Garner. They came bearing tokens of their liberality in the form of many and good things to eat. We were glad indeed to have them visit us, but when they began to unload the provisions and to fill our pantry with the good things which they gave us, our hearts were made to swell with a gratitude that we could not express.

We wish to thank each and every one who had a part in this donation of good things, and assure you that our appreciation is beyond expression.

To each and every one who has given of their means for the purpose of helping me in the purchase of a new automobile, I wish to express my sincere appreciation.

J. FULLER JOHNSON.

MRS. BARRETT EXPRESSES THANKS.

I wish to express my grateful appreciation to the many friends who made my recent sorrow as light as it could be. How I could have gotten along without their great kindness and sympathy, I cannot see.

The authorities of the Lawrence Hospital did everything they could to help me through the trying ordeal. I cannot thank them sufficiently for their considerate kindness and attention to me and Dr. Barrett.

The friends at Elon College and in Winston-Salem came to me with every assurance of sympathy and assisted me in making the funeral arrangements in the most kindly manner.

Those who attended the funeral in Suffolk and took part in it made my sadness lighter by their presence and their sympathetic ministries. Others who have written to express their sympathy have cheered my heart so far as it can be comforted amid such bereavement.

I wish, too, to thank the acting editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN and the Southern Christian Convention for their kindness and consideration.

MRS. J. P. BARRETT.

HAW RIVER.

As I rarely see anything about our Sunday School in THE SUN, I thought I would write a few notes about it, so as to let the readers know that we are still in the land of the living and have the largest school we have ever had, and we are doing a greater work than ever before.

The men's Bible class, with Mrs. J. A. Long as teacher, is clothing a little boy at the Christian Orphanage, and they are planning to give him a college education when he gets through at the orphanage. The ladies' Bible class, with Mr. Frank W. Bains as teacher, is one of the greatest working classes I ever knew. Though small in number, they support four classes in the Sunday School and have bought equipment for the primary class-room and have bought a drugget for the Christian Orphanage, and have given a good amount to pay for dental work for the school children, and gave a large donation to help install a new furnace in the Church; they have bought flowers for the sick and dead, and have entertained the small children of the Sunday School; and when the M. P. Church was burned, they gave fifty dollars to help rebuild the Church. They have given for good purposes to the amount of $284.59 in just a little over twelve months.

Now, I believe the reason why our class is doing more work than ever before is because we have caught the missionary vision as never before. Other Sunday Schools please let us hear from you.

A MEMBER.

BETTY'S OTHER NAME.

"Betty S—! Betty S—!" Adele kept repeating as she looked at the big rag doll with her sunbonnet and her gingham apron. "What do you suppose her other name is, mamma? Why do you think grandma wants me to guess? I don't understand it."

"Neither do I, Adele," said Mrs. Ford. "Grandma says you will get a prize when you guess Betty's other name, so if you want to earn the prize you will have to put on your thinking-cap."

So the letter that Adele wrote to her grandma thanking her for the doll had a neat little list of names, beginning with the letter S, but none of them were right. Whenever Adele heard of a new name, she ran to put it down, but somehow she never could get just the right one. All this time poor Betty S— was tucked away in a box in the playroom, for her little owner did not like her at all. She did not tell her mamma that she was much disappointed to receive only a rag doll from grandma, who usually sent such lovely things, but Mrs. Ford did not need to be told. The other dolls were carefully undressed every night and put into their beds, but Betty was never looked at at all.

"Grandma is coming to visit us tomorrow, Adele," said her mother. "She is to stay a week."

"I suppose I'll have to get out Betty S—, then," said Adele, discontentedly. "It wouldn't do to let grandma know I never played with her."

Mrs. Ford said nothing, but presently the playroom was set in order and Betty S— given a place in an arm-chair in the corner.

"Why, how nice and clean Betty S— looks, Adele," said her grandma when she went into the playroom. "Her clothes are not soiled a bit. You must be very careful with her."

"I—I don't play with her very much," said Adele.

Adele guessed all the time she was there, but could not get the right name, so she told her mamma she would never try again. "I don't like Betty at all," she said, shaking the poor doll. "What is your name, you ugly thing?" she said. "Grandma said she intended to buy me a nice little piano when I guessed what the 'S' stands for, but I'll never get it. Why, mamma, look here! This lovely silver thimble fell out of Betty's bonnet when I shook her."

In a hurry, the bonnet was pulled off, and there was a beautiful handkerchief, with lace around it, in the crown. Her petticoats proved to be other handkerchiefs, and in her sleeves were the prettiest hair-ribbons Adele had ever seen. In her old-fashioned calico handbag were pretty bits of silk for doll dresses, and in the back of her frock Adele found a ring neatly hidden. The little girl had quite a heap of gifts in her lap when Betty was finally ready for her nightgown.

"I s'pose she meant it for a surprise, didn't she?" she asked, and then she caught a twinkle in her mamma's eye. "Betty Surprise! Betty Surprise! If I had been nice, and played with her at first, I would have guessed her name long ago." And when the pretty toy piano was brought into the playroom it was Betty Surprise that was first seated with her clumsy hands on the white keys, and all the other dolls had to wait.—Selected.

HENDERSON IS DOING THINGS.

Every department of the Henderson Church and Sunday School seems to be doing things these days. The Christian Endeavor Society is becoming very strong and active, and recently won the Vance County Christian Endeavor Union banner.

Judging from the attendance and the continued interest manifested in the weekly Sunday evening meetings, it seems as if they might hold this banner for another term. Easter Sunday was a big day in the Church. Directly after the opening of the Sunday School, the hour was turned over to the children for their Easter exercises, which had been carefully prepared. They did honor to themselves and to those who had drilled them, and all enjoyed the hour thoroughly. During these exercises the regular Easter offering for the orphanage was taken, at which time the goodly sum of $37.19 was given for this worthy cause.

At 11 A. M. the regular morning worship was held, with an Easter sermon by the pastor and a beautiful Easter solo by one of the members of the choir. Following this service, a business meeting of the Church was held. Many important and interesting things were discussed at this meeting. A committee was appointed to attend to needed repairs on the parsonage. This committee is to consider screening the house, fencing-in the garden, painting the house, and securing a hot-water heating plant. The pastor appreciated the kindly spirit and generosity with which the matter of his vacation was discussed. Owing to a strenuous winter, he feels the need of a let up at this time, and is planning to accept the offer of an early vacation. It has been the custom for some time to hold a monthly Communion service, but after talking the matter over at this meeting, it was decided to have the Communion quarterly, devoting the entire A. M. hour to the Communion and its significance, and at the evening hour to hold an evangelistic service.

Easter Sunday night the choir took over the evening service and rendered "Jesus Lives," an Easter cantata, by Chas. H. Gabriel. The choir had been working hard for the success of this program, and it was very gratifying to them to have a large and enthusiastic congregation of listeners. The cantata was especially well rendered and a credit to the Church.

Henderson was well represented at the Sunday School institute at Mt. Auburn. Evening service was dispensed with for that Sunday, and about fifty of the members enjoyed Dr. Fletcher's inspirational lectures. At a meeting of the Workers' Council recently it was decided to reorganize several of the primary and beginners' classes, and graded lessons are to be installed next quarter.

Several of our ladies enjoyed the missionary rally at Fuller's Chapel recently, and one of the members of the Henderson society was elected as secretary of the district. Another member has just finished a term as district leader. Henderson is doing things, and has much yet to do, but we feel that these activities bode well for the future. A. H. Hook, Pastor.

UNCLE SAM AND THE BIBLE.

"They tell me," soliloquized Uncle Sam,
"That my schools are Godless and bad;
That my teachers say to my boys and girls,
'Oh! God's a back number—ask dad.'

"They say that the Bible is taught no more;
That religion is gone from my schools;
That American children like heathens are reared,
And know nothing of Christian rules.

"They even say that God's Word is barred
From my schools by my basic laws;
That the Constitution my Jefferson wrote,
And my Washington signed, is the cause."

"It's alien," soliloquized Uncle Sam;
"I now understand it all.
The wise man said, 'Rear a child in the way
He should walk, and he'll never fall.'

"In the little red school-house where I was taught
The three 'R's' in '76,
I studied the Bible every day,
And its truth in my conscience sticks.

"Christ gave me a very hard problem to solve.
He said, 'Trust in God, Little Boy;
Go, found a republic where men shall be free,
And the rights which God gave them, enjoy.'

"I remember the boys in that little red school,
And their mothers, and sisters, too;
How they talked about God, and the Bible, and Christ,
And their numbers were mighty few.

"We all went to work, our problem to solve,
And we looked to the Father above
For protection, and wisdom, and guidance, and power,
To found our republic in love."

* * * * *

And then Uncle Sam from his musing aroused.
"Put the Bible back into my schools!
Let love for our Father in heav'n, and Christ,
Be once more number one of my rules.

"Let my boys and my girls be taught about God;
Let them hear the Master's Word;
Let the Bible be free, as it was for me;
Let them grow in the love of the Lord.

"Let the libelous words, which the aliens speak,
Be uttered no more in my ear;
For the Bible was taught me when I was a boy,
And my children its teaching must hear.

"I stand for Christ; and the system I teach
Is mine. I proclaim it again.
'Tis the answer I learned to the problem I solved:
'In the name of God, amen!'"

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, Editor,
Elon College, N. C.

A MODEST AND TRUE BENEFACTOR.

Some men are born rich, some achieve riches, and others have riches thrust upon them. To this parody of an ancient saying should be added the fourth class of those who solicit for funds, with fear and trembling. The first and second classes apply not to the writer's experience. In class four he is somewhat of a veteran. He has had one notable experience in class three.

It was in March of 1919, when the Elon standardization fund was being raised, that a letter came from Southern Pines, N. C., containing a check for $1,000 and asking that it be counted as coming from a Northern friend. I had not met the generous donor. I was sure here was a real man. The gift was acknowledged with grateful appreciation, and the friend advised that the campaign was on a five-year basis. Immediately he subscribed $4,000 more. Money had not before been so thrust upon me. The experience was exhilarating. It put new life and enthusiasm in our campaign, and we soon went dashing high over the top.

We immediately invited our brother to visit Elon, but he could not conveniently do so. In 1922, three years later, on learning that he was again at Southern Pines, we presented our plea for a visit, and our good friend came. The late Dr. Frank S. Child was a visitor at our home at the same time. Dr. Child preached a great sermon and made public reference to our modest friend, who was in the audience, saying that each man should serve God with the talent he had. He was glad, he said, to have a man present who had the talent to make money and who honored God with it.

As we walked home for our noon meal, my good friend confided in me that he had always thought of his gifts in the way Dr. Child had pictured them, but he had no idea his friends knew of his thought. He said he enjoyed helping good causes, and that he wanted to help Elon more. So he thrust $5,000 more on me. That afternoon we rode over to the Christian Orphanage, and he thrust a $1,000 check on Uncle Charley. Later that fall, during the session of the American Christian Convention, he thrust $10,000 on President Caris, of Defiance College. He has thrust other sums of money on other enterprises and institutions, always quietly and without the blowing of trumpets.

Mr. Corwith—for that is the name of my friend—lives for the good he can do, and it is a benediction to be in his presence. In March, 1923, while he was sick in bed, he decided to add $25,000 more to the ten thousand already given Elon and to found a professorship in the department of Christian education in memory of his wife, Mrs. Annie Vail Corwith, a noble Christian woman of beautiful character traits in home, in community, and in Church. Following a recent visit to Elon, of which he is now a trustee, he added $25,000 additional toward the rebuilding program, making his total gifts to date $60,000. I have been cautioned to say nothing about these matters, but have considered it only right that the Church should know its benefactor. His splendid example, too, should encourage others to be liberal in their support of the enterprises of the kingdom.

But Mr. Corwith is a remarkable man in other directions as well. At the tender age of thirteen he became an employee of a real estate and insurance company near his home in Brooklyn, N. Y. He applied himself assiduously to business and became immensely popular with the firm's clientele. They felt they could absolutely rely on the youth's word. Then something happened. His employer was endeavoring to pull off a big deal of shady character. During the interview in which he hoped to close the matter, he sent for his youthful employee and endeavored to get him to color the truth in the interest of the deal. The lad declared he would not do it; that he was employed to work for the firm, but not to lie for it.

The irate boss discharged him. His father rejoiced that he had such a son. After a brief time, the boss induced the young man to come with him again, but on the distinct understanding that he would not be party to any shady dealings or misrepresentations of truth. This loyalty to the truth has characterized Mr. Corwith throughout his career. He would not swerve a hair's breadth from the truth for any conceivable consideration.

For five years, in all, he remained with his employer, building up in the meantime a growing list of friends who urged him, because of his honesty and integrity, to begin a business on his own account. Being but eighteen years of age, he could not legally do so. His father put a mortgage on his home, and the business began in his father's name. Three years later, the firm name was changed to his own. In 1887 he associated with him in the business his younger brother, Mr. Luther G. Corwith (who died in the summer of 1923), and the firm name became that of Corwith Bros., Inc. In 1890, the business was removed to 851 Manhattan Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y., where it remains, a bee-hive of activity, an army of organization, a radiating center of good will and service to the community.

There is now a branch at Jamaica, Long Island, with the same reputation for honesty and integrity as the Manhattan home office. Of late years, Mr. Lester F. Corwith, only son of Mr. W. F. Corwith, and an attorney at law, has been associated with his father. Mr. Corwith has shown his appreciation of his employees by selling them stock on easy terms in the business. On June 6, 1924, the fiftieth anniversary of the firm will be celebrated with a banquet given in honor of the founder and inspiration of the firm by his business associates.

Mr. Corwith's beautiful residence is at Hempstead, N. Y. He endeavors to keep it just as his beloved wife did during her lifetime. It is one of the show-places on Long Island. Here our friend lives in beautiful simplicity and rare consecration, making his daily pilgrimages to his great business in the city or transacting measures of great import from his home in the event he feels unable to make the trip to the office. He has never been physically strong, and has to garner his vitality with utmost caution. Thus only is he able to carry the enormous responsibilities of his great business enterprise.

In his boyhood, Mr. Corwith found his Saviour under the preaching of his brother-in-law, Dr. Martyn Summerbell. He has been a devout and consecrated member of the Christian Church ever since. He loves the Church. He loves his brother-men. He feels that God is his business partner. Prayer to him is as necessary as breathing, and Bible-reading is his food and drink. But this modest, quiet man will never tell you any of these things. You have to observe his habits and listen to the testimony of those who have known him intimately for a term of years.

I have known many men. All of them have influenced my life. No man has influenced me more wholesomely these latter days than this modest, true Christian and benefactor. Life is sweetened because of its contact with this Christian nobleman.

WE SAY ADIEU.

Since Dr. Barrett's illness, the acting editor has been glad to carry the duty of bringing out THE CHRISTIAN SUN weekly. It might have been considered a burden to take up this extra service, in view of the exacting duties of the acting editor's regular work. Far from it. The acting editor was led into the Christian life by Dr. Barrett, and throughout his life has cherished him as a dear personal friend and adviser. Any service that could be rendered him is, therefore, to the acting editor not a burden, but a genuine joy. Our only regret is that the editor does not return to the tripod, where he wielded a pen of vigor and charm. In his loss, the acting editor has sustained a grief that it will take years to assuage.

The acting editor rejoices in this his adieu message to be able to turn the paper over to an editor tried and true—the versatile, the eloquent, the distinguished former editor, Dr. J. O. Atkinson. Editor Atkinson needs no introduction to the Christian Church. He is perhaps our best-known minister, and no man wields a more facile or eloquent pen. He made THE CHRISTIAN SUN great during his sixteen years of former service, and he is now in the prime of life. The Church may confidently expect an era of growth and expansion of the paper under his guidance. We congratulate our people on his election to this post of responsibility and power.

The staff to be associated with him needs no introduction. Barring the instance of acting editor, who becomes contributing editor on the new staff, we may say without fear of successful contradiction that the staff editors are eminently qualified for their several duties, and that with Editor Atkinson at the helm they will give us a most excellent paper.

We print again the staff in full, and in saying adieu, pray for them as we fully and confidently expect a marked success in their responsible posts of service to the Church and kingdom. The staff consists of—

Editor-in-chief—J. O. Atkinson.
Managing editor—P. J. Kernodle.
Contributing editors—W. W. Staley, R. C. Helfenstein, S. C. Harrell, W. A. Harper.
News editor—S. M. Lynam.

To THE SUN'S readers of the interregnum, a fond and an affectionate official adieu.

The Christian Publishing House building, Dayton, Ohio, has been sold for $175,000. A new site has been purchased and a modern plant and office building is to be erected by July 1, 1925. We are glad to hear of this splendid action.

A NEW PASTOR IN OLD CONDITIONS.

The following, from the Herald of Gospel Liberty, plainly states the problem, and freshness of matter will hold the subscribers:

One of the Methodist Advocates recently told of a Church of medium size which had exactly nine subscribers to this Church paper up to the time of last year's conference, but shortly after conference the number jumped to one hundred and sixty-nine. How could that remarkable and sudden increase be accounted for? It was the same old town. It was the same old Church. It was the same old Church membership. It was the same old religious paper. The only new thing was the preacher! He it was that had made all the difference!

There is not a Church paper in existence that could not duplicate that same experience many, many times. It is one of the best-known axioms around the office of a religious periodical that the size of the subscription list will depend upon the pastor. It is almost possible to trace the movements of various pastors by the subscription list of the Church periodical. Wherever some men go, the list very soon makes a tremendous increase. And where other men go, the list gradually drops off to almost nothing. In each case it is the same Church, the same folks, the same periodical. The only thing that is different is the pastor and the size of the subscription list. And they are undoubtedly related to each other as cause to effect.

We are mentioning all this only that pastors may know the facts—and guide themselves accordingly. No man has any business in the ministry who is not willing to face every principle of religious work earnestly and sincerely. One of these principles is that the pastor is the key to the situation with reference to the religious paper. What his people read, how much they are interested in religious periodicals, and the interest which they take in the general work of the Church and the kingdom will depend almost entirely upon him. There is no shying away from that well-proven fact.

Now, this is not written with the money end in view. It is written because the editor is becoming more and more deeply convinced that there is little hope of infusing the right kind of Christian idealism and Christian spirit into the great ndustral, social, national, and international situations until a far larger number of Church members begin to read religious books and religious periodicals that are worth while. Just so long as so large a part of the membership of the Churches read little or nothing but the daily newspaper and the secular press, and have the daily newspaper point of view, our country will be dominated by politics instead of by Christian ideals—and a great deal of that politics will be rotten! Surely this ought to be a matter of utmost concern and responsibility for any pastor. It is his business to see that his people read of finer ideals of kingdom relations and better interpretations of current events than those which they find in their secular papers.

REPORT OF THE SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON FINANCE.

The following report was adopted at the recent session of the Southern Christian Convention:

1. That the time limit for final payment of Men and Millions pledges be extended to December 31, 1926.

2. That total Convention apportionments be increased the sum of $10,000 annually, this increase becoming effective with the Conference year 1926-'27; that, through official representatives of this Convention, this increased apportionment be placed before each Conference for approval at the 1924 session, and that the result of action by the Conferences be reported to the next session of the Convention.

3. That the orphanage be omitted from the apportionment table.

4. That no appeals for funds be made by the General Convention or any department thereof, but that all such appeals be made directly to the Southern Christian Convention.

5. That the Southern Christian Convention continue paying its foreign mission funds to the General Convention, as heretofore agreed upon, that an annual contribution be made to the General Convention from our Convention fund, not to exceed 20 per cent of the receipts from the Conferences to this fund, and that the various boards of the Convention co-operate with the General Convention upon the same basis.

6. That the provisions of items 4 and 5 become operative from and after this session of the Southern Christian Convention.

7. That with the approval of the Mission Board the mission secretary of the Southern Christian Convention be made stewardship secretary to aid our Conferences and local Churches in the most approved methods of Church finance.

J. E. West, Chairman.
G. O. Lankford, Secretary.

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE FOR CLOSER CO-OPERATION.

The following was adopted:

First.—By joint action at the Marion Convention in 1890, the Southern Christian Convention, is a constituent member of the General Convention, entitled to representation on the basis of numbers.

Second.—As a supporter of the official objectives of the General Convention in a financial way, the Southern Christian Convention agrees to co-operate upon the basis of official action by the General Convention; but only through the Southern Christian Convention.

Third.—The Southern Christian Convention does not consent to any appeals of any nature by the General Convention to Conferences, boards, local Churches or members except through the Southern Convention itself, and only for authorized General Convention purposes.

Fourth.—The Southern Christian Convention shall share in an equitable way, on a per capita basis, General Convention obligations to the Federal Council, and such other interdenominational organizations as the General Convention in regular sessions may assume.

Fifth.—All emergency actions of the General Convention shall be subject to ratification by the Southern Christian Convention before they are binding upon the Southern Christian Convention.

Adopted at Norfolk Convention May 2, 1924.

THE NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

The North Carolina Christian Conference is composed of three subordinate Conferences, viz: the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, the Eastern North Carolina Conference, and the Western North Carolina Conference. This subdivision of the Conference was made for the promotion of the progress of the work to the advantage of all parts of our work in North Carolina. There were some legal technicalities which prevented a complete division until all the obligations of the North Carolina Conference were met. For this reason, the present plan of work was pursued.

Last fall the several subordinate Conferences, according to agreement, sent all their home mission collections to the treasurer of the North Carolina Conference to apply to the outstanding obligations on home missions which were made by the Board of Home Missions of said Conference. These collections liquidated almost half of the outstanding obligations. If special effort is put forth during the present Conference year to collect home mission funds, we can meet all outstanding obligations and the North Carolina Conference can be entirely discontinued, and the several Conferences into which the provisional division was made can be chartered and function entirely independent of each other as they were before the union. This seems to be the desire of a considrable majority of the membership of the Churches composing the territory, and should be consummated as soon as possible for efficiency and for a high degree of co-operation for the future growth of the Church.

As president of the North Carolina Conference, it is the most earnest desire of the writer that the ministers serving the Churches make special effort this year to raise all the home mission money possible and meet our full home missionary obligations this year. If any more should be raised by this special effort than is necessary to meet our obligations, there are growing needs where such surplus might be used to good purpose.

If the ministers and officials in each Conference will undertake to raise one-third of the amount necessary for the above purpose, I believe it can be done without hardship on any Church or individual. I should like to hear from the several ministers, pastors and officials of the Conferences and to know that they will work together to reach this goal by the close of the present Conference year. W. C. Wicker.

THE STRONGER IS THE DICTUM.

The Supreme Court of the United States has recently rendered a decision in a case coming up from Idaho which is of unusual interest to those interested in the enforcement of the prohibition laws. This decision emphasizes a principle of law which is too little understood by most people. It is this: "In all instances where a State law is stricter in its provisions than the Volstead act, the State law holds. In all instances where the State law is more liberal than the Federal law, the Federal law holds."

The defendant in this case is a banker, living in Idaho, who had in his possession in his home a private stock of liquor. The Idaho law goes further than the Volstead law in the matter of possession, in that it prohibits the possession of liquor irrespective of when that liquor was obtained. The Volstead law, it will be remembered, permits possession of liquor obtained before the Volstead act went into effect.

Some boys broke into this banker's house and stole his liquor. The banker prosecuted the boys, although he had been advised that by so doing he himself would be held liable for illegal possession. The banker said he welcomed a test of the State law which prohibited possession.

In the lower court, he was found guilty. He appealed from one court to another until the case reached the State Supreme Court. He lost in all the courts, including the Supreme Court of Idaho.

He then appealed his case to the Supreme Court of the United States, and that tribunal has now confirmed the finding of the courts of Idaho. The banker has served thirty days in jail for the possession of liquor in his home.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Rev. John Pressley Barrett, D. D.

Born in Isle of Wight County, Va., February 5, 1852; died in Winston-Salem, N. C., May 1, 1924. United with Antioch Christian Church as a boy. Educated at Suffolk Collegiate Institute and Richmond College; became a candidate for the ministry in 1872; licensed to preach by the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, at Cypress Chapel, on Sunday, November 2, 1873; ordained to the full ministry by a presbytery appointed by the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, at Berea Christian Church, Nansemond County, Va., on Sunday, November 7, 1874; and was a member of that Conference for fifty years.

He initiated home missions in his Conference, served as president of the Conference, fathered the Christian Missionary Association, was a member of the provisional board that located Elon College, member of the board of trustees of Elon College up to the time of his death, served rural and city Churches as pastor in four States, was an enthusiastic advocate of home and foreign missions and education, and led the Memorial Temple, in Norfolk, Va., while pastor, to give as much for missions as for current expenses.

Dr. Barrett served as editor of The Christian Sun, organ of the Southern Christian Convention since 1844, for thirteen years, and as editor of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, organ of the General Convention of the Christian Church, and the oldest religious paper in the world, for twelve years, making an editorial career of twenty-five years. He possessed the editorial talent, used it in the interest of the spiritual life and progress of the kingdom and his own Church, always "contending for the faith once delivered to the saints." He was jealous of any question of doubt or reflection upon the plain word of God. Biblically, Dr. Barrett was of the same type as the editor of the Sunday School Times, defending heroically the simple heart-interpretation of the Word.

He published "The Little Teacher" and "The Sunday School Quarterly" in Raleigh, N. C., until these finally yielded to the Sunday School publications of the Christian Publishing Association after the union of the Southern and Northern Conventions in Marion, Ind., in 1890. In addition to a successful editorial career of a quarter of a century, he was the author of the following books: "Iola Graham or Facing the Truth," "Centennial of Religious Journalism," "Forty Years on the Firing Line," "Fruit-Bearing Truths," "Modern Light-Bearers," and "Garden Spots in the Old Testament." By his excellent writings and his personal example, he led many to become Christian, and some fine young men into the ministry. This was conspicuous and touching in many brief words of testimony at his funeral service.

He died May 1, 1924, while the Southern Christian Convention was in session in the new Christian Temple in Norfolk, Va.; his remains were brought to Suffolk, where final funeral services were held, May 2nd, in the Suffolk Christian Church, conducted by Rev. W. W. Staley, assisted by W. S. Long, D. D., L. E. Smith, D. D., president of the Convention; N. G. Newman, D. D., his pastor at Elon College; J. O. Atkinson, D. D., former editor of The Christian Sun and secretary of the Mission Board of the Southern Convention; W. P. Minton, secretary of foreign missions of the General Convention; W. A. Harper, president of Elon College, and acting editor of The Sun while Dr. Barrett was in the hospital; and H. S. Hardcastle, pastor of Suffolk Christian Church. Other ministers and laymen delivered from the floor sympathetic and tender words of appreciation of his life and personal Christian character.

The final adjournment of the Convention made it possible for a large number of ministers, delegates and visitors to the Convention to motor up to Suffolk in time for the funeral service. The Convention had already passed worthy words and resolutions of appreciation, appointed six laymen as active pallbearers and six ministers as honorary pallbearers, beside sending a large floral design to cover the casket.

The family group numbered about sixty, with his companion, his only daughter and her husband, suffering the greatest loss in his passing away from the Church militant to the church triumphant.

The Church choir sang "Asleep in Jesus," "Peace, Perfect Peace," "Kissed by the Angel of Peace," and "Abide With Me" as the great congregation followed the flower-covered casket from the Church and out to the grave in Cedar Hill Cemetery. It was the tenderest, the sweetest, the richest, and the most impressive service ever witnessed by that silent throng of friends, who realized, as never before, the spiritual value of his Christian life and character.

THE SPRINGS OF LIVING TRUTH.

By Rev. W. C. Wicker, D. D.

If we would appeal to the thirsty souls and satisfy their thirst for that thirst which satisfies, we must keep our faces to the future and forge ahead in creative thinking, mental and moral growth, and spiritual vision. While we think on the great problems of life, we should not forget that all thinking that is worthy of the name depends on past experience. In religion, as in all other kinds of thinking, we should use our imagination, recall the conditions, solutions of problems, and the nature of the consequences in order to know how to deal with similar problems, in similar condition so as to reach satisfactory solutions in our present crisis.

Too many professing Christians are satisfied to repeat the experiences of the past as though those experiences which occurred under different conditions would satisfy our present needs in different circumstances. Truth is not something which is static, but truth is dynamic. It works itself out only as the conduct and the experiences of the individual fit in with the conditions that exist and bring desirable consequences. What is truth for one age, under one set of conditions, with one set of problems, may be foreign to the truth at another time and different circumstances. That which works best in the interpretation of life and experience in terms of the age in which we live is best.

When Christ says, "I am the way, the truth, and the life," He means that through Him, by acting as He acted, by following His example under the same circumstances and following in the way He walked, we shall find that such a course will lead us to the realization of a true relation between our life and our environment, both material and social. The practice of the principles, the application of the teachings, obedience to the doctrines He taught in His life will work out truly in our life, and that which works out truly in practice is true, and when thought of in an abstract way may be called truth. But in reality truth is not static and abstract; it is rather intensely concrete and dynamic. It functions in life and living processes, and transforms the life in which it functions so as to harmonize life with reality and contribute to the reality of life.

Through Christ, we find the way to live, the manner of living, and in so living we try out His teachings in concrete practice and find that His teachings work truly, for they solve the problems of life, they meet the deepest needs of life, they satisfy the yearnings, longings, desires of our deepest spiritual natures adequately and completely, and work truly in thus meeting our needs. The test of truth is that it works out in wider experience and continues to satisfy our needs, and the teachings of Christ fulfill this test with growing richness as we try Him more and more. For this reason, He can truly say, "I am the Truth."

But if He is the Truth, following Him, obeying Him, applying His doctrine, and guiding conduct by His teachings will enrich life at every step, and there is an easy transition from conceiving Him as Truth because His teachings work truly in the guidance of life and thinking of the enriched result of the activity because of the superior guidance which is life itself. Way, truth, life, emphasize in turn the manner of trying the teachings of Christ, the adequacy of these teachings to meet the needs, satisfy the longings, to give quietude to the yearnings, and complete happiness to the soul in its outward and upward reach after its nobler selfhood, and finally the enriched soul itself is the center of attention in its richer, more abundant life.

When we can think of Christ in this sense, we shall understand Him in His unlimited adaptation to every age and condition of life. In Him we have neither a static being nor a static doctrine, delivered once for all to the saints, but an ever-living Christ adaptable to all ages, conditions, climes, needs, races, peoples, for His supreme mission and His infinite meaning are amply adequate to meet every need, to fit every condition, and to satisfy every longing of the most versatile and varied human nature, and no man in his finite limitations is able to claim a monopoly on the limitless Christ.

GREETING FROM UNCLE WELLONS TO THE SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.

Southern Christian Convention, Norfolk, Va.:

My dear Brethren,—This is the first time in sixty-eight years that I have missed a regular or called Convention. I was present at the organization of the Convention at Union, in Alamance, N. C., and all those old brethren and sisters are gone. But my friends all say that I had better not attempt to go this time, such is the distance and fatigue of the journey, and therefore I represent myself by letter. I hope that we will have a fine time and a session that will be both pleasant and profitable. I wish to be remembered kindly to the brethren and sisters, and am so sorry that I cannot be there to shake their hands.

In 1852 I was at a Conference in Norfolk, Providence Church, one of the strongest Churches we had financially and intellectually, having the sheriff of the county and the representative in the Legislature, and it was there and then they recommended to me, the Conference did, the Graham Institute as a divinity school, which I entered. I was the first divinity student to enter the school at Graham. Shortly after, two other brethren, E. W. Beale and R. H. Costen, entered. Brother Beale made good, but Brother Costen was not much of a ministerial student, and stayed but a short time. I stayed only two years, when my health had completely failed and my finances were getting a little low. It was a pleasant and profitable occasion for me, however. Brother Beale made a fine success after he gave himself wholly to the work.

Brethren, I have always felt a deep interest in everything connected with the Church, and I so much regret that I cannot be present and hear the reports and the discussions and the action of the Convention.

In 1923, January 18th, I was pained to see the hard work we had done going into flames, and I could scarcely stand it to see the walls falling and the flames belching forth to the heavens, and the other buildings accessible all endangered and sometimes on fire, which, however, we could control. But the fire swept away the main building and we were powerless. It was early in the morning, and fortunately nobody was in the building. All the water that we could put on it had no effect. I stood and looked at it. I helped them to lay the first brick, and I helped raise the first money, which was very hard to raise. We had to raise it in small amounts, but then I saw it going into flames, our organ, our grand piano, the pictures of our three first presidents, our books, our records, and some money all gone into flames, and there was no help for it. It was a little more than my nerves could stand. I sat down and began to ask the question, "What can we do?" I saw that it was all dark before us, the middle of the session, our house burned, and what a loss it was to us! I came to my room and thought that we must take it all to the Lord in prayer.

By the next day I had concluded that perhaps it was providential. Our chapel was on the second floor, and I had felt, but had never expressed it, some uneasiness about the enormous crowds that assembled there. The commencement was not far ahead, when our crowds would be great, and the floors, as it had stood there for thirty-odd years, might give way and many of our best men and women and students might be crushed, and fire follow.

In a few days, one of our most prominent citizens in the county said he would open a subscription at $5,000. In a few days Alamance County proposed, in five years, to give us $100,000 in installments. I said to Dr. Harper, "You must lead us, and we will all try to follow you in prayer. Our prayers shall go with you, and we will help you in everything we can with our prayers." He then moved out to New York, and our earnest prayers went with him. He returned with a promise of $25,000 from an unexpected source, and we felt encouraged. The next week he moved out again, and came back with the promise of a house to cost $50,000 and the funds that would be required to finish and furnish it. The next week he was away again, and came back with the promise of another house to cost $50,000. And we were receiving checks from different sections of the country for $5,000 and less. In a few weeks a dear brother in California that we had never known of sent us his check for $5,000. That opened up a correspondence between him and Dr. Harper that led to a visit by Dr. and Mrs. Harper. With the promise that my prayers should go with them and would meet with them and Brother Orban and his wife, and that what would be done would be done in the name of the Lord, they set out on the long trip. I wrote a letter to meet Dr. Harper at Bro. Orban's, stating that he and Mrs. Harper and Mr. and Mrs. Orban would be in consultation about his furnishing us with another house, and promising to be there with them in prayer, making five in all. A dispatch soon came to me saying that the house was secured through prayer, and with the necessary means to complete the building and furnishing it. Shortly after, two dear brethren of our sister Church, the Methodist, sent us a check for $5,000 each, and many other checks were coming in for smaller amounts. But we asked the Bros. Duke if they would not change theirs and give us $40,000 more for a house in honor of their mother, who was reared but a few miles from here, and they did so.

Brethren, all of this has been accomplished by prayer. The Alamance building, 200 feet long, 64 feet broad, and three stories high, in a year's time has been erected, and the other buildings are well on the way. But it requires money. Our Alamance subscriptions are in installments of five years, but we had to furnish the money and have this house completed. Now, brethren and sisters, what are we to do? Where are we to go to get the money that is necessary for the completion of these buildings? Let us still trust the Lord, and He will direct us, and that we may have the pleasure of saying, "Amen" to the checks we may receive. Prayer has led us, the Blessed Lord has been leading, and we have been following. Now, I want to suggest that every member that constitutes this Convention, small and great, we want a contribution from them. We hope that each Church in the Convention will have a special day, and that every little boy and little girl, every old gray-haired man and woman, and every man and woman, will make a contribution, and have a book in the Church that will show the names and the contributions. I want a college that we can all say "our college," and in years to come these little boys and girls that may contribute may say "our college" and feel that they had a hand in directing it.

In connection with the college, we are expecting to have a chair in theology that we are looking for some one to lead that we may teach the English Bible and practical Christianity here. We want to send out missionaries all over our country, men and women having been taught the English Bible and will go to work among the poor, the vacant Churches, the mills and factories, and the country to bring in the dear children and the young people into the fold of the Lord. These brothers and sisters who will go forward and do their duties as preachers and teachers will always see the loaf and fishes on the coals. It is to throw out the net, as Jesus said to His disciples, when seven had toiled all night and accomplished nothing, and He said to throw out the net on the right side, and the catch was such that the net could scarcely bear it. When Peter approached the Saviour and he told them he had not meat, He said to Peter, "Bring the net ashore." When he did so, there were 153 large fish. Brethren, always throw out the net on the right side. Be ready at the summons of the Master to go, and if any of these young men and women shall go industrially to work they will not lack. Some may be hunting money. We don't want them. We want the young men and women who are hungry for souls and will do their whole duty. If they should fail to bring in the lambs, let them try some other branches of the work. Don't cumber our ground without seeing the results. We don't want anything but a clean missionary chair. We want no "isms," but we want those who believe in the divinity of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. But that is the only theology that our Southern Church has ever taught, and I cannot see how any one doubting the divinity of Christ can find a way up into the glory land. There is but one way. We will be able to say to our brothers and sisters of other denominations, send your boys and girls here and we will fit them for a useful life; not, however, that we object to the higher courses. Let those who want to go further do so, and we will have plenty of places in our cities and towns for them to work.

I have always felt that there was a large opening for me to fill, and while I have witnessed the conversion of hundreds and thousands of souls, and am now, in my ninety-ninth year, still trying to do something to win souls for Christ. My prayers! oh, what sweet communion I have with the Blessed Lord, and when I am subject to die I can feel that I have given my time and talents, with some mistakes, to the great work of the Master, and I can see such good results. And when I shall cease my work, at my funeral, I have a sermon already written that I hope will be read and then published that all preachers wishing it to read to their congregations may have it, and all others that desire it may have the same. And then what little may be left every bit of it goes to the chair of theology, for I want to keep preaching when my body is asleep in the quiet dust. I want to keep preaching, and whatever contribution may arise from anything I shall have left in the way of book or in that sermon shall all go to the chair of theology.

I have often thought that I will write a series of letters from an old minister, going to my early life, and tell of the many pleasures we have had and the trials we have had.

Now, brethren, we want to see that everybody comes up and puts his shoulder to the wheel, and Zion shall surely travel. Come, brethren, here is my mite to help finish the unfinished work of the college. Come and join me, and when I am done with this world whatever I have will go to the chair of theology, sending forth these our young men and women to go and preach the word of eternal truth, to win souls for Christ, and our prayers shall be with them, and when we are done here we will still be preaching.

May God's blessing be upon the Convention; no tontentious spirit, but all of us putting our shoulder to the wheel and pushing forward, and what a great work we will accomplish! They will tell in days to come that all those industrious workers will surely get their reward. But we don't find any promise to the lazy man. Let us send out our young men and women full of zeal and that old-fashioned religion. I cannot say as to the methods, so we will stick to the good old religion. Never let there be any change in the old divine truths, but blow the gospel trumpet aloud and souls will be saved.

The dear old brethren and sisters that we met long years ago many are sleeping in that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. Now, let us follow their tracks and push forward for the glory land. I don't want to repeat, but when I go there and meet with those dear friends that have gone before, and I meet before the Blessed Saviour, may I say, "Here, Lord, am I. Send me where Thou would have me go. Let me teach what Thou would have me teach. Let me say what Thou would have me say." And I will be ready to take up the work of the Master. Oh, what a glorious work! But, brothers and sisters, I must close this letter. There are so many things that I would like to say that are impossible now, though possibly you may see them in the letter I anticipate for THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

May God bless you in this delightful session; and may you accomplish great good in the name of our Blessed Saviour, is my prayer.

MISSIONS

Rev. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

THE CHURCH EQUIPPED FOR WORLD SERVICE.

By Dr. J. O. Atkinson.

"For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." —John 3:16.

The World War made one contribution to human society. It made us think and talk in world terms. There was a conference in which the nations of the world participated. This conference proposed a league of all the nations of the world. There was later a disarmament conference, in which all the nations of the world discussed the question of limitations of armaments. There was an Interchurch World Movement. There is now serious talk of a world court. This, I say, is one contribution that the war made to humanity. It has put into our thinking and into our attitude, world terms, world relationships, world needs, world problems. The Church had been trying for years to bring this very thing to pass. It had been saying that if one member suffer—meaning by one member, one nation, one tongue, or one race—then all members suffer with it. But humanity outside the Church, particularly that part of humanity outside the Church calling itself diplomatic, would not agree that this was so. We have learned by a terrible and bloody experience, since we would learn with no other, that what the Church had said was so.

David Livingston, the explorer and missionary, had said, through the Church—he tried to say it in the ears of the world—that Africa was the open sore of the world, and that the world as a body could not be healed as long as this sore remained full of corruption, and deadly poison.

Robert Morrison had said the same through the Church about China, and William Carey had demonstrated the same to England through the Church about India. Booker T. Washington had said the same thing, but with different emphasis, namely: that if a weaker nation and a stronger nation live together, unless the stronger shall pull the weaker up with it as it goes upwards, then the weaker will drag the stronger down to its own level. And the Church has been trying to say through the ages that God "hath made of one blood all nations of men to dwell on all the face of the earth, if haply they might feel after Him and find Him, though He be not far from every one of us." Again and again the Church has preached and has spoken of world brotherhood—of the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. But humanity would not take seriously these things into their thinking.

Now, as the Church has pioneered in this vital and worth-while matter, so is the Church designed by its founder and adequately equipped for world service. And the Church is the only institution thus equipped. The first claim made is that the Church, in its constituent elements, is, as an organization, adequately equipped for world service. And it is the only institution known to man that is so equipped.

The State's function is to develop patriotism and care for its own. The State exhausts its strength and engages its talents in building roads, maintaining schools, supporting its own institutions and developing its own resources. It has neither the mind for world service nor a strength equal to a task so great.

The school is not equipped for world service. As an institution, it functions best in exalting its own, in teaching the geography, the botany and the biology of its own nation, State or tongue. The home, as an institution, busies itself in rearing its young, caring for and training its youth and dependents, and implanting the seeds and sources of love deep in the heart of its fellow-members.

The Church is without limitation, either in its scope or concept. The most abnormal or unnatural species of Church is that which would limit its scope, its outlook or its endeavor. This idea will readily seize the mind and hold it steadfast if one will only recall the content of the Church in its founding. Peter had confessed that the Christ was the Son of the living God. The Christ in turn said: "Upon this rock [the rock of this confession] will I build my Church." Here was a confession, which the Christ desired every person on this earth to make, or to have the opportunity of making. Individuals die, institutions perpetuate themselves, are immortal. On this account, the Christ founded an institution whose sole aim and chief purpose in the world was to make Him known to all men. The Church has forgotten, or willfully ignores, her mission in the world when it ceases to be missionary—that is, ceases to seek to function as a world institution. A non-missionary Church does violence both to the spirit of its Founder as well as to its own character and inherent make-up. John Wesley spoke truly the inherent spirit of the Church when he said, "The world is my parish." The world is the parish of the Church, and the Church has as much concern for the welfare of one part of its parish as for another.

II. By and through the character of its message, the Church is equipped for world service. By taking thought, no man has added one cubit to his stature. And by taking thought only, the Church has not added one cubit to its stature. It is not sufficient to put the world into the thinking of humanity; it must put the world into the loving of humanity. The foundation of the Church, the character of the Church, the message of the Church is not thought, but love; not wisdom, but worship; not power, but pity and piety. For God so loved the world that He gave His Son. Had He stopped to think about it, had He been prompted only by considerations of expediency, reason, prudence, wisdom, He had never given His only begotten Son. Thought would have led Him to recall how His rebellious and obstinate subjects had stoned the prophets, imprisoned the seers, and killed those whom He had sent unto them. Therefore, they will crucify my Son, mine only begotten, if I send Him unto them. There is no Scripture or prophecy or poetry which teaches that God so thought, so considered, so reasoned of the world that He gave His Son. Nay, verily: God so loved that He gave. Here is the motive that prompted God, and it alone is the motive that prompts His Church today, to give to the world that whosoever in the world believeth shall have everlasting life.

We come to Church to worship, that we may go out to work. We must bear in mind that religion and worship are the heart of knowledge. Worship precedes work, and religion goes before knowledge. "The fear of the Lord," said the wise man, "is the beginning of knowledge." A speaker at the recent Student Volunteer Convention said: "It is because we want men to think that we ask them to worship. Reason must be tempered by a sympathetic heart." The French writer Sebatier said that England was spared the horrors of a French revolution because of the Wesley and Whitfield revivals. They appealed to the heart and aroused the conscience of England. This is the message the Church brings, not that of reason, but that of love.

A man by the name of Booth wrote a great book on "Social Conditions of London." He showed that one-tenth of London's population had sunk into mental turpitude and moral depravity. This was the submerged tenth, and they were too low in the scale of living and conduct to be reached or reclaimed. Let the submerged tenth alone, and save the tenth just above them from being submerged. This was the reasonable and feasible way to save London. Let those under the mud stay under, but direct all help and attention to those headed mudward. And then appeared on the scene in London another man by the name of Booth. He declares himself that he stood on the streets of London till midnight, night after night, till he learned to love the mud and the muck and the mire of that city. He had compassion for those who were submerged and seemed hopeless. And then one night at a late hour he went home and told his wife that he loved, with infinite pity and compassion, the submerged tenth of London, and that he should dedicate the rest of his life to their rescue. Then he and his devoted wife knelt together in prayer and there sealed their purpose with a great surrender to God. There and then the Salvation Army was born. General Booth so loved that he gave. The first man Booth so thought that he abandoned. The second man Booth so loved that he gave himself and all he ever was to be to the rescue of the submerged tenth.

If David Livingston had stopped to thing, he would never have buried his great talents and devoted his superb scholarship to saving the black and barbarous peoples of Africa. If William Carey had stopped to consider, he would never have wasted his great learning in an endeavor to teach and enlighten and instruct the low-castes and the outcasts of India. If Robert Morrison had stopped to count the cost and consider the expediency, he had never given years of his great intellect and superb talents to translating the Bible for the Chinese. These men neither counted the cost nor followed any rules of expediency. They were moved to their fields of immortal activities by the impelling power of a great love. One so thinks that he gets; one so loves that he gives. Thinking is essentially self-centered, and asks what can I get or do? Love is essentially unselfish, and asks what can I give? This is the message of the Church. It has ever been the message of the Church. And this tells why the Church is equipped with a message for world service. The Bible is God's love letters to mankind. Here you find the most moving and masterful love stories ever penned.

III. There is a third particular in which the Church is equipped for world service. Because of the character and life of its Founder. Jesus Christ is the one character of all time who is of every nationality and no nationality. Somehow, we Americans feel that He was an American, with a white skin, and spoke the English tongue. The African feels that He must have been black, and the Chinese that He must have been yellow. I recently heard a man out of the heart of India saying: "What India's three hundred million souls need is Jesus Christ." He truly is our elder Brother, our Redeemer, our Saviour. On the platform with the Indian, a yellow man from China said that what the yellow race needed to make it great was to have as its heart and soul Jesus Christ as elder Brother, Redeemer, and Saviour.

We wonder why this nation cannot put over on Europe and the other nations a world league, or a world court! There is just one reason. The Church has not yet gone far enough into the thinking, and into the attitude of statesmen, diplomats, presidents and princes. Woodrow Wilson was right when he wrote last August that our material salvation depends upon our spiritual redemption. Unless and until the Church can, with its equipment, its message and its Founder, redeem the world, the States and nations cannot properly and adequately save the world. "To whom shall we go?" asked the disciples when Jesus would know if they, too, would forsake Him. To whom shall we go? Thou alone hast the words of eternal life. To whom shall the world in its chaos and upheaval turn? To the Church, for it alone has the equipment, the message, and the Man that can save the world. The Church, by its inherent character, is equipped for world service. By the character of its message, it is equipped for world service. By the character of its Founder and Leader, it is equipped for world service.

WILKINSBURG (PA.) WEEK-DAY SCHOOL OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

By Hermon Eldredge.

(The facts regarding this successful school were secured by Mr. Eldredge through personal conference and correspondence with Mrs. Homer C. Renton, supervisor of the school.)

The story of the two-year-old week-day school of religious education in Wilkinsburg, Pa., as told by Mrs. Homer C. Renton, who has had charge of the work from its beginning, is one of interest. It is a story which includes over two thousand boys and girls, and through their lives, many homes, Churches and schools. The every-day incidents which prove its worth are legion. It is a practical, workable story which will doubtless be repeated in many communities in the next few years.

Just tw oyears ago this month, Mrs. Renton tells how she was called to undertake this work in Wilkinsburg, a suburb of Pittsburgh, Pa. She studied all the material she could find. She visited Gary and other schools. Plans were laid, and the school opened in October, with eighteen Churches co-operating, of eleven denominations. The Catholic Church had its own school. Each of these eighteen Churches chose three representatives, one of whom was the pastor, to serve the Church on the Council of Religious Education, which organized and conducts the work. This Council meets every two months, and does most of its work through three committees. The promotion committee launched the school, secured suitable buildings and equipment and advertised the school. The curriculum committee elects the supervisor and the teachers, determines the curriculum and provides the needed supplies. The finance committee estimates the budget, the apportionment for each Church and provides for securing the money. The budget at Wilkinsburg has been $5,000, the amount being apportioned among the different Churches on the basis of 43c per Church member. The enrollment has averaged about 2,000 pupils, which allows $2.50 of the total amount per child.

The board of education of Wilkinsburg, when asked by the council and parents, granted each child in the first six grades an hour of public school time each week for this religious teaching. There are five public schools in the town, and each school has one Church school-day a week. The children of each school are assigned to most convenient Church, and go in two groups, the first from 1 to 2, and the second group from 2:30 until 3:30. Mrs. Renton declares that there has been the closest of co-operation of the Church school with the public school from the beginning. The principal of the Church school has frequent conferences with the principals of the public schools. The public school teachers encourage the children to bring back good class reports in conduct, thus helping in discipline. They remind the children to bring their Bibles and note-books on Church school day. In turn, the Church school teachers strive to give such religious instruction that will carry over into the conduct in the classroom.

Mrs. Renton, as supervisor, has active charge of the work. With her work, a staff of ten teachers, who are paid at the rate of three dollars for an afternoon's work. Five teach every afternoon, and the others from one to three afternoons a week. The qualifications which the Wilkinsburg schools set for their teachers is interesting. Three things are necessary: The teacher must have been a public school teacher. She must have been a Sunday school teacher. And she must be recommended by her minister for her Christian character and religious life.

The Abingdon Week-Day Religious Education Series is the course of study, and textbooks are provided for teachers only. Grading parallels that of the public school. Promotions are made half-yearly, corresponding to those of the public school. Bi-monthly reports are sent home, giving grades in effort, conduct, and recitations.

Each hour of the school consists of a worship service, lesson proper and a period of expression. The fourth, fifth and sixth grades keep a weekly record of Church attendance and daily Bible reading. A special effort has been made to have each child own his own Bible. At the opening of the school, 304 of the 743 pupils in these grades owned their own Bibles. By the end of the first three months, 623 had Bibles which they could call their own, and write their name in ink in it! On Church school day, hundreds of children may be seen carrying Bibles with their public school textbooks. One day three boys were seen engaged in a snow-balling contest. One lad's Bible was tucked under one arm while he held a snowball in each hand. Another had his Bible buttoned in his coat, while the third fellow's could be seen sticking out of his pocket.

It is too soon to be sure of all the results of such a movement. But some are plainly evident. There is a larger enrollment and attendance in the Sunday Schools of Wilkinsburg. Only 4.3 per cent of the children in Wilkinsburg are not in any school of religious education—a record that would be difficult for any community to equal. The results are coming in the homes. The home has co-operated from the first. And the boys and girls have carried their lessons back into the home and have started the family prayers and asking the blessing. The story of one mother of a child in the first grade reveals what this has meant. In talking with the teacher, she said: "I want to thank you for what the Church school has done, not only for my little girl, but for me and my husband as well. When our little girl began asking us why we did not have a blessing at the table as did the other little children of the Church school; and why we said our prayers at night only, when we could say them in the morning, too; and why daddie didn't go to Church; and why we didn't talk to God the way the Church school teacher did—we were both ashamed of ourselves, and began first to say the little prayers and blessings she tried to teach us. Now, we have real devotions every night and morning, and she is so happy that she can hardly wait until I wash the dishes. She tries to teach little brother all the songs, the prayers, and the stories which you tell her." And then the mother added: "Her father is a different man, and I am a different woman." Here is one of the valuable by-products that make the work so very worth while.

Another little lassie marked a cross after a certain date when her Church attendance was recorded, and upon being questioned, replied proudly: "That is the day my daddie joined the Church!" After the story of Samuel had been told in the first grade, and the teacher had told how God spoke to us through the still small voice, the teacher asked if any child had ever heard the still small voice. Several raised their hands, with the following answers: "It told me once not to go off the porch." "It told me not to fight with my little brother." "It told me to stay in the yard."

At Easter time, the fifth-grade pupils prepared gifts for children and aged people in near-by homes and hospitals, and presented them themselves to express the lessons they had had in the class-room. The teaching of the Wilkinsburg school will live, because it is taking root in tiny hearts. The keen interest of the children, their unwillingness to miss a single hour, their eager spreading of the story everywhere, proves to the most skeptical that the investment made by the Churches of Wilkinsburg in the spiritual life of their children is a profitable one, and will pay dividends for long years to come. To Mrs. Renton and her helpers has come a great vision which through her story must go far abroad until other youngsters share in the privileges of knowing the Lord Jesus and His teachings through the Word of the Father.

THE SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.

The last session of the Southern Christian Convention, held with the New Christian Temple, at Norfolk, Va., last week was the most progressive session that the Convention has ever held. Many great and momentous problems came up for solution. They were handled with a faith and vision, with large grasp and bold response to the challenge which they presented to the young, intelligent, enthusiastic leadership which promises bigger and better things for the future of the Christian Church in the South.

The provision made for Elon College, so as to enable our alma mater to measure up to the financial standards required by the Southern Association of Colleges in equipment, endowment, teaching force, library, and all other respects, was a great advance. The whole Church should rally to this undertaking and meet the issue with great enthusiasm because it will mean so much for us as a Church.

We had already met the requirements in most respects, but now when this provision has been made effective we shall be up to the standard in the financial as well as in other respects. With the required $500,000 endowment, our college can pay her faculty an adequate salary to enable them to purchase the best books on their respective subjects, attend special lectures for continual mental growth, and take a Sabbatical year off for study occasionally with full or half salary.

There were many other advance movements taken in the Convention which will enhearten and inspire our young people with great enthusiasm for the future growth of the Church. The ultra conservative element of our constituency may fear the advanced steps taken by the Convention, but the more progressive element will respond to the challenge and bring the purposes expressed to a full realization in due time.

W. C. Wicker.

The board of control of Franklin Christian College for colored people last week decided to erect at once a $40,000 dormitory for girls. The college is doing fine work under the leadership of Rev. J. A. Henderson, and The Sun rejoices in every evidence of its growth and development.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

SPEAK OF THE NICE THINGS THE MEMBERS OF YOUR FAMILY DO.

"As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise."—Luke 6:27-38.

Any use for compliments in your home?

Or is everything received as a matter of course?

When mother has great success with some appetizing dish, is she told how good it is?

When father has some unpleasant job and does it well in the upkeep of the home, does he get the good words he deserves from the family he supports?

When sister makes some garment for herself and does it neatly and artistically, is it praised and approved by all?

When brother goes up a peg in his school average and shows a disposition to study at night instead of running the streets with the boys when they should be in their homes preparing, by rest and thoughtfulness, to get all the good possible out of the school periods, does the family exclaim, "well done?"

A lot of additional joy may be brought into your home if you would speak of the nice things the others do and show a loving appreication of their good qualities.

Quit complaining and praise every time you get an opportunity till it becomes a habit, and see if you do not feel better for it and make others happier? (Copyright, 1924, International Feature Service, Inc.)

TUESDAY.

THE POWER OF PRAYER.

"Cast thy burden upon the Lord."—Psa. 55:22-23.

Physician and minister sat facing each other in the doctor's office. The preacher exhibited symptoms of nervous breakdown. Blood pressure tests emphasized the danger. "I've just got to keep up," exclaimed the pastor. "I must not break down now. We are planning so many things at the Church, you know. You'll have to patch me up until summer. Then I'll take a long vacation."

After a few moments of thought, the kindly physician bent over his desk and scratched on a prescription pad. "Of course, I'll not give you an opiate," he said; "nor would a bromide help. But if you will follow this prescription, I will guarantee results. It will be more than a mere patching up. It will cure!"

Glancing down at the prescription, the minister saw, not some undecipherable hieroglyphics, but written in bold hand, this:

"Cast Thy Burden Upon the Lord."

The preacher saw the point. It was his own medicine—the very thing that he had often prescribed for his congregation. And he remembered now, he had been so very busy that he had not taken time, lately, for private prayer. Yes, it was true. Too busy!

That night he tarried long in his study, part of the time on his knees and also reading the Scriptures. What a delightful time it was! There came, after a while, a realization of the presence of God. The pastor went off to bed, heart glowing. Next day blood pressure had fallen many points and eyes were bright. No! It is not fiction. It is sober truth. The prescription is good. Try it; at least three doses a day.—Rev. John Harrison Allen.

WEDNESDAY.

ABOUNDING GRACE.

"God is able to make all grace abound unto you."—2 Cor. 9:8-11.

Grace, with all its healing power and outpouring quality, has a divine purpose, viz: that of endowing chosen people as a definite medium for the salvation of the world. Christians are chosen people, set apart from the rest of folks. He says, "I have chosen you and appointed you, that ye should go and bear fruit . . . that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, He may give it you." So He is looking to us to save the world. He has seen that we can be channels of His grace to the world. We are not to labor for our own salvation, but, being saved, we are to become the medium of heaven—the revelation of heaven to humanity. We are ambassadors of Him. This is the way Paul put it when he said, "We are ambassadors of God, as though God besought you by us." This is the highest and happiest business in the world.

Prayer.—Our Father, we thank Thee that Thou hast answered our prayers and given us saving grace. We thank Thee that it endows us with all that is infinitely holy. As He saves us, endow us with Thy spirit and send us to save others. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

THURSDAY.

MIXED WITH MUD.

"When one buildeth up a wall, behold, they daub it with untempered mortar. I say unto them . . . it shall fall . . . (then) it shall be said unto you, where is the daubing wherewith we have daubed? . . . And ye shall know that I am God."—Ezk. 13:10-14.

The mud spoken of is the mixture of mortar, or cement, used in building a brick wall. Jehovah calls it "untempered" stuff which will not hold. Judging from some modern work of this kind, some folks still love to mix with mud.

So is he who builds his house of life. That is what the Lord is talking about. Before He used this figure He accused them of being false, challenging authority, having an abnormal aversion to work, whose chief aim is pleasure, who deny the spirit of God in human life and are unrepentant. He calls them "daubers" with "untempered mortar." In another place Christ describes them as building on sand. There is but one end. They must fall! Hosts of folks are doing the very same thing today. They must come to the same end, and the retrospect will be "Where is my wall? Alas! it was built of mud." There is no peace, saith my God to the wicked (Isa. 57:21). There can be no peace without righteousness.

FRIDAY.

THE PALSIED SOUL.

"Who can forgive sins but God only?"—Mark 2:5-12.

Here is a swift series of pictures, both forceful and pathetic. There is the helpless paralytic, his face now and again revealing the faint, flickering light of a glimmering hope. And here are the four friends, sympathetic, optimistic, perfectly assured, urging their way through the surging crowd. And here are "certain of the scribes" sitting in the house, cold, unemotional, jealous for the sustained authority of their own school. And in the midst of it all, the Master!

What does He think about it? What does He see? He sees the invisible. The merely material becomes the unsubstantial, and the spiritual stands revealed. The picturesque setting melts away, and the unseen background of dispositions emerges into view. Bodies become transparencies, and the naked spirit stands unveiled in the searching light of the uncreated beam. The Master sees the faith of the bearers—"Jesus seeing their faith." There we have the faith in its last analysis. To have faith in Jesus is to have confidence in the ability and reliability of Jesus to do what He claims to do.

The forgiveness of the Lord is not some sweet and ineffectual sentiment. It is the mighty energy of creation engaged in the work of re-creation engaged in the work of re-creation. When the Lord says "forgiven," the life that was locked and imprisoned in icy winter feels round about it the influence of a warm and expansive spring. Where sin abounds, grace doth much more abound. The forces of spiritual health are in the ascendant, and the powers of evil and night are dethroned and in retreat. When the Master said: "Thy sins are forgiven thee," an angel might have witnessed: "This thy brother was dead and is alive again, he was lost and is found."—Rev. J. H. Jowett.

SATURDAY.

THE POWER OF THE CROSS.

"If I be lifted up, I will draw all men to me."—Jno. 12:20-36, 44-50.

The life of Jesus Christ, from first to last, was heroic and thrilling; ushered in amidst singing, constantly under fire by devils and their imps, living faultless and dying on a fellon's cross; and that cross has become the rallying point of all the ages, the power of God unto salvation.

The power of the cross, first, is in His faultlessness. Not another person in all the history of the world has been faultless even before the eyes of men. His every act remains unchallnged.

The power of the cross, second, lies in the certainty of His teachings. He never expressed doubt, but brought things to pass. Whatever the question, he never suggested, but he prescribed. He never argued, but He announced. When He spoke of God it was as one that came from God. When He spoke of the spirit He breathed that very spirit and the people felt it.

Prayer.—Our Father, help us to be this way. For Jesus' sake we ask it. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"The Sabbath was made for man."—Mark 2:27.

The Sabbath was created for the spiritual man. For this purpose, it is indispensable. Mental and physical health is dependent upon harmonious development of all our faculties. The spiritual faculty of man constitutes that most special characteristic which distinguishes man from the brute. If this suffers for the want of proper nourishment, wretchedness must follow. The religious instinct of desire for the divine, the reception and assimilation of spiritual truths, we must never forget, and it is for the development of these things specially that the Sabbath was given us—spiritual exercise, growth and development. To do this we cease from our labors on the Sabbath Day and feed the inner man, acquiring a fuller consciousness of the higher and better life.

It is unreasonable to suppose that any of our faculties will attain unto their full and healthy development unless special care and special seasons be appropriated to their culture. Reason affirms that a holy Sabbath is an indispensable condition of healthy spiritual growth. George Washington, in an order to his troops during the Revolution, said: "We can have but little hope of the blessing of heaven on our arms if we insult it (the Sabbath) by our impiety and folly."

REPORT OF HISTORIAN TO S. C. C.

By W. E. MacClenny.

Agreeable to your appointment at the last session of this body in Henderson, N. C., your humble servant has been attempting to do some original research work in the history of the Christian Church in the South during the past year. Some few things have been found that were deemed worthy of publication in The Christian Sun, and have been put in print. The appointment carried with it a request that a report be made to this body in writing at this session.

My daily duties have prevented my making any very extensive research during this time, as that kind of work is slow and extremely tedious. Sketches of one or two of the old Churches in the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference have been prepared and published. A deed of gift from Tignal Jones, of Mecklenburg County, Va., to Rev. James O'Kelly and wife was located and a certified copy of same procured. This showed that Mr. Jones gave Mr. O'Kelly and wife a life interest in forty acres of land upon which he had evidently been living for some years prior to the date of the said deed, 1789. An outline history of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference from its organization to date was prepared, giving the most important items happening at each Conference. This has not yet been published. Printed copies of the minutes of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference were found for the years 1857 and 1859, and copies of same made. These complete the records of that Conference, with the exception of 1855, 1856 and 1858 to the War Between the States. In these new-discovered minutes, much new data was found.

In the year's research we have found that very little attention has been paid to the history of our Church in the past. Several times we have found in the old records that a committee would be appointed to gather up the history of the denomination in the South and put it in permanent form, but so far as we have been able to find, these committees never made any report and the work was never accomplished; and, what is worse, a great deal of the early data has been lost forever. There is still one source from which a great deal of data may be had, and that is the North Carolina State Library, as there are complete files of The Christian Sun in this library from the year 1888 to the present, and perhaps annuals and other data much earlier, as North Carolina has done good work in preserving her history.

From observation, we, as a Church, have paid for less attention to this phase of our Church work than almost any of our neighbor Churches; much less than our brethren in this State. The Episcopalians have had their Meade, Bryan, and Goodwin; the Methodist Episcopal Church has had its Asbury, Lee, Bennett and McTyeire; the Methodist Protestant Church has had its Drinkhouse; the Baptists have had their Burkett, Read, Semple, Beale, Hobday and Jones; the Presbyterians have had their Foote, Howison, Waddel and Makemie; the Friends have had their Fox and others, and have scrupulously preserved their records in their book room in Baltimore, Md. In that vault will be found some of the oldest records extant in many of the Virginia counties.

As we have gone into research work along other lines and have consulted these historians, we have many times wished that our Church leaders had done as Caesar did in his great wars—appointed some one to write an account of what was done as it happened—so that we of today might know more about what the early fathers of the Christian Church did.

Our Church began its existence at a time when the amount given for religious purposes was indeed very small in Virginia, and perhaps less in other places. In 1783, Thomas Jefferson, the best-posted man on Virginia of his day, estimated that the total amount paid for the support of all the Churches in Virginia was only $25,000; and from his notes on Virginia it may be inferred that he thought that this might be overestimated, even though it only amounted to 12½ each year for the 200,000 tithable in the State at that time. Our Church membership was entirely rural at first, nor was education general among either the clergy or laity. It did not seem to dawn upon them that no nation, people nor Church has ever grown great until they had a history with its great men to whom the youth might be pointed for inspiration; and for this reason this line, the historic, has been very much neglected, and while we have made great strides in education and other things, we are still without our Church historians. No one will rejoice more than your speaker when a thorough course has been prepared in the history of the Christian Church and has been put in the curricula of our Southern colleges, to be required of all candidates for the ministry.

For a number of years we have been gathering what data we could find and putting it together so that it might be of some use to those who have the time to use it. A bound volume of manuscripts was placed in the library at Elon College, N. C., in 1912, but when the great fire of January, 1923, came it was consumed; yet when the original copies were made duplicates were made, and we now have the contents of this volume, with much new data, ready to be bound, and this will some day fall to the lot of some library where it can be used by our people. The contents of this volume are as follows:

DEATH CLAIMS REV. GEO. D. EASTES.

Rev. Geo. D. Eastes, pastor of Holy Neck Christian Church, died on Sunday night, May 4th, at 11:30 o'clock, at Lakeview Hospital, Suffolk, Va. Mr. Eastes had been in very bad health for a long time, and his death was not entirely unexpected.

Since coming to the South, Rev. Mr. Eastes has served in some of the most strategic points in the REV. GEO. D. EASTES.

Christian Church. He was pastor of the Third Church, Norfolk, Va., which later became one of the units of the new Christian Temple of that city. He also served as pastor of the Raleigh (N. C.) Christian Church. He was quite active for some time in evangelistic work, but was compelled to give it up on account of his health. However, he was considered much improved when he accepted the call to Holy Neck last year.

The Church has lost a valuable worker in its cause, and his many friends and acquaintances are poorer for his having left them.

Mr. Eastes is survived by his widow, who was Miss Morgan, of Portsmouth, Va.; one son, Geo. D. Eastes, III; his mother, who lives in Indiana, and other relatives. His funeral was held on Wednesday, May 7th, the services being conducted by Rev. Jas. H. Lightbourne, of Holland, Va.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

May 25, 1924.

Subject: "Jeremiah and the Babylonian Crisis."

Golden Text: "Amend your ways and your doings, and obey the voice of Jehovah your God." —Jer. 26:13.

Lesson: Jer. 7:1-26, 9:1-9, 15:1-10, 18:1-12, 25:1-14, 26:1-24, 36:1-32, 38:1-28.

Devotional Reading: Psa. 86:1-8.

Jeremiah lived in tumultous times. It will be necessary to know something about those times in order to understand the man and his message.

I. The Times.

The history of Jeremiah's time included the reigns of the last five kings of Judah. It will be recalled that we considered Hezekiah and his reforms in connection with last Sunday's lesson. Manasseh, his son, was a violent reactionary and undid the good embodied in his father's policy. Amon, Manasseh's son, was just as bad. But Josiah, the succeeding king, was a good king and a loyal follower of Jehovah. It was during his reign that the "book of the law," which is commonly identified with our book of Deuteronomy, was found, and that a sweeping reform on the basis of that book was carried out. Josiah was slain in a vain battle against the Egyptians at Megiddo, and Jehoahaz, his son, came to the throne. Jehoahaz was deposed and taken in chains to Egypt, and Jehoiakim was appointed king. He found in Nebuchadnezzar, of Babylon, an implacable foe, and he was forced to pay tribute to Babylon, and at one time he was carried captive to Babylon. It was during Jehoiakim's reign that conditions became hopeless in Judah, and also that Jeremiah was very active.

One thing stands out above all the succession of kings of this period. Except for Josiah, they were godless men and worshipers of idols. They were selfish, unscrupulous, and faithless, and directly and indirectly they fostered the evils which brought about the downfall of Judah and the destruction of Jerusalem. It is to be noted, too, that both Babylon and the Scythians, a wild northern tribe, were looming on the horizon as the nations through whom Jehovah was to work out His purposes.

II. The Man.

Jeremiah means "Jehovah hurls," or "Jehovah founds." His home was at Anethoth, a village a few miles from Jerusalem. He thus was in close touch with the affairs of his people. He came of good stock, and was a young man of promise. He had a very definite call, and looking back from a later period, he was convinced that God had called him, even from his mother's womb. He was of a sensitive nature, and preferred an inconspicuous place, but when he became convinced that God had called him, he gave up home and loved ones and entered upon a life of hardship, misunderstanding and sacrifice. He was an ardent lover of his country, a most devoted patriot, and yet he felt called upon to denounce her sins, and even to predict her doom. He was even accused of being a traitor, for he counseled a policy of dependence upon Babylon. But this was because, with prophetic insight, he saw the folly of looking elsewhere for help, and because he saw that the sins of his beloved country had made inevitable a heavy penalty. He has been called the weeping prophet, and has been interpreted as a man of sorrows. But if he wept, he wept because of a great love and a great heartache for his country. He was a man among men, one of God's really great men of all time.

III. The Message.

Jeremiah's message has come to us in the book which bears his name. At the bidding of Jehovah he wrote down his earlier sermons and had Baruch, his scribe, to read them before the princes. The princes in turn had them read before the king (Jehoiakim), who became enraged and cut them up and threw them into the fire. Jeremiah, with Baruch's help, then wrote another roll, or "book," and added thereto many more words. It is this work which forms the greater part of our book of Jeremiah.

Jeremiah's messages are great literary masterpieces. For warmth of feeling, beauty of form, and directness, they rank high among all prophetic literature. He who would read really fine literature cannot afford to neglect this book.

Some Teaching Points.

1. The consciousness that God has called a man constitutes a source of courage and power in his life.

2. Patriotism involves some of the highest and finest things in life.

3. God's servant need fear nothing that man can do to Him.

4. The man of God must have the courage of his convictions.

5. Public wrongs must be rebuked without regard for personal consequences.

6. God's decrees of judgment are conditional—if man repents, God forgives.

7. "Seest thou a man diligent in his business; he shall stand before kings."

8. God's word can take care of itself.

9. Organized evil always resents being brought to light, and especially to justice.

10. He who is the servant of Jehovah is the freest of all men.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

May 25, 1924.

Topic: "Have Business and Commerce Helped or Hindered Missionary Work?"

Lesson: Acts 19:23-28.

Daily Readings: Help by teaching diligence.—Prov. 27:23-27. By teaching industry.—2 Thess. 3:7-10. By glorifying labor.—Gen. 2:8-17. Greed hinders—Eccl. 4:5-8. Vice hinders.—Isa. 5:11, 12, 20-25. Injustice hinders.—Jas. 5:1-6.

There are two sides to the question. For we recognize that business and commerce have helped missionary work and the people to whom missionaries are sent. They have taught them diligence—one of the first things the missionay does among people who are indolent, shiftless and apparently worthless from an economic standpoint is to teach them to work, to become diligent. They have taught them industry; heathen people have become industrious, and they have produced some fine things; they have glorified labor. In many places work is looked down upon and regarded as something only for servants and outcasts, but the missionaries have taught the dignity of work; they have taught the value of organization; they have brought many modern conveniences to missionary work; they have made possible many advances in missionary work.

But commerce and business have also hindered missionary work. They have developed the spirit of greed and led to the exploitation of the ignorant and heathen peoples. They have brought in many vices of so-called civilized people, and these vices have wrought havoc among the heathens. They have fostered in many cases injustice—the stories of what Christian nations have done to heathen nations in order to get commerce and business are hardly believable. Missionaries recognize unregenerate business and commerce as one of the evils they have to conquer. And be it said to the credit of the missionaries that they have done a great deal of good in this way.

Some Quotations and Questions.

"When Christianity, or the new way of life, touches the pocketbook of business, there is an outcry and opposition." (V. 24.)

"Missionaries cannot leave unmolested practices that lead people astray." (V. 26.)

"It is easy to raise a mob against missionaries. But even opposition ends in advancing the kingdom." (V. 28.)

"Commerce helps missions insofar as it opens roads along which missionaries may travel. Where men go for gain, others will go for Christ."

"Commerce helps missions by tending to make stable conditions. Governments will hasten to protect business interests abroad, when they would hesitate to do much for missions alone."

"Commerce hinders when it introduces the evil practices of the West, or sets a bad example in the selfish lives of those who are supposed to be Christians."

"Commerce hinders when it sells rum to the heathen and thus arouses passions that without rum are bad enough."

"Business means schools, for intelligent workers are better than ignorant. Thus commerce brings the printing press, industry and an orderly life, making missions just a little easier and safer."

UNIVERSITY WOMEN FOR PERSONAL LAW OBEDIENCE.

The American Association of University Women officially allied itself with the growing movement for stricter enforcement of law by adopting a recommendation of the resolutions committee, declaring it to be the sense of the association that law enforcement in the strictest interpretation is essential to the welfare of the nation. The resolution states:

"The association deplores the present state of indifference to violation of law, and records its observation that individual law observance is an absolute requisite to adequate law enforcement."

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

Our Easter offerings are coming in nicely. At this writing, May 7th, we have reached $1,940. It will take quite an effort to reach our goal of $3,500. Let all the Churches and Sunday Schools do their best and help us reach it.

We have passed two mile-posts already in the month of May, and hope to pass another one. That is moving on nicely, and we are happy.

Our hearts were made sad when we learned of the death of Dr. J. Pressley Barrett. Dr. Barrett was one of our most loyal friends, both personal and in our orphanage work, and never failed to say a good word in our behalf. When he was editor of the Herald of Gospel Liberty and was far from us in distance, yet his heart was with us, and he often mentioned the orphanage and kept it before his people. Since being editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, he has been in close touch with the work and has been our loyal friend. We will miss his kindly words and wise counsel.

S. S. AND C. E. CONVENTION.

The Western North Carolina Christian Conference will hold its Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention at Pleasant Ridge Church, two miles south of Ramseur, N. C., on June 28th and 29, 1924.

Our program committee is preparing a good program for the occasion. We are sending out blanks to each and every Church in the Conference, and wish that you may make a full report of the work you are doing. Also, we ask that you will send a good delegation and a small amount of money—no less than 1 cent per enrollment in your Sunday School. This is to defray expenses—postage, stationery, minute book, programs, etc.

We desire that each of our members will prayerfully consider this on question: Is the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor worth my while? Then, if it is, let each one rally to the cause; come to the Convention with a determination to do his part, and surely we will have the best Convention we have ever had in our Conference. We especially invite every minister in the Conference, our neighboring Conferences, and all Protestants to come and take part with us.

We earnestly ask every pastor to bring this matter before his Church, talk it up, encourage his people to get busy, and each one pray for the success of the work. If God be for us, who can be against us? Yours for the cause,

B. S. MOFFITT,
Ramseur, N. C. Secretary.

On August 23rd next, the planet Mars, our nearest planet, will be nearer the earth than it has been for a long time. The distance then will be $34,650,000 miles.

OUR PLEDGES to Men and Millions are Sacred, Solemn and Binding.

These obligations were made through the Church to the Kingdom of God and to all that pertains to building up that Kingdom in the world, so far as our Christian Church is concerned. As Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has so pertinently pointed out: "A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations--'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42)--but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

Many are making great sacrifices to meet these obligations and pay these pledges. Every one who fails to do so not only produces paralysis in his own moral system, but to that extent paralyses the efforts and sacrifices that the faithful and the loyal make.

BEAR IN MIND MEN AND MILLIONS MEAN AND STAND FOR ALL THAT THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH MEANS AND STANDS FOR.

—REMEMBER—

that the fourth year ends April 30, 1924.

After that, we have only one more year in which to meet these obligations. Unless we put forth a mighty effort to pay some on these pledges during the last quarter of the fourth year, there is great danger that we will fail entirely, because of the bulk of our pledge looming up before us in a one-year period.

Paying SOMETHING by April 30, 1924, will make it easy to pay ALL by April 30, 1925. Where there is a will there is a way, and God always helps those who try to their capacity to help themselves.

THE MISSION BOARD,
Elon College, N. C.

LIEUT.-GOV. J. E. WEST, Chairman.

J. O. ATKINSON, Secretary.

WELDON.

On April 12, 1924, our community was saddened when the death angel came for the spirit of Pat Jones, the sweet and devoted wife of Dewey Weldon. She was a daughter of R. G. and Lizzie Winn, and became the wife of Dewey Weldon about four and one-half years ago.

On February 17, 1924, she underwent an operation at Henderson, N. C., and a few days later went to Baltimore and took the radium treatment. All that medical skill and loving hands could do was of no avail, for God wanted her to come up higher. Her suffering was great, but she bore it patiently and with a sweet, Christian spirit. Pat Jones possessed a Christian character that was highly esteemed by all who knew her. She expressed herself as being resigned to God's will, and had no doubts or fear of death, but was calm and peaceful.

Pat was 23 years of age, her birthday being her burial day. She was a member of Liberty (Vance) Christian Church and of the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor. While we will miss her, we feel that her life will be an inspiration to us. May we give better service and be fully prepared to meet her.

The funeral service was conducted on Sunday at her Church, by her pastor, Rev. J. E. Franks, assisted by Revs. Malone and Teague. The large number of friends, with the beautiful floral offerings, went to show how she was loved by all. We are reminded that "a good name is rather to be chosen than great riches."

While we cannot understand, God had a good motive for taking our loved one. We are assured that He is too wise to make a mistake and too loving to be unkind. Therefore, we would resolve:

First, That we bow in humble submission to the will of our Heavenly Father, feeling that our loss is her eternal gain.

Second, That the members of the Ladies' Bible Class and the Christian Endeavor Society of Liberty (Vance) wish to extend our deepest heartfelt sympathy and our sincere prayers to the bereaved loved ones and friends. May God's grace be sufficient for all the bereaved.

MRS. R. J. NEWTON.

HARRIS.

James Hinton Harris age 84, oldest member of Pope's Chapel Christian Church, died at his late residence, near said Church on May 4, 1924, leaving one daughter and twelve grandchildren. He was married three times and was received into the Church at Pope's by J. W. Wellons, D. D., when a young man. He served four years in the Confederate army. He was a devout Christian, with a mind clear and devotional almost to the last moment of his earthly pilgrimage. Funeral services from Pope's, assisted by Rev. Mr. Dowell, pastor of the Baptist Church of Franklinton, N. C.

D. A. LONG.

TRUITT.

Whereas, God, in His infinite wisdom and mercy, has seen fit to call from time to eternity Mrs. Cornelia Patton Truitt; and

Whereas, we recognize in the death of our beloved friend and sister the loss of a kind and loving Christian woman, and desiring to express our esteem and high regard for her memory; therefore, be it resolved:

First, That we bow in humble submission to the great Creator's will, remembering that our loss on earth has been our sister's gain in heaven.

Second, That the members of the Shallow Ford Christian Church extend their heartfelt sympathy and sincere condolence to the bereaved family and friends.

Third, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy be spread upon the minutes of our Church, and a copy be sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

Fortebee

A REMEDY FOR TUBERCULOSIS. FORTEBEE is a remedy discovered recently for the external treatment of tuberculosis, pleurisy, and "flu." Here is what people are saying about it already. From a letter received from Veanie McGhee, Ellerson, Va.:

"Since using FORTEBEE I have good appetite, all pains are gone, and I feel like a new person. My left lung was bad, and FORTEBEE healed it. Through the use of this remedy, I am restored to good health, and am glad to tell others about it."

This is from a letter received from M. E. Gordon, Richmond, Va.:

"A friend brought me a bottle of FORTEBEE. The first application was put on my chest, and for the first time in many weeks I could breaths freely without the catch in my side. After several applications the pleurisy pains were dulled, and then they came only at intervals. Now I am again at my work, feeling stronger every day. It is a privilege to tell you the good FORTEBEE has done me."

Many other such testimonials.

Try FORTEBEE yourself, and be your own judge as to results. It is harmless, and you can apply it on yourself by following the directions. $2.50 per bottle. Large size, $4.00. Order direct from FORTEBEE, INCORPORATED, 28 N. Eighth St., Richmond, Va.

Why Drugs Fail

Many chronic diseases fail to respond to drug treatment, even in the hands of the best physicians, whereas acute diseases usually respond readily. When a disease has become chronic, drugs often seem to do as much harm as they do good, for the system rebels against them. It is just this class of cases which derive the greatest benefit from drinking Shivar, America's best stomach, liver and kidney Water. If you suffer with chronic dyspepsia, indigestion, sick headache, rheumatism, kidney or liver disease, uric poisoning or other curable conditions due to impure blood, do not hesitate to accept the Spring's liberal offer as printed below. Their records show that only two in a hundred, on the average, have reported "no benefit." This is a wonderful record from a truly wonderful Spring. Sign the following letter:

Shivar Springs,
Box 16-H, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if I report no benefit you agree to refund the price of the water in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return within a month.

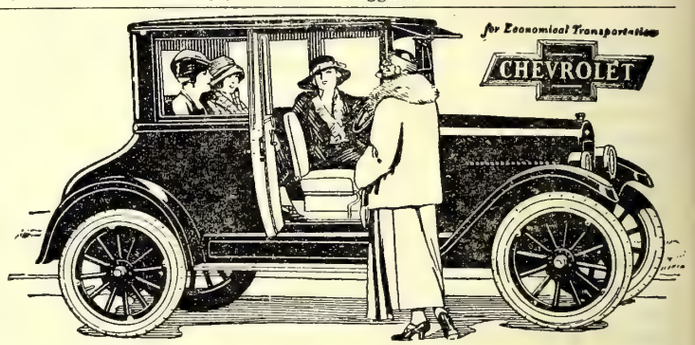
Newer Form of Iron

Gives Strength and Energy to The Weak and Aged

The remarkable discovery of a newer form of iron has proved a blessing to thousands who were feeling the weakening effects of advancing years. To be strong, vigorous and active you must have plenty of good rich red blood of the kind that this newer form of iron helps make. It is like the iron in your blood and like the iron in spinach, lentils and apples. If you want something to quickly help make rich red blood, revitalize worn-out, exhausted nerves and give you new strength and energy, your own druggist will furnish you with a bottle of this newer form of iron, sold under the name of Nuxated Iron, and he will guarantee that if you do not feel stronger and years younger in two weeks time your money will be promptly refunded. For sale by all druggists.



The Woman's Own Car

All Chevrolet models are popular with women on account of their beauty of line and finish and ease of handling.

The new four-passenger coupe was designed especially for women. Its stylish, distinguished appearance makes immediate appeal, and closer examination promotes enthusiasm. Best of all—the price is surprisingly low for so high-grade a production, equipped as it is with a Fisher Body, two extra wide doors that make feasible graceful entrance to and exit from the car Single, comfortable driver's seat, ample room for two in the rear seat, and a fourth folding seat for an extra passenger.

Comfortably, tastefully upholstered and artistically trimmed with good-grade hardware.

Plate-glass windows on all four sides. Cord tires on easily demountable rims, with extra rim.

Although designed with especial consideration of our women friends, we find this model is also favored by many men, for business and family use. Merchandise samples can be carried inside the car instead of in the rear compartment. Evenings and week ends the same car admirably meets the requirements of the small family.

GARRISON.

Whereas, God, in His great love and infinite wisdom, has seen fit to call from this earthly life to her reward our beloved Sister Nancy Kernodle Garrison, one who was always loyal to every enterprise of the Church and a faithful worker in all of its organizations, we, the Ladies' Aid Society of Bethlehem Christian Church, realizing our great loss, offer the following resolutions:

First, That we bow in humble submission to God's divine will, knowing that He doeth all things well.

Second, That we extend to her husband our heartfelt sympathy, while our hearts throb with tears in the loss of so dear a wife, neighbor and friend, who was ever glad to fill her place wherever her lot was cast.

Third, That a copy of these resolutions be sent the bereaved husband, a copy to The Christian Sun for publication, and a copy placed on the minutes of the Ladies' Aid Society of Bethlehem Christian Church.

WELDON.

Pat J. (Winn) Weldon, daughter of R. J. and Lizzie Winn, was born April 13, 1901, and died April 12, 1924. She was married to Dervie Weldon in September, 1919. She accepted Christ and joined Liberty (Vance) Christian Church when a girl of fifteen, and for eight years had lived a Christian life of interest and devotion not often experienced by one so young. She had won a great host of friends, for to know her was to love and esteem her. Besides these, she leaves father, mother, four brothers, four sisters, and an almost broken-hearted husband. For five years the ties that bound them had become so interwoven and close that husband did not leave her in weeks of severe sickness at home or at hospital. And when the end came, his youthful form almost completely collapsed.

Pat was very patient and submissive in her great suffering, and expressed herself, in the most calm manner, as ready to meet her Lord in perfect peace. Her life, though short, has meant so much. Heaven alone will reveal its worth to her Christian friends, when they shall meet her in the land where partings never come.

Many more than could see or hear attended the funeral, conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. Bro. Teague, of the Baptist Church, and Rev. Bro. Malone, of the Episcopal Church. Her body was buried beneath the great floral mount in Liberty Cemetery to await Jesus' coming. J. E. FRANKS.

Copper Tubing Used.—

The Ford Motor Company uses 254 miles of copper tubing for the manufacture of radiators each day at their present production rates. The Ford plant is situated at Highland Park, Mich. Another large Ford unit is being constructed at Charlotte, N. C. This addition will mean much to the North Carolina city.

Fifty-Nine Transfusions.—

Thomas Kane, of New York City, has given his blood fifty-nine times for transfusion into other people, during the last ten years. He receives from fifty to one hundred dollars for a transfusion. Kane is thirty-nine years old, and is ruddy and healthy. He has never experienced any ill effects from a transfusion.

The Longest String.—

The Canon Towel Mills, at Canapolis, N. C., which are the largest manufacturers of towels in the world, announced recently that they spun a cotton string two hundred million miles long each year. This is probably the longest string spun in the world. It would be more than enough to reach from the earth to the sun and back again.

Floods Claim Life and Property.—

The recent floods, caused by heavy rains May 10th and 11th, claim toll of two lives and large property damages in Virginia. The damages in that State are estimated at two million dollars. The floods extended over a large portion of the eastern part of the country, and everywhere the property damage was heavy. The strawberry crop, which was just coming on the market, sustained great losses. This was the second flood within five weeks.

Corner-Stones Laid at New College.—

On May 14th, the corner-stones of the two new dormitories of the Methodist Protestant College at High Point, N. C., were laid by the North Carolina Grand Lodge of Masons. Many thousands of Methodists from all parts of the country attended the event. The High Point people co-operated to make the day a memorable one. The address of the occasion was delivered by H. L. Freeman, president of Adrian College, Adrian, Mich. The new M. P. College will open its doors for the reception of students next September. The authorities are expecting a large attendance.

Two Premiers Defeated.—

M. Poincaire, the French Premier, and the Prime Minister of Japan were defeated in recent elections. Poincaire will hold office until June 4th, when the newly elected deputies will take their seats. He has already resigned. It is his intention to retire from politics for a while, he says. The defeat of the French Premier may result in a modification of the Dawes report. It is probable that the report will be so liberalized that Germany may accept the terms proposed.

The Japanese minister has also resigned. This is somewhat a new procedure in Japan, and is provoking much comment.

Major Martin Found.—

Major Frederick L. Martin and his mechanic, Sergeant Alva Harvey, who were lost in Alaska for nine days, came in on May 10th. Their plane was wrecked on April 30th by crashing against a mountain in the fog. It was thought after several days of search that the commander of the round-the-world flying squadron was lost, but Major Martin and his mechanic came into a trading post in fairly good physical condition. Their lives are due to condensed food and grit, Major Martin declares. He has been ordered to report at Washington, while the other flyers continue their flight around the world. They are today (May 15th) leaving for the longest single flight, of 878 miles, and will land in Japan.

When the news of Major Martin's safety reached his mother, on Mothers' Day, May 11th, she declared that it was indeed the most wonderful Mothers' Day that she had ever known. She was visiting in Richmond, Ind., at the time.

Billy Sunday Ill.—

While engaged in a revival at Nashville, Tenn., W. A. (Billy) Sunday was taken seriously ill, May 10th. It was thought at the time that the evangelist was suffering from a slight attack of ptomaine poisoning, but the trouble became acute, and physicians announced that it was uremic poisoning. A special car was chartered May 13th and the evangelist was hurried north to the clinic of the Mayo brothers at Rochester, Minn. Mr. Sunday was accompanied by his wife and daughter, his Nashville physician, and a member of his party. The Mayo clinic was decided on by Mr. Sunday because the Mayo brothers are personal friends. The evangelist seemed to be in the best of spirits, and for some time hoped to continue the revival services. The rapid development of his illness, however, made it imperative that he leave for treatment. It is the first time in all the thirty-two years of his work as an evangelist that Billy Sunday has been forced to interrupt a revival.

New Tammany Chief Chosen.—

Surrogate James A. Foley has been chosen to head the great Tammany organization to succeed the late Charles F. Murphy. It was thought for some time that Mr. Foley would not accept the Tammany leadership, but it is reported that a committee of three visiting Mr. Foley before the meeting of the executive committee of Tammany persuaded him to accept. Only two of the seventy members of the executive committee voted against the choice of Surrogate Foley.

The new Tammany chieftain comes to his leadership as the successor of Charles F. Murphy, who died recently after having held the Tammany leadership for more than twenty-two years. Under the leadership of the late chieftain, Tammany became the most efficient political organization in the country. It is thought that the death of Mr. Murphy will materially affect the Democratic chances in the coming election. The funeral of the late Tammany leader was largely attended by many of the most prominent Democrats of the nation.

Denmark Suggests.—

In a meeting of the mountain missionaries of all the Churches recently, the subject of adult education was discussed. It is generally recognized that school and college training have a tendency to draw the young people from their homes if they are humble homes, and to send them to the city, where the advantages of life are more easily obtained. This migration seriously handicaps the sparsely populated regions. This is found especially true among those who work for negroes, Indians and rural areas. It is especially true of the mountaineer of North Carolina, Virginia, Kentucky and Tennessee. The Conference workers for mountaineers faced this problem squarely in their meeting.

Mrs. John C. Campbell, who, with her husband, has worked among the mountaineers for years, read a paper before the Conference in which she pointed out the distinct advantages of the present Danish system of "People's Colleges." There are now sixty of these institutions in Denmark. Denmark is a small country, about half as large as the State of Tennessee, and has a population of about three million and a half people. The land is mostly sandy or marshy, and consequently poor. The Danes have turned to animals for their support, and the raising of cows and hens has made it well known for excellent butter and eggs. The sixty schools have no entrance requirements, give no grades, confer no degrees, have no graduation. They offer training along industrial lines and in home economics, but history, literature, and the cultural branches are not neglected. These schools have greatly helped Denmark, and Mrs. Campbell suggests a similar system for the adults of the southern highlands. She hopes that some board will pioneer in this work.

NOTES-PERSONALS

All-South Christian Endeavor Convention will meet in Richmond July 10th to 14th.

The Richmond Christian Church will be represented at the Elon Chautauqua and School of Methods July 28th to August 3d.

"THE SUN gives more than value received, and more than holds its own as a Church organ and religious publication."—M. W. Butler, Muncie, Ind.

On the 18th of June, the Sunday School of the First Christian Church will go on an excursion, in connection with three other schools, and picnic at Buckroe Beach, Va.

Dr. W. P. Lawrence is being urged to run for the State Senate. Mr. Adrion M. Carroll, Burlington, N. C., is also being urged. Both are active laymen in the Christian Church.

Rev. Carl E. Gerringer, Brown Summit, N. C., has recently undergone an operation at a Greensboro hospital, but is happy to be out again, and hopes soon to be filling his pastoral appointments.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN makes its first appearance under the new editorial management this week. We want to see every family of the Church a subscriber. Will you get one new subscriber?

While Dr. Barrett was in the hospital, Dr. Harper generously served THE CHRISTIAN SUN. The managing editor, on behalf of THE SUN'S readers, desires to extend a vote of thanks and appreciation to the acting editor for his services.

An entertainment for the benefit of the library of the Sunday School of the First Christian Church at Richmond will be given May 29th at 8 P. M. "The Passion Play" will be exhibited by Dr. Downing, and admission will be a book or the price of a book.

Last week, by inadvertence, we failed to note that Mr. A. F. Chase, circulation manager of our General Convention publications, attended the Southern Christian Convention. He was there and active in the sessions. It was a pleasure to welcome him.

Rev. J. F. Foster, we are advised, is resigning his pastorate at Waverly, Spring Hill and Centerville. Bro. Foster has served this pastorate with great zeal and efficiency for the past eleven years. Any Churches desiring a capable and progressive pastor should communicate with Bro. Foster.

Her many friends will be glad to know that Miss Virgie E. Beale, once an Elon student from Isle of Wight County, Va., is now with the State Board of Education of Virginia. Her address is 1012 East Marshall Street, Richmond, Va. Miss Virgie is making good in the splendid position to which she was called several months ago.

Rev. G. O. Lankford, pastor of Burlington Christian Church, has been conducting a revival the past week at the Rosemont Christian Church, Berkley, Va., Rev. B. F. Black, pastor. Bro. Black was unable to be present, but the date had been fixed and the meetings were carried on by Dr. Lankford and the active, faithful ones of the Church.

The Woman's Bible Class of the Burlington Church sent the mission secretary a check of $30 last week, with which to curb the well. This was a most generous act and greatly appreciated, as it was absolutely essential, Bro. Sorrell wrote, that the well have curbing. Bro. Sorrell writes that they have a good well of water, and this is a great blessing and benefit.

Rev. and Mrs. D. P. Barrett and family are to arrive at Elon this week to attend the graduating exercises at Elon College commencement, when Alice, their oldest daughter, is to graduate. The Barretts will be home some months on furlough, and after spending ten days or two weeks at Elon, plan to spend the remainder of their furlough period in Eastern Virginia.

It gives the managing editor pleasure to state that all members of the editorial board have been communicated with, and that they have signified their acceptance of the positions named and to which they were elected by the Convention. These brethren have consented to a labor of love and service, and the membership constituency of the Churches owe it to these brethren to show their appreciation by a unanimous support of THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

The associate editors of THE SUN, elected by the Convention, namely: Dr. W. W. Staley, Dr. W. A. Harper, Dr. R. C. Helfenstein, Rev. S. C. Harrell, and Rev. Sion M. Lynam, news editor, have all signified their acceptance and agree to carry the work forward to the best of their strength and ability. It is a joy to be associated with brethren so congenial and able, and with these willing hands contributing regularly, the work of editing the paper should be light and delightful.

Dr. D. A. Long sends us the following regarding Oak Level: "The beautiful oak grove and the rich foliage make Oak Level a delightful place to worship by the road, with ever-increasing travel. Part of the lumber is on the ground, with which the members and friends will soon enlarge the house of worship. The cemetery has recently been enlarged and beautified. Pattie Pearce Staley, wife of Dr. W. W. Staley, is buried in the cemetery at Oak Level. Dr. Staley preached at Oak Level first Sunday in May. People are still talking about the sermon."

The Committee of One Thousand, formed at Washington last fall to promote the enforcement of law, with special reference to the prohibition law, is asking the presidents of 300 universities and colleges of the country whether they agree with Nicholas Murray Butler in his contention that prohibition has failed, and has resulted in widespread disregard for law. It will be interesting to get the responses from these heads of educational institutions, and it is a safe guess that few of them will take the untenable and un-American position of the president of Columbia University.

Elon should have its greatest commencement this year. The Whitley Memorial Building, in which the exercises are to be held, is to be used for the first time. It is magnificent in appointment, ample in seating capacity for a great audience, beautiful and impressive for public gatherings and worship. There are forty graduates this year, and the class ranks high in scholarship and attainment. The Alamance Building is to be formerly presented, and the other buildings are progressing toward completion. Then there is a roster of eloquent and able speakers—Rev. Alva M. Kerr, of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, who preaches the baccalaureate sermon; Dr. W. A. Harper, president of the college, who delivers the baccalaureate address; Rev. H. Shelton Smith, who delivers the alumni address, and Dr. Athearn, of Boston, who delivers the literary address on graduation day. All these speakers, with growing interest in the college, should, and doubtless will, attract a very large attendance at the commencement, which begins May 25th and concludes on the evening of the 27th.

The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of Virginia Valley Central Conference was in session May 14-16, at Linville Christian Church, Rev. R. P. Crumpler, pastor. Brother Roy A. Larrick, of Winchester, is the wide-awake, agressive president of this body, and always has a most interesting annual session. Besides local talent, the session has this year Bro. Hermon Eldredge, field ecretary, Dayton, Ohio, and Miss Pattie Coghill, field secretary, Elon College, N. C., on the program for addresses. An account of the Convention session will doubteless be sent THE SUN.

A "central control" of coast-guard work has been provided for with a competent officer at its head. The coast guard hereafter will seek to protect all coastlines on deep water, and the prohibition and customs department will be responsible for smuggling through small waterways and on land. There will be a tightening of the lines. Congress recently appropriated $14,000,000 for increased coast-guard service, and contracts already have been let by the treasury for reconditioning new speed-boats to chase rum-runners. The present strength of the coast guard will be practically doubled.

The first week in June there will be a conference of the dry forces of Oregon, Washington and Idaho. The conference will be held in Portland. The Church organizations generally, W. C. T. U. and adult Bible classes will send delegates. The object of the conference is to stimulate prohibition enforcement and devise more effective means of coping with violations of the dry law. The conference has been called, according to an announcement issued by the committee, in "recognition of the tremendous propaganda being carried on to nullify prohibition and discredit the law." The Governor of Oregon and the Mayor of Portland have pledged co-operation in the work.

The board of control of Franklinton Christian College, met at Franklinton May 6th, in annual session, and among the other items of business it was decided to have plans drawn for a new dormitory for girls and for the building to begin at the earliest possible date. The present proposition is to erect a fire-proof building at a cost not to exceed $40,000. Plans are to be adopted and an architect employed at the annual commencement, May 21st. President J. A. Henderson is proving himself quite a capable college president and manager of both school and financial matters in a very worthy and meritorious manner. Franklinton has done fine things this year, considering the equipment. Many students had to be turned away because of lack of dormitory room, and the board of control hopes that by the opening of another session that additional room may somehow be provided.

A deep crack has appeared in the neck of the sphinx, according to the Egyptian Antiquities Service. It will be repaired.

A NEW MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

While visiting at Roanoke, Ala., I enjoyed the opportunity of attending the new Christian Church there. I am always interested in our missionary work, and would like to get a society organized in every Christian Church in Alabama Conference. There is great prospect of a strong Church and society at Roanoke, and the people are very much interested in the work. When I left Bethlehem College for Roanoke, I did not know I was to have the opportunity of organizing a Woman's Missionary Society in their new Church, but following the morning services Sunday, April 20th, I talked with some of the good ladies and also the pastor, Rev. G. D. Hunt. They were very much interested, and at evening service, talks were given by the pastor and the writer. Announcement was made for the ladies to meet the following afternoon at the home of Mrs. V. E. Kitchens. We met at 3 P. M., and after a well-spent devotional period, the society was organized. The following officers were elected: president, Mrs. J. H. Christler; vice-president, Mrs. V. E. Kitchen; secretary, Mrs. J. H. Swint; program committee—Mrs. C. H. Russell, Mrs. E. M. Hood; committee on sick—Mrs. J. M. Keebee, Mrs. E. D. Nuce.

All the officers consider themselves members of the membership committee; also the soul-winning committee. Following this election of officers, dues and a special offering were paid. The society decided to meet every two weeks at the homes of the members, as the Church building is not yet finished.

The meeting adjourned, with closing prayer led by the writer. Delicious refreshments were served and the meeting was enjoyed by all present. I feel proud of this society and that it is going to be a strong and successful society, for the ladies are all interested in the work. I would be glad for any missionary worker to correspond with our societies. I feel it would be a great help. May I urge each pastor who has not a Woman's Missionary Society in his Church to get busy. Talk up the work! Make some arrangement for a society to be organized. I would be glad to help in every way possible. We need more missionary workers. We have a wonderful missionary book—the Bible. Let us read it more and practice it better. Put all our trust in God, and by His help we can accomplish great things. Friends, pray for me, that I may be strengthened to do more for Him. SIDDIE LATHAM,

President Woman's Board Ala. Con.
Wadley, Ala.

SHORE LEAVE DE LUXE.

When 14,000 men of the Pacific fleet spent ten days last month in New York, the city showed its best in the way of hospitality. Leading citizens and organizations, working in co-operation with the army and navy branch of the Y. M. C. A., made the leave one that will long be remembered.

The service began on the pier where a squad was stationed to give the men leaving the ships reliable information about lodgings, points of interest, and places of amusement. It continued with specially arranged sight-seeing parties, receptions and dances by various Churches, guilds, settlement houses, clubs, and Y. M. C. A. branches, entertainment in private homes which were opened to the men, and supper and theater parties. Through the co-operation of theater managers, over 9,000 men saw some of the hits of the New York season. Vaudeville entertainments and Church services were held on shipboard.

In connection with the religious part of the program, the New York City Federation of Churches played a leading part. The American Bible Society furnished each member of the fleet with a Bible.

The secretary of the New York City Army and Navy "Y" said at the end of the visit:

"It is conservative to state that New York City never entertained a group of 14,000 men who conducted themselves in such an admirable fashion as these boys of the United States navy . . . The American people should be proud to have such men as their guardians."

The Y. M. C. A. sent its first secretary to South America in 1891. For ten years he was there alone. Now there are twenty-four secretaries maintained by the international committee of the association, and sixty-five Americans who are either secretaries or in training.

WHAT IGNORANCE DID.

In Calcutta, India, eight hundred telephones went out of commission with one stroke of the axe, as an ignorant coolie, making an excavation, mistook a telephone cable for the root of a tree.

The telephone lines were immediately repaired, of course. It took the services of many skilled men for many hours, patiently to sort out the wires and match each with each. Meanwhile, eight hundred telephone users went without the easy intercommunication which the telephone affords. What tragedies were thus caused will never be known. All that is reported is that in one instance, ignorance undid the work of many hours, and that many more were required to repair the damage.

In the long run, ignorance never wins over knowledge. But it is the greatest weapon of ignorance that it may strike swiftly and do much damage in a little time. One ignorant law-maker may stop the wheels of progress for months; one ignorant school teacher may retard for years the development of the minds of fifty pupils; one ignorant action may undo the careful plans of philanthrophy.

Had the coolie known what a telephone cable was, he would not have cut through it. Did the ignorant teacher know better he would not hurt the little minds in his charge. Had the ignorant law-maker been educated or had another and wiser choice been made at election, necessary legislation would not have been blocked.

Education, knowledge, information, power to understand, and once again, education, are our needs! The children of today are the citizens of tomorrow. The knowledge they gain today will be used in governing themselves tomorrow. Let us, all of us who claim some small measure of wisdom as our part of life's winnings, see to it that the most precious gift of man to man, of father to child, of government to citizen, be given in full measure, pressed down and running over; let us give our children the best of schools, the best of teachers, the best of knowledge, that when they, too, become men and women, they be among those who repair the telephones, not those who cut communication.

A DEMOCRATIC POSSIBILITY.

Who will the Democratic presidential candidate be? Distinctly less certain is the answer given to that question than to the question of the Republican candidate. It is generally conceded that Mr. McAdoo may go into the convention with forty-five or fifty per cent of the delegates instructed for him. But it is likewise conceded that Mr. McAdoo has failed to capture the imagination either of his party or the country. Indeed, serious defections have occurred in quarters where McAdoo support might have been reasonably expected. The Democratic field is still an open one.

The casual mention of Josephus Daniels as a possible candidate has sparked more public and partisan interest than the political press reflects. Mr. Daniels, it is true, promptly announced that he was not a candidate, and his State, North Carolina, did not name any delegates for him. Nevertheless, his name came with the effect of light and hope to thousands of Democrats. He represents qualities which are too much lacking in present politics. He stands for some of the best achievements in public life. In fact, the naming of Mr. Daniels as a possibility threw an element into the situation which may yet have important results.

Every presidential convention goes through three stages. First there is the complimentary introduction of various candidates, "favorite sons," "available timber," "receptive party wheel-horses" and all the rest. That over, the convention settles down into its second stage, the fight between candidates who really count. The impolitic thing about strong convention candidacies is that they evoke as strong opposition. When a convention reaches a deadlock through the determination and strength of two candidates, it begins to slip into its third stage, the search for compromise candidates, for "the dark horse" whose modesty has created no enmity and whose past record renders him acceptable to all factions.

It may be that in the third stage of the Democratic National Convention the name of a man like Josephus Daniels will come with unifying power and carry off the nomination from the stronger contenders. Speaking generally, the Democrats could conceivably do much worse than name Mr. Daniels.—Dearborn Independent.

TEXTILES.

The situation in the textile field has not changed materially since the middle of March. The tendency among the mills to curtail production has continued and has broadened to include other plants, but on the other hand there have been some brief periods of greater freedom in placing orders. Cotton prices have recently advanced, and this rise apparently stimulated some buying, but most of the mills have large stocks of goods already made up and are in position to fill a considerable volume of orders without increasing operating time. The trade appears unstable, buying movements quickly dwindling away at each unfavorable sign shown by the market. The demand for textiles continues to be affected by uncertainty concerning the prospects for this year's cotton crop.

Cotton consumption in the fifth district during March amounted to 191,293 bales, or 39.5 per cent of national consumption, North Carolina mills having used 103,704 bales, South Carolina mills 80,479 bales, and Virginia mills 7,110 bales. The fifth district mills used 230,201 bales of cotton in March, 1923, or 36.9 per cent of national consumption for that month.

Congressman Langley Sentenced.

Representative John W. Langley, Kentucky, has been sentenced to two years in the Atlanta Penitentiary for his alleged conspiracy to remove illegally 1,400 cases of whiskey from a government distillery at Lawrenceburg, Ky. Three other men were sentenced at the same time for assisting in the removal of the whiskey. Representative Langley denies that he had anything to do with the transaction, and has filed notice of an appeal. All the men were released on bond while the appeal is being considered.

OUR LOSS.

Others have written, and will write, of the life and going of Rev. J. P. Barrett, D. D., and Rev. George D. Eastes, but when all has been said and done, the sense of our loss in the Southern Convention appals and awes one. Dr. Barrett had spent a most busy and a most consecrated life for three-score years and ten, and eternity alone can mark or measure the worth, the weight and the merit of such a life. The group that met in tears and sorrow at the Suffolk Christian Church to pay tribute on the day of his burial, contained a larger number of those who, in public speech and private conversation, acknowledged their indebtedness to him, and the influence of his consecrated life upon their lives. One sat amazed in that congregation, as one after another testified that this man had changed their lives for the better and had helped to lead them in the safer paths of their pilgrimage. If, in this group, there were a score who had been thus touched for the better way, how many scores must there be in that limitless number who knew Dr. Barrett, and knowing him, were influenced for nobler activities because of him. One did not have to agree with all that he said and did to be led by him to better things, because there was that deeper something in his life which, like the needle to the pole, was unerring in its accuracy for truth and righteousness as he understood them.

A defender of the faith and champion of our Christian polity and principles; a contender for the truth as he saw the truth at all times and under all conditions—he made those about him better and helped to lift his world to a higher plane of Christian activity and Christian living.

This writer has never felt quite so unworthy of undertaking a task as he does now in trying to do that which this man of God—this saint amongst us—was doing so ably and so well. The task seems consecrated, and the labor seems holier because Dr. Barrett was carrying them and because he made them sacred with a singular devotion and a high sense of spirituality. Thus it is glorious for a Church to have had such an asset, and we rejoice because he was spared us so long to serve so faithfully; but standing so close now to us, the sense of loss overwhelms. Our Church is infinitely richer because of his life, and seemingly poorer for his going now.

Our good friend, George D. Eastes, was cut down in earlier years, but he had won a place in our hearts, filled now with a sense of overpowering loss at his going. There was no sweeter-spirited man in all our brotherhood, and his friends and admirers were limited only by the circle of his acquaintance. He had a passion for souls that was consuming. He preached a gospel of peace, of pardon, and of power, in a way and manner that brought life and light and love. The converts that were won to Christ through his evangelistic efforts, and those that were brought up in Christ by his pastoral labors remain by the hundreds to remember him in love and cherish his name in fondness and devotion. His was a princely soul. He dwelt in the realm of the blessed and the redeemed. The very zeal of the Lord's house and the flame of passion for unsaved souls consumed the man, and he burned his life out in the service of his Lord, with intensity and an eagerness displayed by few. His going is certainly a loss, and while we realize that he reigns with his Lord and has won the victory through faith, it is left to us to complete his life by carrying forward the work which consumed his strength so early.

I think now of these two men just gone from us as being of that number so graphically told about in Hebrews 11:38-40: "Of whom the world was not worthy: these all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise; God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect," I am wondering if CHRISTIAN SUN readers realize that in order to make these two great and good lives perfect, we who remain must carry on, as God shall give us strength, to a successful conclusion the things they were doing and had done so well. They are now depending upon us for their perfection. Shall we, as a Church, fail them? They obtained a good report through faith; nay, verily, a most noble report, but received not the promise. God had provided a better thing for us than that they should receive the promise, and so their perfection, their completion, their fulfillment depend upon us who abide. In the sense of such a loss, it would be the greatest ingratitude, and the greatest sacrilege, not to do our best, in God's name, to make the lives of these dear ones perfect. J. O. A.

THE NORFOLK CONVENTION.

The session of the Convention at Norfolk will be long remembered, and its weight long felt in our midst. There were events and incidents which stand out like high peaks and compel attention, even as we recede from the holy place of our activities. The great Church in which the Convention gathered was an inspiration that kept the Convention in a happy frame of mind and activity from start to finish. It was more than good and great to be at the Convention this time—I say it with reverence, it was holy and heavenly.

If one cannot worship God, feel divinely inspired, and have the sense of worship, reverence and devotion in Christian Temple, then one is certainly helpless in this regard. It is indeed a temple of praise and prayer, of worship and adoration, not because of its material equipment, though this helps, but because of its general appointment and the high sense of spiritual things, that Dr. Smith and his co-workers have displayed in all their activities and attitudes while they were building. A house of worship is sacred solely as the hearts and hands that build and sustain it are themselves sacred and holy and devoted to the Lord's cause. This was proven in the history of Israel.

Once upon a time, a king of Israel went into the temple to perform a sacred rite; a rite, however, which was not his to perform at that time. In an instant, God's wrath was manifested, and the king was a leper. At a later date, a Roman monarch and ruler went into that same, and formerly holy, place and, with unholy hands, drew away the curtains that separated the holy from the most holy, and in every way possible sought to desecrate the place, which he did successfully; and yet he came out untouched by leprosy or by any other mark of God's anger. In the former instance, the temple was holy because God's people were keeping it so by their devotions, through praise, and through worship. In the latter instance, the people had fallen away through apostasy, and were not united in the service of the Lord nor in worship of the true God. Our temples of God are holy, sacred and divine only as we unite our hearts and hands there in seeking the true God and in serving Him. Somehow, one feels in the atmosphere of Christian Temple, Norfolk, that a devoted people are keeping the sacred altars blazing with the flame of their passion for divine service in the worship of the true God. It was glorious indeed to have a Convention under such condition and in such an atmosphere.

President Smith delivered a great address in opening the Convention, and Rev. John G. Truitt inspired the audience on the opening night with a message of holy and sacred uplift.

The report from the various departments seem to be up to the average and promise of better things. The orphanage, THE CHRISTIAN SUN, missions and the colleges all received due and adequate consideration. Religious education and the work in Sunday School and Christian Endeavor received careful and prayerful consideration, and one felt that there was a better day for our young people.

There were addresses on missions that we wish could be heard in every Church of the Convention. The discussions on education, Elon College and Bethlehem, in particular, were practical, thorough and enlightening. The addresses at the evening sessions were certainly inspirational and forward looking. At this hour, one is overwhelmed at the very bigness of the problems discussed and the tasks marked out and to be undertaken. The Christian Church is certainly richer because of the Norfolk Convention, and has plans which, if worked out in the days that are to be, the path of progress will be marked, and events of greatness and growth will take place.

ROGER BABSON TALKS.

He often does, and when he talks he says something. The times are pessimistic. The world is about to capture the Church we are told. Factories are shutting down all over the land. Unrest and dissatisfaction and depression are rampant. Babson admits this, and then says something. Read his words and care to this effect:

"We are likely to blame conditions," he charges, "upon every one else but ourselves. Employers blame the unions; wage-earners blame the bankers; shippers blame the railroads; and the railroads blame the Congress—so it goes! It is probably true that the fundamental difficulty today is that almost no one wants to work. Too many want to live in apartments, get along without children, live out of tin cans, and spend their time driving a 'flivver' or attending the movies. Time spent otherwise they consider wasted." And then he asks this pertinent question: "But what's the use of kicking about these conditions? The important thing is to do something constructive."

With his thesis that blaming the conditions that confront us on some one else is fruitless, there is perhaps general agreement, or should be; yet we all are members of the critics' guild. So easy is it to complain! Much of our Sunday School teaching is a tirade against the times. So is much of our preaching. Religious books and the Church periodicals are notorious these latter days for their pessimistic atmosphere. We do but multiply the very thing we would remedy by such proceedure. Criticism multiplies prodigiously by indulgence. We forget this to our dismay, and so oftentimes injure the sacred causes we yearn to help.

Is something wrong with the local Church? "There certainly is," the devout soul replies. Very well, then, beloved, you are God's envoy to right it. Your very knowledge of the wrong places on you the burden to correct it. Now set to work to produce a reformation.

But that is the trouble—we don't want to work! We want to talk! "It is probably true," to requote Mr. Babson, "that the fundamental difficulty today is that almost no one wants to work."

This is as true of the Church as of the business world. Talk is so easy. Criticism gives us a sense of our importance. It may also be taken by some as evidence of a vital spirituality when we confess dissatisfaction with the situation in the Church. So we advertise our spiritual consecration, and advertising pays. What we need to do is to work. A little work and less talk would soon reveal to us that things are not so bad as we had thought, and not so easily adjusted as we had imagined.

I heard a good man the other day commenting on the decline of the spiritual life of his Church as evidenced by the falling off of attendance on divine worship. "What have you done to remedy matters?" I ventured to inquire. He had never considered it his duty to think even of a remedy. Suppose he had used that seven-passenger palace of an automobile in which he and his wife rode alone to Church to carry five others, having persuaded them to go. Suppose he had made it his business to canvass the community in the interest of Church attendance. But that would be work, hard work! and talk, why that is easy.

This brother does not read THE CHRISTIAN SUN. He may not read the paper of the Church to which he belongs. So he is a good illustration for our purposes, and no one can charge the writer with personality. Our brother is, however, symptomatic. We have his kind in every Church. The writer himself has at times been guilty of such indiscretions, if our carping criticisms can be passed up with so elegant a word. What we need to do is to interpret the dissatisfaction we feel with the present situation of the Church as God's voice challenging us to work to right matters. He is calling us to be His prophets. Speak for Him, and speak with a constructive program.

Be a worker; not a scold—that is it!

THE LITTLE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The thought that prompts discouragement within the Christian Church, or adverse criticism outside of the Christian Church, is void of true logic and a right interpretation of a religious organization. Going backward to Christ while upon earth, and the Church in the first century of the Christian era numbers counted but little as a factor in the Church. The gospel that was proclaimed, the persecutions provoked by the new faith, the martyrs to their convictions, the changes wrought in the heart and life of believers, were the seed-corn of a thought-provoking, heart-changing gospel that has finally changed the life of the world.

Denominations that boast of competitive numbers, pride themselves in numerical strength, lay claim to superiority on this account, lose sight of facts and brotherly love. If numbers determine what is right in religion, the Roman and Greek Catholic Churches are right, and the Protestant Church is wrong. If numbers measure piety, Mohammedanism is better than Protestantism. If numbers stand for the best, Confucianism is superior to Christianity. It is neither sound nor safe to estimate values by numbers; otherwise, illiteracy would outweigh literacy. Protestantism weakens its potential value in the salvation of the world by stressing its separate numbers, instead of combining its spiritual and financial strength in the great missionary task. "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth"; neither does the life of the Church consist in the numbers it counteth. Men should be measured by what they are, and not what they count.

There are so many phases of theological thought that no denomination contains all the truth. Denominations emphasize separate important truths, are entitled to the respect of others, and all should love one another and co-operate in Christian work. It is as binding upon Christian Churches to love one another as it is for individual Christians to love one another. Local competition by over-Churching small communities neither represents Jesus Christ nor cultivates brotherly love. The Christian Church has no attractive fighting slogan, but she represents principles that have insinuated themselves into other bodies, become operative unconsciously, and changed customs of age-long standing into vital progress in the modern Church. Among these may be named: the religious newspaper, founded in 1808; co-education, in 1849; recognition of woman in official Church service; and Church federation. These facts are capable of proof without boasting; are working on a scale much larger than the statistical Christian Church; and are potential factors that will continue to work as leven in the kingdom for the uplift of mankind. Diamonds are smaller than granite blocks; but both have their value, their place, and their use in the thought and progress of the world. W. W. S.

ARCHIBALD NEAL JOHNSON.

Archibald Neal Johnson was born in Wake County, near Fuquay Springs, N. C., May 28, 1863, and departed this life May 4, 1924. He was the oldest son of the late lamented William W. and Rhoda Ann Johnson. On January 2, 1890, he was married to Miss Cornelia E. Blanchard. To this union were born five children, all of whom survive—Bessie, Burnice, Josephine, Ruby and Kenneth. These and his wife were with him at the time of his death. "Archie," as he was universally called, was a great sufferer, having been confined to his home for several years and to his bed the last two or three years, with rheumatism. But he learned to suffer patiently, faithfully and not complain. His faith in God during the last three or four years of his life seemed to grow stronger and brighter. He believed in prayer, and sought refuge from pain and affliction in frequent prayer to God. He grew more tender in his feelings with the passing years, and his hope of a blessed immortality grew strong and remained steadfast through all the years of disease and suffering. His was a great heart, that loved to the limit his fellow-men; and his liberal hand contributed much and frequently to those in need and suffering about him. He was generous in spirit and loved to contribute to the relief of suffering, and to help the poor and needy. In his life he combined service and suffering; and in his last years particularly, his was the ministry of suffering.

Our Saviour asked to be remembered by His suffering. Paul would glory in nothing, save in the cross, the suffering, of the Lord Jesus. "If we suffer, we shall also reign with Him," wrote Paul. He who shows us how to suffer makes a real contribution to the world's worth and welfare. Faith alone can conquer pain, and this faith Bro. Johnson expressed to the limit.

Through all the years of his suffering and helplessness, his devoted wife was wonderfully blessed with health, vigor and strength, and she, in loving loyalty and devotion, with the aid of the equally devoted children of the home, ministered with infinite patience and tenderness to his needs and calls and comforts. There was in this home a love that would not let father go, and faithful hands did all that love could do to minister to every need.

The burial was at Wake Chapel. The floral offerings were abundant and beautiful. An immense throng of neighbors and loving friends and relatives gathered to show their respect and tribute of love. The funeral was conducted by the writer. J. O. ATKINSON.

THINK THIS OVER.

The Christian Herald, under the heading "Think This Over," offers as a suggestion:

"Prohibitionists and anti-prohibitionists agree that in general the prohibitory laws are not being adequately enforced. Explanations for this condition differ. There is agreement, however, on the fact that booze is still in politics, and that so long as it is a political football, enforcement in many places will be difficult.

"The enforcement machinery now centers in a subdivision of a subdivision of the Treasury Department. That is not where it belongs. Its importance to the future of the country warrants its having more dignity and more authority than it can possibly possess under the present system, no matter how whole-hearted the desire on the part of the Treasury Department to compel obedience to law.

"There are in our scheme of government commissions that have been removed from politics and made into powerful administrative forces that are beyond criticism. Notably the Interstate Commerce Commission.

"Can the Congress be induced to erect a commission of five or seven members in whose hands would be placed the task of enforcing the eighteenth amendment, just as the Interstate Commerce Commission oversees and enforces the laws relating to interstate commerce? These members should be men of outstanding probity and ability —men who could be considered fit occupants of the supreme bench, or of one of the great non-partisan commissions that are on government rolls —and the salaries paid to them should be on a par with those paid to Interstate Commerce Commissioners.

"Men of the high type to qualify for such a body would be men who could be depended on for an impartial, non-political enforcement of the law.

"How does this idea appeal to you?"

OPEN-AIR RECREATION.

The recommendation of President Coolidge that greater attention be given to open-air recreation, and the calling of a conference to discuss the subject, are receiving approval by social workers and public-spirited citizens. That the people should be encouraged to more outdoor activities is obvious, and efforts to this end are most commendable.

There is a growing feeling, however, that the more important subject of education is not receiving the attention it deserves. President Coolidge in his first message to Congress stressed the need of popular education and recommended the creation of a department of education, but that was the end of it so far as congressional action is concerned. There is no subject of greater importance to the nation or fraught with more significance than the promotion of popular education.

With twenty million illiterates and near-illiterates in this country, with public school facilities far below the demand, with millions of children denied the right of education, in both cities and rural districts, with vast alien populations unable to speak or read English, the problem of popular education takes the position of first rank.

There is an increasing sentiment throughout the country that the claims of education cannot longer be ignored. The condition of illiteracy is becoming acute, and the people will not much longer tolerate the side-tracking of the problem out of consideration for personal ambitions and partisan expediency.

Promote open-air recreation, but at the same time definite legislative action should be taken to meet the more important question.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

In the Literary Digest of May 10th, the following, under "The Spice of Life," appeared as a piece of fun:

One What?

Villager: "You are talking to one right now." —Dry Goods Economist.

Like many funny jokes, the above contains universal and serious truth, and suggests this letter. The stranger was really talking to a drug store when he was talking to the man, for man is the whole business of the world. One does not deal with the drug store, but with the druggist. A city is not built out of wood, brick, stone, steel, slate, glass and paint; but out of men. Take the men out of the city, and nothing remains of value to the nation. Even government is a fiction apart from citizenship. The Church is a film without Christians. Home is a haunt for bats and owls without the family. The human element is the real element in all earthly establishments. God rules in heaven; man upon earth. The co-operation of the divine and the human make up the sum of interests in heaven and earth. The universe would be a fossil without God, and the earth would have no value without man.

When one talks to a druggist, he talks to a drug store; when he talks to the President, he talks to the government; when he talks to a Christian, he talks to the Church. Personality is the big thing in all things. Personal character is, therefore, the most important thing in the world. The difference between heaven and hell is character. The devil has sense enough to manage heaven if he were not so bad; but he is not fit to dwell upon the earth: "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." The good and the bad cannot dwell together forever; "let both grow together till the harvest." Final separation is as certain as the separation of God and Satan. The most important service of man is to make men better; and this cannot be done by man alone. Elon College has a great motto: "Christian character, first and always"; but Christian character can be constructed only in a Christian. The first thing is regeneration, making man a "new creature." Good character could not be built on the wisest bad man. I heard James Barron Hope, editor of the Norfolk Virginian, say, when I was a young fellow, that "the devil is all head and no heart." That seems to suggest that head knowledge may exist without character. It is, therefore, important that school teachers shall be Christians. Schools may run to seed on head-work, and leave the heart a cesspool of iniquities. Conversions have done more to save the nation than education. "Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life." The Church paper has more value in the home than the magazine. This says nothing against education, books, magazines, good papers; but it does mean to emphasize Christian education, which is the education of Christians.

ELON LETTER.

This is the final issue of The Sun before the annual Elon commencement. I, therefore, take opportunity to invite every reader of the "Elon Letter" to attend the thirty-fourth annual commencement exercises, May 25th to 27th.

This commencement begins our initial use of the Whitley Memorial Auditorium. The first service in this beautiful building will be the baccalaureate sermon by Dr. Alva M. Kerr, editor of the Herald of Gospel Liberty. It is proper that the radiating center of Christian worship on our campus should have a sermon as its initiatory service.

Sunday night, the writer, as president, will give the baccalaureate address. Monday at 10:30, the class-day exercises occur. At 3:30 P. M., the society representatives will speak. For the first time, the new girls' society, the Psykaleon, will have speakers to represent them.

At 8:30 P. M., Dr. H. Shelton Smith, of Chicago, will give the alumni oration. He is eminently qualified to do it. His experience as a pastor and as a chaplain in the A. E. F., his fine record as a graduate student in Yale, his outstanding present position as educational superintendent of the International Council of Religious Education, give him a grasp and insight that will make his message a gripping one.

Tuesday morning, the graduation exercises occur, when six seniors will speak for the forty who will graduate. Dr. Walter S. Athearn, dean of the school of religious education and social service of Boston University and the world's authority in his line, will give the literary address. Dr. Athearn has rendered Elon invaluable service in planning the Mooney Building for Christian education. On that account, too, he will be welcomed to Elon.

That evening, at 8:30, the College Choral Society, under the direction of Prof. Walter F. Greenwood, will conclude the commencement with a great cantata.

At 3:30 Tuesday afternoon, however, the Alamance Building, the gift to the college of the citizens of Alamance County, will be formally presented. A program specially adapted to the occasion is now being prepared. The building will be officially inspected by a committee of the board of trustees and of Alamance County citizens before its presentation. You will not wish to miss this unique exercise, even though it is not on the formal commencement program.

The Whitley Memorial Building will not be completed by commencement, but the assembly chamber, the core and heart of the magnificent structure, will be completed, except for the installation of the great Skinner organ, which is here now, but cannot be voiced until every other part of the building is complete. But the Mason & Hamlin concert grand piano, the gift of Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Caveness, is here, and will be used first in a public exercise for the opening service Sunday morning of the commencement. Later, when the building is finally completed, it will be formally dedicated and presented to the college, with appropriate services, in memory of Deacon L. H. Whitley, whose serviceable life to Church and kingdom Mr. J. M. Darden desires the building ever to signalize.

We end where we began, by urging our friends to come to their college at this commencement of real beginnings in more ways than one. May 25-27—these are the days. Be sure to come.

THE MEANING OF THE INSPIRATION OF THE SCRIPTURES.

The word inspiration comes from the Latin term inspiratio, meaning a breathing into. It is sometimes used to denote the excitement and action of a fervent imagination in the poet or orator; the elevating influence derived from the association with great minds and scenery—but when applied to the Scriptures, it is generally conceded to mean the divine agency acting upon the teachers while giving instruction, whether oral or written. Of the Old Testament, it is said, "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God"; "Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit." The writers of the New Testament manifestly considered themselves to be under the guidance of the same spirit, for they say: "Which things we speak not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but in words which the Holy Spirit teacheth." Respecting the particular manner of divine inspiration, there are three opinions extant. First, that the spirit of God inspired the thoughts, but that the writers were left to express them in their own words and phrases, but were so guided that they were kept from theological errors. Second, that every word was suggested to them by the spirit of God, and that the writers did nothing but write. Third, that it is not of the letter, but of the spirit. Whether verbal, plenary, or progressive, it is evident that God spoke; that He spoke through human agents, in divers portions, and in divers manners—but God spoke! No one's conscience troubles him for not obeying the maxims and precepts of living or dead moralists, for they are our equals; but let God speak, and conscience accepts it as authority. When we call the Bible the Word of God, do we mean that these are God's thoughts that He so speaks with Himself—that this is His mode of conception? Not the least in the world, for with God, the all-knowing and perfect One, it is all one thought. He thinks without words, without a series of reflections; from the center outward, and not simply as we think from the outside. We learn everything through the senses, and therefore know them from without, from the surface, from one side.

We learn first to think by means of speech, and from youth up we repeat the words of others, and so think according to them. All general truths, all abstract propositions, all deliberations of the understanding can be entertained only through words. We speak with ourselves while we think; we reason with ourselves while we speak. But with God there is nothing of all this, so far as we know; he knows nothing of that weakness which demands words for thoughts; he thinks without the husks of words, without meagre confusing symbols, without any series of conceptions or classes of ideas—with Him all is one single, perfect thought. God must, therefore, explain Himself to men altogether in a human way, according to our own mode and speech, suitably to our own weakness and the narrowness of our ideas. He cannot speak like a god; He must speak altogether like a man, by human agency, through our defective language. There is nothing to be gained by denying the presence of a human element in the Bible, and that these agents left the marks of their human limitations in the records; and these are portrayed in the speech and forms of thought belonging to the people, the region of country, and the period of time to which God's voice was made known. Our Bible carries upon every page of it all the traces of Oriental habits of thought. Its style, especially in the Old Testament, and for the most part in Job, the Psalms, and the Prophets, is full of lofty, bold and fervid imagery. Even the history of creation is narrated in this elevated tone and garb; also the journeyings of the Jews through Arabia are recorded in this glowing and figurative language. Their history also and the record of their kings in Canaan, together with the writings of Solomon, all bear this character of Eastern floridness and picturesque drapery. A little reflection will convince us that every one who wishes to be understood must adopt the style of his hearers, of his country, of his century; otherwise, he becomes unintellegible.

The Bible is filled with the spirit of God from Genesis to Revelation; its true inspiration is not of the letter, but of the spirit. Its unique power is implied in these words: "Every Scripture inspired of God" and "no prophecy ever came by the will of man, but men spake as the Spirit breathed upon them." In former generations, the divine element in the Bible was based on miracles and the fulfillment of prophecies, while the present generation still uses this evidence, greater stress is placed upon: the essential unity of the word; the response of the human heart and conscience to its message, and the effects it produces in the lives of those who yield themselves to its teachings; thu uniqueness of the Bible as seen when it is compared with other sacred literatures of antiquity. The one supreme thought running through all the books of the Bible is the gradual unfolding of God's plan of redemption for the human race. This can only be accounted for on the ground that it was the one Spirit which dwelt in and somehow influenced the thirty-six men who made contributions to the sixty-six books, scattered over a period of more than a thousand years, most of them independent of each other, and living hundreds of miles apart.

No other book has been able to find men as the Bible has; generation after generation, among peoples in all stations of society, in all climes. It is adapted to the deepest needs of the human soul and remains constant with these needs. Every age may bring a difference in superficial dress, but the same human heart beats beneath every robe. Differences of opinion, culture, clime, age, and the like, it brushes aside as unimportant and goes straight to the universal needs of man; it needs no defense, but earnest and devout study to supply these needs. Every commanding race, every vast civilization, has been directed and controlled by their sacred books, and it was thought by many if these gems of thought could be collected and be accessible to, we would find them as good as our Bible.

Well, we have them now in the translations of "The Sacred Books of the East," but nothing in our day has served better to place the reverence of the Bible upon a rock. Its gems are few, set in a bulk of dry literature, and are obscure beyond telling. These books were of particular races; but the Bible has a constituency composed of all the races of the world. The others belong to decaying, arrested or dead civilizations; the Bible to the advancing, all-conquering races who stand for the highest civilization attained on this planet. The others are narrow and shallow, while the Bible is a fountain whose waters feed intellect, heart and life, promoting the highest worship, as well as the highest humanity. The old Book of books stands out as the noblest of all religious writings, voicing alike the spirit of man and the spirit of God, with an ever-weightier certainty and clearness, and speaking in tones accentuated by heartbeats of the world's best life, and with a solemn authoritiveness which we can never feel in any other writings. Suppose that we do find in these ancient books, written in different periods of the world's history, for peoples remote from us in culture and surroundings—things local and temporary, belonging to an age that has long passed, or things which indicate a lower plane of life, and lower conceptions of God and man than those to which we were born, or have attained, and that they are not all alike inspired and valuable to us. Does that destroy the true purpose of the Scriptures? Are we not free to go into the rich fields of Bible thought, as the honey bee goes into the flower garden selecting such flowers as yield the greatest amount of material to be wrought into the winter's store, not deeming it wrong to skip juiceless texts any more than the bee to skip juiceless flowers. Has God put into the bee an instinct to select what is best for food, and not give to man a method of telling what truths will best nourish his higher life? For this we have history, poetry, prophecy, proverb, gospel, epistle, and apocalypse. For this we have the lives of patriarchs and prophets, seers and holy men, and men unholy, too, to teach us, by their wisdom or folly, how simple-hearted right-doing always exalts the individual or the nation, while sin is the sure and everlasting reproach of both; for this we have the words and life of him who spake with that authority which the human heart always recognizes, and lived that matchless life of unselfish devotion to the highest, which shows us how "the Son of man" and the "Son of God" became one, so revealing our own high calling, as children of the same divine Father, called to the same divine sonship. The true purpose of the inspired Scriptures is clearly set forth in John 20:31: "These are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that believing ye might have life in his name."

God is the true "hero" of the Bible, but its theme is its self-revelation, culminating forevermore in the man Jesus. There is but one man, and one only, whose biography is a "gospel," who owes nothing to circumstances, and who originates the power which he yields; one who is a new beginning and who has changed the whole course of human history. The purpose of the Scripture is to point to Christ, to bring men into harmony with God, to make him morally and spiritually perfect, and to "furnish him unto every good work." S. L. Beougher.

FIRST CHURCH, PORTSMOUTH, VA.

The 6th of April was the beginning of a series of evangelistic services with the First Christian Church, Portsmouth, Va., and continued for two weeks, closing on Sunday, April 20th.

Engineer Allenza R. Brothers, of Raleigh, N. C., was with us, and did the preaching, and he did it in a way that pleased his hearers. Mr. Brothers was reared in Portsmouth, and it was during the early years of his young manhood that he sowed many wild oats here in this city. For a number of years, he has been an engineer on the Seaboard Railway. Some five or six years ago he was gloriously saved from a life of sin, and since that time he has been a real witness to the saving power of Jesus Christ, and has spent a part of his time doing evangelistic work, and God is blessing his labors. He is a great reader of the Bible, having read it through some four or five hundred times since his conversion, and in his messages he preaches the Word and magnifies the Lord Jesus Christ, and thus stirs the hearts of his hearers. If any Church would like to have a man to hold a meeting for them who would give the word of God a chance, call on Engineer Brothers, and you will be pleased.

As a result of our meeting which closed on Easter Sunday, there were quite a number of confessions and additions to the Christian Church and to other Churches of the city, and a large number of reconsecrations. The meeting was a success, and we give the praise unto Him to whom it is due.

For the past two or three years we have had some very discouraging experiences, and we have had to pray much and pound hard, and as a result of this, we can see signs of a new interest, and the outlook is more inviting. Our work is not in vain when we labor in the name of the Lord.

Bro. H. W. Lee is our new Sunday School superintendent, and we feel that we have a safe leader for this part of our work, and the school is going forward under his administration.

Last Sunday we observed Mothers' Day, and the attendance was good at all services, and we feel that the day was really worth while. The Junior Order worshiped with us at the evening hour. W. L. Wells.

IMPRESSIONS OF THE CONVENTION.

Dear Christian Sun:

I wish to express my feelings in regard to the recent session of the Southern Convention, held at Norfolk, Va. I enjoyed the trip from start to finish, and the sessions of the Convention from first to last. I love the brotherhood of our Southern Church better and esteem our great Church more highly than ever before. We understand each other better, I feel, and we know our problems as we have not known them.

It seemed that the brethren evidenced a great spirit of love and fellowship all through the proceedings of the Convention, and surely God will bless such association.

Our Church in the Far South mourns with all other sections of our great brotherhood in the passing of our esteemed editor, Dr. J. P. Barrett, who was perhaps the best-known and one of the most highly respected men in all our Christian connection. We hereby pledge our support and cooperation to his successor in office. May the blessings of heaven be copiously given to him who, by the choice of the Convention, assumes this responsibility.

I must say that it was a peculiar joy to my heart to meet once more the older brethren of the Convention, such as Dr. W. S. Long, Dr. W. W. Staley, Revs. P. T. Klapp, G. R. Underwood, and J. D. Wicker. There is no honor too great to bestow upon our aged ministers. God bless these men, and may He inspire the young men in the Christian ministry to make a contribution to religion that shall be worthy. G. D. HUNT.

JUDGE JOE AND HIS COURT.

It is not a make-believe job that Joe Garland, a high school boy of Chicago, has as judge of the boys' court of the West Side department Y. M. C. A., Chicago. He is elected by the boys themselves and heads the democratic system by which the discipline of the boys' division is enforced by its own members.

The court is convened with the usual "Hear ye! hear ye!" of the bailiff. Then His Honor Judge Joe Garland comes in and takes his seat. The prosecuting attorney and the attorney for the defense take their places and the prisoner is brought in by boys smaller than himself.

"There is perfect decorum in the court-room," says the official bulletin of the Y. M. C. A. of Chicago, "because it is serious business for all concerned.

"Most of the boys brought before the court confess their guilt and take their punishment like men, as the court cautions them against any future recurrence of the act and deprives them of certain privileges. 'If these same boys were brought before adults, they would not be nearly so penitent or anxious to improve their habits,' says the boys' work secretary. 'Then, too, this is a perfectly democratic proposition.'"

Paris-green dust scattered in a malarial mosquito swamp near Mound, La., proved very successful. Airplanes flew over swamps otherwise inaccessible and scattered the dust, heavily diluted with Tripoli earth.

NEEDHAM'S GROOVE.

Sunday, May 4th, Needham's Grove Christian Church, Moore County, N. C., Rev. W. J. Edwards, Seagrove, N. C., pastor, was rededicated. The occasion was brought about by a program of improvement and enlargement that had been going on at the Church for some time. The building seems now quite adequate for the needs of the community and bespeaks deep interest in the Church-life of the people. The addition cost about $500, and had all been paid before the day of dedication except about $75, which was contributed in cash and pledged by those present, before the dedicatory service.

It was a very happy occasion, and a great congregation of people gathered for the day. There were children's exercises which were much enjoyed, a sermon by the writer, then the dedication. After this, the children gathered, and with arms full of flowers taken from the altar of the newly dedicated Church, led the way to the cemetery, where all the graves were strewn with flowers. Following these exercises, a bountiful dinner was served, and the hospitality of the community was lavishly displayed.

In the afternoon, Superintendent C. D. Johnston of the Christian Orphanage was principal speaker, and very deeply interested the large congregation in the work of our Christian Orphanage. At the conclusion of the afternoon service, a vote was taken on behalf of the Sunday School, and it was unanimously decided that, after this, Needham's Grove Sunday School would send one offering a month to the Orphanage, one offering a month to missions, and retain the other two offerings for current expenses. There is a large and growing Sunday School. We have not visited a community where there is greater promise for the Church of the future, provided the children in this school shall be properly trained and brought into the Church.

Rev. W. J. Edwards has been the faithful and devoted pastor of these people for more than ten years and has certainly wrought well and accomplished much in the name of our Lord. He is much beloved by his people, and is certainly leading them in a most noble work.

"CHRIST THE LIGHT, . . ."

("Christ the Light, the Fire, the Dove, the Dew," a paper, by Mrs. Jas. L. Foster, read before the Woman's Missionary Conference at Norfolk, April 30th.)

Our great desire this morning, dear co-workers, is to have the presence of the Holy Spirit in our midst in all His power. I have chosen some passages of Scripture which show Christ the Holy Spirit to be a Light, to be as Fire, as the Dew, as a Dove, as the Wind.

(John 8:12) "Then spake Jesus again unto them, saying, I am the Light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." (Rev. 21:23-24) "And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it, for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof. And the nations of them that are saved shall walk in the light of it, and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honor into it." Then Jer. 23:9 says, "Is not my word as a fire, saith the Lord"; and in Acts 2:3, "And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them." Next, Deut. 32:2, "My doctrine shall drop as the rain, my speech shall distill as the dew, as the small rain upon the tender herb, and as the showers upon the grass." (Ps. 110:3) "Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power, in the beauties of holiness from the womb of the morning; thou hast the dew of thy youth." (Ps. 133:3) "As the dew of Hermon and as the dew that descended upon the mountains of Zion, for there the Lord commanded the blessing, even life forever more."

As a Dove, we read (Matt. 3:16) "And Jesus, when He was baptized, went up straightway out of the water; and lo, the heavens were opened unto Him, and He saw the spirit of God descending like a Dove and lighting upon Him." In Acts 2:1-4 "And when the Day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all, with one accord, in one place, and suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost and began to speak with other tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance."

We may not see the Light, the Fire, the Dew, the Dove, the Wind with the naked eye today, but may we not feel them in the Holy Spirit's power for the asking!

"The Prayer" (Adapted).

Spirit Divine, attend our prayers,
And make this house Thy home;
Descend with all Thy gracious powers—
Oh! come, Great Spirit, come!

Come as the Light—to us reveal
Our emptiness and woe,
And lead us in those paths of life
Where all the righteous go.

Come as the Fire and purge our hearts,
Like sacrificial flame;
Let our whole soul an offering be
To our Redeemer's name.

Come as the Dew, and sweetly bless
This consecrated hour;
May barrenness rejoice to own
Thy fertilizing power.

Come as the Dove, and spread Thy wings,
The wings of peaceful love;
And let our Church on earth become Blessed as the Church above.

Come as the Wind, with rushing sound,
And Pentecostal grace,
That all these women here may see
The glory of Thy face.

Spirit Divine! attend our prayers,
Make a lost world Thy home;
Descend with all Thy gracious powers—
O come, Great Spirit, come!

Come in Thy power, and fill this house.
May women here today,
As ne'er before, a vision seek—
O come, Great Spirit, stay!

Stay in Thy power, a Light, a Fire,
As Dew, as peaceful Dove,
As mighty Wind, or still small Voice,
We seek this day Thy love,
In Jesus' name. Amen.

Song.

"Come Holy Spirit, Heavenly Dove,
With all Thy quickening powers,
Kindle a flame of sacred love
In these cold hearts of ours."

ONE-DAY SCHOOL OF MISSIONS.

The one-day school of missions, district meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society, was held with the Elon College society, in Alamance Hall, on April 16, 1924.

The society was honored by having present Mrs. W. H. Denison, Dayton, Ohio, of the Woman's General Mission Board, who gave a splendid address in the morning. Mrs. L. L. Vaughan, chairman of Woman's Conference Board, spoke briefly of the work outlined for the year.

Upon roll call, a large delegation responded from Burlington, Elon and Hopedale; also a smaller number from Graham and Haw River. The president expressed the hope that next year we might have delegates present from each of the fourteen societies in the district.

We were favored with a duet by Miss Florence Fisher and Mrs. L. W. Vaughan. The Elon society served a sumptuous luncheon, which was enjoyed by all.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson was the principal speaker for the afternoon session. He delighted the audience with an address on "Doing the Unnecessary Thing."

Miss Pattie Coghill, field secretary of Woman's Mission Board, talked to us of the young people's work.

Mrs. Dennison conducted an interesting round-table discussion.

No invitation was extended for the next meeting, but a committee was appointed to communicate with the different societies, and due publication will be made in THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY CONVENTION.

The Woman's Missionary Convention, which met on Wednesday, during session of Southern Christian Convention, had a good attendance, encouraging reports and splendid interest. Mrs. Denison and Mrs. Howsare, of the General Board, added much by their presence, counsel and addresses. The treasurer's report showed $16,567.87 raised during the biennium. There were some changes among the officers. Mrs. W. H. Carroll remains president. Mrs. J. A. Williams, of Franklin, Va., becomes vice-president; Mrs. Boyd Richards was made literature superintendent, and Mrs. I. W. Johnson is superintendent of cradle roll. The reports from the district rallies showed splendid attendance and much good accomplished.

The North Carolina Conference reported that $400 had been raised as a special fund for the erecting of a chapel at La Plaza. An offering of $50 was given by the women as a personal gift for Mrs. D. P. Barrett, who is soon to arrive in the States on furlough. The matter of continuing to raise money for China fund when there is no outlook for volunteers to that field now came up for much discussion. A resolution was passed asking the W. M. Conferences to consider using this money to aid in the Japan work, since there is such a serious need of funds there, caused by the earthquake calamity. Our women seemed much in earnest for the cause, and we believe this to have been one of our most successful missionary Conventions. MRS. C. H. ROWLAND,
Secretary.

THE COMING EDUCATION.

"How can I teach your children gentleness,
And mercy to the weak, and reverence for life,
When by your laws, your actions and your speech
You contradict the very things I teach?"
—Longfellow.

"The greatest need of America is more education of the heart."—Hiram Powers.

"The lack of humane education is the principal cause of crime."

"Show me the laws of a State for the prevention of cruelty to animals, and I in turn will give you a correct estimate of the refinement, enlightenment, integrity and equity of that Commonwealth's people."—Hon. L. T. Dashiell (Speaker of Texas House of Representatives).

On the playground fence a teacher put a cake for the birds, telling her pupils of their usefulness and intelligence, and the wrong of injuring them. Next day her most unruly boy ate only half his lunch and put the other half on the fence. Kindness is contagious, and example is powerful. That fence is now the favorite perch of many birds, even when the yard is filled with noisy boys, and the unruly boy has changed for the better. Surely, those boys will all be nobler men and better citizens for the tuition of such a teacher.

While every child should be intellectually educated, it is certain that education of the heart is even more essential to the welfare of society and to the individual happiness, and children are entitled to both.

A noted American has said: "The spirit of cruelty is the deadliest enemy to a high civilization," and Humboldt said, "Cruelty to animals is a characteristic vice of a vulgar people." As all crime is cruel, to abolish cruelty is to abolish crime.

The San Francisco Call says:

"Today the Jefferson School is one of the most orderly in all the city. The children don't fight as they used to; they don't stone cats, or tie tin pails to the tails of dogs, or molest the sons of the flowery kingdom. And why? Because every school child down that way, as soon as he is old enough to write his name, is made a member of the army for the prevention of all the old evils, and no blue-frocked, brass-buttoned guardian of the peace could ever have done a tithe of the good that those children have accomplished. For four years the principal has been organizing the pupils of all the various classes into 'Bands of Mercy,' and now every child seems proud of his enrollment. There are about 350 members."

A strict regard for the rights and feelings of whatever has feeling is the cardinal principle of civilization, of courtesy and of Christianity. Children are fond of animals, and by no other means can kindness be so thoroughly inculcated in them as by humane teaching. "I find it the best kind of discipline, and worth any amount of effort," writes an able teacher after two years' trial. Such is the uniform testimony of those who teach kindness to animals.

Sir Arthur Helps declares it "a duty to treat animals with courtesy," and Mr. Rarey insists that "a horse should be treated like a gentleman." The cardinal doctrine of humane education is that it is impolitic and iniquitous to inflict avoidable suffering on any creature. Teach children to do as they would be done by.

"It is not only the suffering of the animal that we are trying to prevent; it is also the moral degradation of the person who causes this suffering. It is the ignorant person who is cruel to animals." —B. J. Tice, A. M.

"I am convinced that kindness to animals is not only a powerful cause of material prosperity, but also of moral prosperity. Teaching it need not disturb the routine of the school. One day in the week all our lessons refer to this subject. In the reading class I choose a book upon animals, and always give useful instruction. The results are exceedingly satisfactory."—De Sailly.

"Russia, Germany, Norway and almost every European nation has experimented with this instruction until it has become a matter of statistics that humane education lowers the criminal record."—Mrs. Reynolds.

"This teaching kindness to animals may seem a simple thing, but the more one looks into its merits, the more penetrating this spiritualizing influence proves to be, causing a change of comfort, inspiring justice and compassion in the place of selfishness and cruelty; training the mind to apprehend, and the heart to sympathize with the needs of the lowly creatures who form the theoretical object-lesson of such surpassing interest to the young; obviously the 'protecting sympathy' which a child may be taught to feel towards its helpless dumb companion, may in after years inspire the life of the philanthropist.

"How much such teaching is needed is demonstrated by the incredibly cruel deeds perpetuated by children even of tender years, which call forth neither remonstrance nor reproof from parent or guardian."—Miss G. Kendall.

A teacher in Syracuse said: "Nothing ever helped me so much to manage these rough boys as teaching kindness to animals." In two large cities have "tough" districts been civilized by the same means. Any teacher can, in a weekly talk of only five minutes, impress upon pupils the rights of animals and the duty and advantage of kind methods in using them. Why not do so?

It is more a matter of character than of animals, and the chief object of schools should be to make good citizens. "Goodness" is merely kindness, and kindness produces happiness and peace.

In his preface to an admirable essay on education, Mr. Cyrus Pierce asserts:

"Merely mechanical education is no security against immorality and crime. That facts show that crime may increase at the same time with increased attention to education—the common education of the schools; that this is the case to some extent in New England; and for the reason in part that the common education of the schools has in it too little of the moral element. We cultivate the head more than the heart. That there is hence a call upon teachers, committees, parents and all friends of true education to make a larger outlay for moral instruction, assigning to it in our schools the high place its importance demands."

We appeal to all educators of youth—a class whose power and responsibility are greater than that of any other—to adopt at once this beneficent instruction, to teach children that animals have rights which they should respect, that cruelty is contemptible and degrading, that kindness is the greatest promoter of happiness, and that justice, mercy and compassion are the noblest of all virtues.

Into the hands, then, of the teachers of the public schools of America is committed, as into those of no others, this noble task of training a generation molded by the principles of this "Coming Education." If this recognition of the sacred rights of the animal world is clear in the soul of the teacher, if in his or her vision of the things that constitute personal character at its best are these fine and generous impulses of kindness, mercy, thoughtfulness for all that lives with the capacity for pain or pleasure, the children daily feeling the power of such a teacher's life will be fashioned into the same image.

The vitally important work for us is the humane education of the millions of boys and girls who are to be the future citizens of the State.

(Compliments of American Humane Education Society, 180 Longwood Ave., Boston.)

OUR PLEDGES to Men and Millions are Sacred, Solemn and Binding.

These obligations were made through the Church to the Kingdom of God and to all that pertains to building up that Kingdom in the world, so far as our Christian Church is concerned. As Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has so pertinently pointed out: "A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations--'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42)--but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

Many are making great sacrifices to meet these obligations and pay these pledges. Every one who fails to do so not only produces paralysis in his own moral system, but to that extent paralyses the efforts and sacrifices that the faithful and the loyal make.

BEAR IN MIND MEN AND MILLIONS MEAN AND STAND FOR ALL THAT THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH MEANS AND STANDS FOR.

—REMEMBER—

that the fourth year ends April 30, 1924.

After that, we have only one more year in which to meet these obligations. Unless we put forth a mighty effort to pay some on these pledges during the last quarter of the fourth year, there is great danger that we will fail entirely, because of the bulk of our pledge looming up before us in a one-year period.

Paying SOMETHING by April 30, 1924, will make it easy to pay ALL by April 30, 1925. Where there is a will there is a way, and God always helps those who try to their capacity to help themselves.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

PRAYER.

"Fire shall be kept burning upon the altar continually; it shall not go out."—Lev. 6:13.

The fuel of the fire of the altar of heart is prayer. It lies at the very foundation of all Christian vitality; and as we are praying souls, so are we living souls; and as we are not praying souls, so are we spiritually dormant, if not to say dead. If we would live, we must breathe. If we would live spiritually, we must pray. Cease to breathe, and the body perishes. Cease to pray, and the soul perishes. Without prayer we are nothing spiritually, the Word is not revealed, and it can be of no use to us. Worship is neither competent nor virtuous; Christian efforts have no spiritual value, and self-communion is empty.

Prayer.—Dear Heavenly Father, eternal spirit and Creator of our spirits, we praise Thee for the inner shrine of the soul where we can commune with ourselves and with Thee and know Thee. Give us everything that is necessary to cultivate the power of prayer and make life a daily communion with Thee. In Christ's name we ask it. —Amen.

TUESDAY.

TO FIND HAPPINESS, FOLLOW A GIVE-AND-TAKE PLAN.

"As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise."—Luke 6:31.

You must expect to do things you don't enjoy if you would "keep peace in the family."

Do not be arbitrary in your demands that only what you want and like to do shall be participated in by your family, neither should you be arbitrary in taking a position that what you do not like you will not take part in.

There was never a husband and a wife who enjoyed the same things equally.

One or the other may acquiesce in the pleasures and amusements and the conduct of home, but there are many times when the one who bows to the wishes of the other would prefer to do something else or might actually wish to avoid the certain things done.

There should not be a desire on the part of either to dictate to the other the course to be followed.

It is the give-and-take plan which makes for happiness.

More pleasure and satisfaction are bound to come through the realization that each has given up gracefully at different times, and the sharing of privileges through the give-and-take spirit makes for double pleasure. (Copyright, 1924, by International Feature Service, Inc.)

Prayer.—Blessed Lord Jesus, Thou who didst go about doing good, grant unto us such a measure of Thy spirit that we may do unto others as Thou didst; that we may follow Thee in self-denial and tenderness of soul. In His name we ask it. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

MEETING AS CHRISTIANS.

"And lifting up their eyes, they saw no one save Jesus only."—Matt. 17:8.

Sometimes, at public gatherings of a Christian character, some introductory speaker says: "We meet today as Christians." What a tragedy it is that all meetings are not as Christians! What a blessing it would be if all meetings were as Christians! The municipal councils, civic organizations, fraternal conclaves, political caucuses, social functions, Church conventions, and assemblies of all characters—in all, we need the dispensation of the spirit of Christ, the practice of Christian principles and brotherly fellowship. How wonderful if, in looking up, we could see Jesus only. The future belongs to those who possess the spirit of Christ. The future belongs to those who dare to exalt Christ above everything else and who goes forth to minister to the needy, of which the supreme symbol is the giving of a cup of cold water in heaven's name.

Prayer.—Eternal God, teach us at the beginning of every day the way of the Christian life, and make our daily devotions a preparation for a deeper realization of the glory of service. As for us and our household, we would see Jesus only in all our doings, and we pray Thee to make it so. In His name we ask it. Amen.

THURSDAY.

FIT TO LIVE.

"No man having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God."—Luke 9:51-62.

During the war, we heard a great deal about "fit men." Those not physically fit could not enter, and for those who were entered, millions of dollars were spent in making and keeping them fit. At present, great pains is taken to keep men in the service strong, healthy and robust, fit men for their duties.

Our Lord has something to say about the fit and unfit for the kingdom. Fitness has to do with undertaking something and achieving it, in spite of all dangers and obstacles encountered. Jesus qualified morally and spiritually at all times for the task he had on earth and for the glories of heaven, and He allowed nothing to deter Him. No pleasure led Him away. He kept on to the end.

It is discouraging at times to pay the cost of fitness and achievement. It eliminates much that we like, and often our best friends. But the call to follow Christ and be a Christian is imperative, and the obligation to "keep fit" is equally mandatory. Too many of us stop with mental and physical training and say it is enough, thus not paying the price of moral and spiritual fitness, the goal of the kingdom is not attained.

Chaff in the grain must be winnowed away. Unfit men in the military service must be eliminated. Unfit men in the races must drop out. Unfit teachers in the schools must go. Unfit men in the professions must retire. Is it not so in the kingdom of God? Unfit men here are quitters. However difficult it may be, live a wholesome and disciplined life for Christ fit for the kingdom.

Prayer.—Father, we thank Thee for everlasting life. Give unto us to understand the great support the hope of immortality will give us, and to depend upon it every day, then we shall endure all the daily grind of our colorless tasks. In Jesus' name we ask it. Amen.

FRIDAY.

"THE KISS OF GOD."

"So Moses the servant of the Lord died there in the land of Moab."—Deut. 34:4-6.

Moab is a word which brings to mind many things in our Bible, but chiefly graves.

There is a legend concerning this grave of Moses which is beautiful and comforting. It is said that after Moses had feasted his undimmed eye upon the distant land of Canaan from Pisgah, he turned slowly away and descended into the lap of the great Nebo. He came upon two angels in the act of digging of a grave, and stopped to ask them for whom it was they were preparing in so lonely a spot? They replied that the Lord had commanded them to dig the grave, and that was all they knew.

When the grave was deep enough, the angels asked Moses to measure it with his body. Moses did so, and while stretched there, God called his spirit to come forth; but the spirit of Moses hesitated, whereupon the Almighty stooped toward His servant, and Moses' spirit leaped to the divine embrace. Thus it is said, Moses died by the kiss of God, and was buried by the angels, who covered up the grave as well.

God's children do not die without His coming. None are forgotten in that solemn hour. All is summed up in those wonderful words: "O death, where is thy sting; O grave, where is thy victory?" —Rev. A. E. Gregory.

Prayer.—"How great, O Lord, art Thou, mighty in love, tender in forgiveness, majestic in creation, wider than seas in charity, and wonderful in Thy knowledge. To Thee we kneel as to none other. For in Thee we live, and more, and have our being. Amen."—Dr. Sheldon.

SATURDAY.

"For which of those works do ye stone me?"—John 10:32-33.

One of our friends who has served many years as missionary in China, tells how a blind Christian youth squelched a Chinese infidel who had been berating the mission work in public print. Every week for several months, there had appeared in a native paper tirades against Christianity. Missionaries ignored the attacks.

After some time, the Christian youth abruptly silenced the abuse with one article. Simply, yet eloquently, the young man told his own story. As a young child, he had groped his way through the narrow streets of his native city, scrabbling among the garbage of the street for a crust of bread, his piercing cry, "Blind! blind!" warning of his condition. Helpless, alone, miserable, he stumbled through the eternal dark. No one cared for him.

Simply, but fervently, he told how, one day, the voice of a foreigner came to his ear, speaking Chinese, and how he was led by that foreigner to the mission headquarters, bathed and fed. More wonderful still, he had been taught the English language, and how to read that language in point type for the blind. Some Christians in far-away America who did not know him, and upon whom he had no claim, provided books in Braille point as well as an entire Bible. "What has infidelity done? What program has infidelity? What hope," he asked, "for such as me?" The article was not answered. Nor did another attack appear.

Christian, be about your Father's business of Christ-like service—the simpler the better. By such, infidelity is squelched and even the devils themselves are abashed.—Rev. John Harrison Allen.

Prayer.—"We unite in the prayer that God's people may be one in the passion to redeem the world through the Redeemer. Deliver us, most Gracious One, from dissensions, and bring all soon into harmony to sing the song of redemption. Amen."—Dr. Sheldon.

SUNDAY.

"The Sabbath was made for man."—Mark 2:27.

This life is full of toil and strife, disappointment and bereavement, and from all its tiring demands there is no absolute perfect rest. But there is a perfect rest, and all the people of God, according to promise, shall have it. That rest is in the immortal life. We have the toil here, but we will have the rest there. The conflict is here, but the victory will be there. The cross is borne here, but the crown will be worn there. We sorrow here, but we shall be happy there. The Sabbath was made for us, that we might obtain some of these things here. It is God's day for us to think about these things. Every Lord's Day is a rest day, in which we should bring before our minds the rest, the victories, the crowns and the glorious rewards of heaven for Christian faithfulness here.

Prayer.—Our Father, help us to look to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world, that we may know what joy His presence yields in our lives. Help us to cast off our loads on the Sabbath Day and learn of the rest of heaven, where strife and disappointment, and all things that mar, shall cease, and we shall taste the deep rest of God forever. Amen.

IN ITS ESSENTIAL MESSAGE, WHY DOES NOT THE BIBLE PROVE ITSELF?

If you or I should dig up, in some mound in China, an ancient document entitled "Recipe for Making Gunpowder," dated some 2,000 years ago, which, after sketching the founding of the empire and some past and present events, proceeded to disclose what it termed the most wonderful discovery in all times, which would place in the hands of its happy possessor a mighty power, and closed somewhat as follows: "Mix saltpeter, charcoal, and sulphur together in certain (given) proportions, and they will produce gunpowder"—what would be the best way to test the truth of this recipe? Would it be to argue about its authorship, age, or to criticize its early historical accounts? Or would it be to mix the ingredients together in the proportions named and touch a match to the mixture?

If it exploded and we found it was indeed gunpowder, would not this be the best possible proof of the truth of that recipe? If the mixture made by following the directions of the recipe produced gunpowder, would not the recipe thereby prove its truth—that is, the truth of its essentially vital part?

In other words, if a writing or document says that certain results will follow a certain course of action, and we want to test the truth of that document—if we follow out the course of action prescribed by it and the promised results follow—would not this prove the truth of that document? and in the most satisfactory manner? Is not this testing of the document by actual trial better than arguing about it? Are not actual results the best possible proof in the world?

What better proof could we have of its truth?

Now, how is it with the Bible?

After tracing down the history of a people from their earliest beginnings, the Bible finally tells of Christ and of His teachings: that if men will accept and follow Him, certain results will follow in their lives.

What is the best way to test the truth of His teachings?

Is it to argue about the preceding historical accounts, and their authorship? whether two men or one wrote each of them? or even as to who wrote down His teachings?

What useful purpose do such lines of investigation or criticism serve?

Is not the better course to do with these teachings precisely what was done with the recipe for making gunpowder? Instead of arguing about them, why not put them to the test? If followed out, and the promised results are produced, why is not that the most satisfactory of all proofs of their truth?

And if this, the best, it is submitted, of all possible tests, is applied to Christ's teachings, what is the result?

First of all, what does He say will follow? That those who in heart truly accept and follow Him will bear the "fruit" (John 13:2-5, 6) of joy and unselfish love (v. 11, 12, 13), and thus will gradually grow into His likeness—that is, of unselfish love, and self-sacrificing helpfulness.

Has His way been thus tested? It has. If we will but open our eyes, we can see these tests going on all about us.

Take, for instance, such a man as the late Jerry McCauley, of New York City, once a river thief and some say even worse, who was led in a humble mission to accept the Saviour and live for Him. Turning from his past life of crime to humbly following his newly found and newly chosen Master, he established the mission in Thirty-second Street bearing his name, known throughout the city, and the land, where hundreds, nay thousands, of down-and-outs have been led in like manner to a better life. At his funeral, the late Dr. Hall began his funeral address by saying, "Here lies the body of one of the most useful men in New York City."

Take the case of the late Dwight L. Moody, who, at the age of sixteen, through his Sunday School teacher, was led to accept the Saviour and follow Him—a youth with not even a grammar-school education, who later, surrendering business and a growing salary of $5,000 a year, gave himself up whole-heartedly to God's service, without a dollar of assured salary, and became the world-wide evangelist so well known, and the instrument in leading thousands and tens of thousands to his Saviour; the founder of the Northfield schools and of the Chicago Bible Institute, from which today over 1,000 students graduate annually to lives of Christian service; and who also founded the Northfield Conferences, followed at a number of other centers throughout our land.

These are but one or two of the striking instances which surround us, and similar humbler instances can be found in all walks of life if we open our eyes to observe them.

These men accepted and followed Him. Was not the change Christ said would follow wrought in their lives? From sin and preying upon the public was not the change wrought in Jerry McCauley's nature of turning to God and of devoting his life to helping and benefiting humanity? Did he not grow from a likeness to the thief (on the cross) into a likeness of the Saviour, of unselfish love and helpfulness; in a word, into a life of self-sacrificing devotion to the welfare and salvation of others?

Was not a similar change wrought in the life of the late D. L. Moody, i. e., the change from a purely business life to a similar life of devoted service to the salvation of others?

In these lives of Jerry McCauley and of D. L. Moody, who forsaking all else, followed Christ and His teachings, did not the results promised in the Bible—the unselfish love, with all its attendant traits of helpfulness, self-sacrifice and right living—all come true?

And do not the same results show themselves in thousands—nay, in tens of thousands—of other lives about us who have accepted Him in their hearts and follow Him in their lives, i. e., in the lives of ministers, missionaries, evangelists, of humble Sunday School teachers (through a devoted one of whom it was, that the late D. L. Moody was led to accept and follow Christ, who thus, in God's hands, was the instrument of winning to Him one who, in turn, became the instrument, likewise under God, of winning untold thousands into the eternal kingdom, throughout this land and abroad), and also in the lives of thousands of other consecrated, devoted laborers in all branches of the Master's service the world over?

If we look round about us, with our eyes open, may we not discern some one or more such changed, devoted lives who have given their hearts and lives to the Master and are in their hearts as in their lives, following Him? I think we may. He hath not left Himself without a witness.

Are not these and other changed lives—changed by following and after following Him and His teachings—the very best possible proofs of the truth of His teachings and of that message?

If not, what better proofs could there be?

Christ Himself said, "My teaching is not mine, but His that sent me." If "any man willeth to do His will, he shall know of the teaching, whether it is of God, or whether I speak from myself." (John 7:16-17 R. V.)

Christ thus invited putting His teaching to the test of actual practice, and these are the proofs, the irrefragable proofs, of today and of all time.

With such test and proofs in our possession, what need have we of arguments as to whether one man or two wrote down the narratives which have brought down to us these gems of vital truth?

Do not these truths, when loyally followed, prove themselves?

If so, and it is submitted that they do, what need have we of further proofs, save as we, from time to time, continually note them afresh in the changed or changing lives of others about us?

And if this be so, and it is submitted in all candor that it is, then why does not the Bible—that is, its essential, its vital message, like the recipe for making gunpowder—upon being put to the test of actual, practical, personal experience, thereby prove itself?

Just as the recipe for gunpowder proved its own truth, by making the article it claimed to make, why does not the Bible, in like manner, prove its own truth by causing in the lives of men, women, and even children, those changes which it promised would follow in the lives of those who accept and loyally follow its teachings?

Can these changed lives about us, or these proofs of the truth of the Bible be successfully controverted? It is submitted that they cannot be.

And if this be true—as it is submitted it is—then why does not the Bible's essential message of Christ's salvation indeed prove itself?

THE UNKNOWN JOURNEY.

"He went out not knowing whither he went."—Heb. 11:6-10.

Abram began his journey without any knowledge of his ultimate destination. He took "one step," and he did not "ask to see the distant scene." And that is faith, to do God's will here and now, quietly leaving the results to him. Faith is not concerned with the entire chain; its devoted attention is fixed upon the immediate link. Faith is not knowledge of a moral process; it is fidelity in a moral act. Faith leaves something to the Lord; it obeys His immediate commandment and leaves to Him direction and destiny.

And so faith is accompanied by serenity. "He that believeth shall not make haste"—or, more literally, "shall not get into a fuss." He shall not get into a panic, neither fetching fears from his yesterdays nor from his tomorrows. Concerning his yesterdays, faith says, "Thou hast beset me behind. Concerning his tomorrows, faith says, "Thou hast beset me before." Concerning his today, faith says, "Thou hast laid Thine hand upon me." That is enough, just to feel the pressure of the guiding hand.—J. H. Jowell, D. D.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

June 1, 1924.

Subject: "The Babylonian Exile of Judah."

Lesson: 2 Kings, chs. 21-25; 2 Chr., ch. 36.

Golden Text: "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people."—Prov. 14:34.

Devotional Reading: Psa. 80:1-7.

Strange, isn't it, how dumb and perverse some people can be? Take, for instance, the Jews, who lived in the kingdom of Judah during the latter part of the seventh and the early part of the sixth centuries B. C. They had heard—they probably knew the details by heart—of the fate that had befallen their northern brethren, the kingdom of Israel, at the hands of the Assyrians. They knew, too, the causes of that downfall. They must have known that similar causes would inevitably bring about a similar fate. And yet they went on in their blind folly, doing the very things that the prophets of an earlier day had condemned, and actually justifying themselves by a course of reason that had been undeniably proved false and vicious. Jehovah had shown them, in the case of Israel, that He was no respecter of nations; they had no reason to believe that He would spare them if they broke His laws and denied the faith. It does seem strange, doesn't it, that they would not heed the warnings of Jeremiah, and turn from their evil ways?

But folks are just as bad today. In spite of the fact that it has been proved time and again that "the wages of sin is death," folks go on sinning. They hope in a vague way that, in their particular case at least, the law will be revoked. They will wake up to the fact some day—perhaps too late—that they have been butting their heads against an immutable principle that will sweep them to exile and destruction.

Judah had been sick for a long time. She had been sinning for so long, and so grievously, that it was just a question of time before the undertaker, in the person of Nebuchadnezzar—Judah had not learned that God could and would use other nations, even hated foreigners to accomplish His purpose—would have to be called in. He finally came in 586 B. C. The events leading up to this fateful climax will bear reviewing.

When Josiah, the reforming king, was killed at Megiddo, Jehoahaz, a younger son, came to the throne. Necho, the Egyptian king and conqueror of Josiah, deposed him and took him in chains to Egypt. Jehoiakim followed him and did his worst for eleven years. He paid tribute to Egypt, and thereby incurred the enmity of Nebuchadnezzar, who later defeated the Egyptians and made Judah tributary to him. But the Jews did not seem to be able to learn their lesson, and after indulging them for a long time, Nebuchadnezzar came up against them, and in 597 B. C. captured Jerusalem. This was the first captivity of Judah. Jehoiachin, his wives, his mother, his servants, and all the dignitaries and artisans of the city were carried into captivity in Babylon. Nebuchadnezzar made Zedekiah king over Judah and placed a heavy tribute on the country. Things went well for a while, but Zedekiah, egged on by foolish nobles, rashly rebelled against the mighty monarch and refused to pay the tribute. Nebuchadnezzar's patience was exhausted, and he immediately sent an army to capture Jerusalem. He was delayed somewhat by a rebellion in Egypt, but finally in 586 B. C. his soldiers made a hole in the wall and entered the city. Zedekiah and some of his officials escaped from the city, but they were captured and taken to Babylon, where all save the king were killed, while he had his eyes put out and became a captive.

The conquering army made a thorough job of destroying the city. They did not spare even the temple; and after despoiling it of everything valuable, they burned what they could with fire. They also carried into captivity a large number of the people. Nebuchadnezzar later colonized the devastated country and appointed Gelaliah as governor of the province.

Thus ends the career of Judah as a nation. It was a sorry and tragic ending to what in other days had been a promising career. But God had not exhausted His possibilities, and through what seemed to be the destruction of the nation, He brought about a movement that later gave to the world a spiritual religion that found its highest and ultimate expression in Jesus Christ. He works in wondrous ways His purposes to effect.

Some Teaching Points.

1. When a man speaks for God, people should heed his message.

2. Continued refusal to obey God's spirit finally makes obedience impossible.

3. There is little hope for the masses when the leaders themselves go wrong.

4. Jehovah always warns His erring and sinning children.

5. Retribution, though long delayed, is sure.

6. "The wages of sin are always paid. If there is any delay in settlement, compound interest is always added."

7. It is the soul of a nation that counts.

8. Materialism always brings an individual and a nation to ruin.

9. Discipline is often an expression of love.

10. A man is never beyond the reach of the divine love, but he may so harden his heart that there is no remedy.

11. "The wicked shall be turned into hell; and all the nations that forget God."

12. "Sin can never be judged by its immediate effects."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

June 1, 1924.

Topic: In His steps: VI. How Jesus faced duty.—Matt. 3:15; John 9:4; Luke 22:42. (Consecration meeting.)

Daily Reading: Without flinching.—Mark 8:31-38. Duty to the helpless.—Mark 8:22-26. Duty to the lost.—Luke 7:36-50. Duty to God.—John 10:22-30. Duty to parents.—John 19:25-27. Duty to the uttermost.—John 19:28-30.

It was General Lee, I think, who said, "Duty is the grandest word in the English language." I do not know whether it is the greatest word—for instance, love is a very, very great word—but it is one of the greatest words we know. There is a tone and an association about the word that challenges us.

And we all feel the urge of duty. There is in each one of us the "ought" or the "must" feeling that we cannot get away from. Our duties may differ from the duties of some one else, and they may differ at times for ourselves, but there are certain things that we ought or must do. No young person can possibly get away from certain duties, without doing violence to his moral nature. God has made us with the sense of duty, and he who dulls it or ignores it sins against himself and against God.

There are some duties that are very disagreeable at times. And there are other duties which are not disagreeable in themselves, but which do become disagreeable when they interfere with our pleasure or selfish desires. In view of the fact that we must always face duty, and in view of the fact that this duty sometimes is unpleasant, it might help us to see how Jesus faced and did His duty.

And first of all we need to recognize the fact that Jesus had to face duty. The fact that He was the Son of God did not release Him from duty; in fact, it involved duty of the most stern kind. One who reads the gospels will be surprised to learn how many times Jesus says "I must," or words to that effect. Even as a boy, He recognized that divine imperative, that sense of duty. And He never lost that sense of duty.

1. Jesus faced duty bravely. There were times when He knew that if He did His duty it would arouse opposition and cause Him suffering. But He did His duty, no matter what the cost might be. And when it finally came to the point where He had to forsake His duty or die on the cross, He deliberately chose the cross. There is no finer example of courage or manhood than in the way Jesus faced and did His duty.

2. Jesus faced duty humbly. There was no boasting and no pride in the Master's performance of duty. He realized that He was doing only what He ought to do, and He saw no reason why a man should be puffed up or feel proud over doing what He ought to do.

3. Jesus faced duty as it came to Him. He did not evade present duties for more remote duties. He did at the moment His duty for that moment.

4. Jesus faced duty prayerfully. Perhaps it was because of this spirit that Jesus did His duty so well and apparently enjoyed it so much.

Quotations to be Read.

"England expects every man to do his duty."—Nelson, at the battle of Trafalgar. We might paraphrase this to read, "God expects every Christian Endeavorer to do his or her duty."

"Knowledge is the hill that few may hope to climb; duty is the path that all may tread."

"God never imposes a duty without giving the time to do it."—Ruskin.

"He who is false to a present duty breaks a thread in the loom, and will find the flaw when he may have forgotten the cause."—Beecher.

"There are those that do not do all their duty; there are those that profess to do their duty; and there is a third class, far better than the other two, who do their duty and a little more."—Carnegie.

QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION.

1. What are some of our duties to our parents?
2. What duty do we owe to our country?
3. What duty do we owe to God?
4. What duty do we owe to self?
5. What duty do we owe to others?
6. Do duties ever conflict?
7. What are some aids toward doing our duties?
8. What duty seems hardest to you?
9. What are some of our duties as Christian Endeavorers?

FIELD NOTES.

I have just returned from Mt. Auburn, Warren County, N. C., where I preached yesterday. Last Saturday I visited the home of Bro. J. Ed. Paschall. His wife is confined to her bed and may not be able to get out for some time. Her daughter is at Elon College, and will be at home in a short time.

Mrs. Jacob Moss has been quite sick recently. Although still confined to her room, I found her greatly improved.

We took another offering for the orphanage at Mt. Auburn yesterday. Was with Pastor A. H. Hook Wednesday at his evening service at Henderson. The pastor and his wife are doing good service at Henderson.

I have requested the deacons, secretaries and treasurers of the Churches of my charge to act as committees to look out for some one for the Churches to elect as pastors for the Conference year of 1924-25.

"Zion mourns her heroes fallen." Many sad hearts among the members of my congregation, caused by the passing of Dr. Barrett and Mr. Eastes. Many glad hearts because Dr. Atkinson has "returned to his first love" in THE CHRISTIAN SUN office.

Jacob Kimball and Will Newman, delegates to the Southern Christian Convention, both spoke enthusiastically about the "proceedings" and the "hospitalities." D. A. LONG.

FIRST CHURCH, GREENSBORO.

Our evangelistic campaign at the First Christian Church closed Easter Sunday. The meeting continued for two weeks, and many decisions were made, and much interest was manifested in the work. Forty already received into the Church, and almost as many more are to come in as soon as transfers can be secured. We were much encouraged with the campaign. There were a score of children who accepted Jesus as their Saviour, but they have not been received into the Church yet.

We had with us to direct the singing Bro. Alfred Shumate, of Lima, Ohio, and that means that it was well done. He is one of the best we know for evangelistic work. He is not only a good singer, but one of the best personal workers we have had with us. Any pastor needing assistance in evangelistic work will do well to secure the service of Bro. Shumate. We feel that our pastors ought to know him, and ought to use him.

The pastor was sick during the meeting, and for two nights was not able to preach, but Bro. Shumate conducted the services. The meeting is being talked, and members are received almost every service. C. H. ROWLAND.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

I am very happy over the success of our special Easter offering. You remember our goal is $3,500. Our report this week, which will appear in THE SUN May 22, runs up to $2,750. We just lack $768.05 being to our goal. One hundred and three Churches have sent in offerings, and one hundred and twenty-two have not sent in yet. I want to urge each secretary who has not sent us an offering from his Church and Sunday School to mail it right away. Let us run up to our goal real quick! It is incouraging when our people come to our rescue so loyally. It makes us feel that you do appreciate our work and deeply sympathize with us in our arduous task. You have made it possible for us to reach and pass three mile-posts in the month of May. Isn't that grand! But in our joy, let us not lose sight of the fact that we must raise $768 to reach our goal for this year.

I know we have a great many friends in our Church who would enjoy making a special gift to help in this work. I give you this glorious opportunity right now. Get your check-book out and write a check payable to the Christian Orphanage for whatever amount you feel in your heart you want to give, and mail it to us, and you will enjoy that sweet, abiding peace that comes to those who do good deeds. I will be happy because you are interested in the work we represent, so two of us will be made happy. When you read this letter, write the check before you forget it. How many loyal hearts will help push us up to the goal. We are counting on you.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

OUR MOUNTAIN WORK.

On April 25th, about 9 o'clock at night, Bro. Sorrell, father of our pastor, and family arrived at the parsonage and remained until the 27th. We regretted very much that Bro. Sorrell and family had to travel over such a rough road to visit us. Having a very large car, learned that they had much trouble in reaching us, spending about two hours in climbing the mountain. The worst of all was when they were in less than a mile of here they had to travel more than four miles in order to reach the parsonage.

Bro. Sorrell seemed deeply interested in our roads, produce and other aspects of our living. He could fully realize as we have that the Christian Church is doing a wonderful work here, and that it needs the full support of both the mountain people and those of other parts of our Church. Bro. Sorrell wanted to know how we managed to live, getting such a small amount for our crops and having to carry it such a distance to market. How we managed to plow our hills and what we did in case of sudden illness. About the only reply we had was that we did the best we could.

When Bro. Sorrell had visited the homes of the mountains, and the corn mills, he made no comments, but showed much amazement. We feel quite sure if a number of our friends like Bro. Sorrell and family could visit us they would be of much help in many ways to us.

We were sorry that they could not be with us any longer, for they seem to be one of us. They visited our homes and, we are sure, made many friends among those whom they met.

We wish Bro. Sorrell and his much success in their travel for God, and trust that they will return at a later date when they can spend more time with us. MRS. W. C. STRICKLAND.

Fancy Gap, Va.

Sister Strickland is one of our devout members. She is always ready to stand for the principles of our Church. Her family are also devout workers in the Church and Sunday School.

Fancy Gap, Va. M. T. SORRELL.

We are delighted that Bro. C. M. Sorrell and family, of our Catawba Springs Church, Wake County, N. C., visited our mountain work. We wish more of our people would do likewise. We are sure Bro. Sorrell and family had a delightful and never-to-be-forgotten trip. Sister Strickland's account is deeply appreciated. J. O. A.

SEWARD.

God, in His infinite love and mercy, has seen fit to take from our midst a beloved member of Union (Surry) Missionary Society, Mrs. Addie R. Seward, who died on March 15, 1924. Be it, therefore, resolved:

That in the death of this earnest, faithful servant of God, the society of which she was a member since its organization has sustained a great loss. She was of noble Christian character, ever ready to lend a hand in the upbuilding of worthy objects, a willing worker in the service of our Lord. Our loss is her eternal gain.

That we pledge ourselves to nobler efforts in behalf of our society in furthering the cause of Christ. Truly, it can be said of her, "She hath done what she could."

That we tender our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family and friends, and pray that God will sustain and help them through the dark hours, that they may be able to look up through their tears and say, "Thy will be done."

That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family and to The Christian Sun for publication, and a copy be filed on the society records.

T. S. WRENN, JR.
R. E. BRITTLE.
MRS. G. S. HUBER.

FOLK.

Mrs. Francis Annie Folk, daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth Nelms, of Southampton County, Va., was born September 22, 1834, and died April 18, 1924. She was the oldest child of four, all of whom are dead. They were Mary Elizabeth Lane, Martha A. Harris, and Anna, who died at the age of thirteen.

Sister Folk married Wm. K. Folk, October 17, 1854. They had five children—two boys and three girls. The husband and two girls died during the Civil War. Those living are Junius W., Wm., Jr., Folk, and Mrs. Eugenia M. White, all of Suffolk, R. F. D. 2.

She joined Bethlehem Christian Church about the year 1867, and was a consistent and faithful member. She was the oldest member of the Church. Her funeral was conducted from Bethlehem Church by her pastor, assisted by Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., who paid a fitting tribute to one who had lived so long and well.

T. E. WHITE.

TEAGUE.

Simon W. Teague, who departed this life May 8, 1924, was born February 4, 1901, and was 23 years 3 months and 4 days old when he fell on sleep at St. Leo's Hospital, Greensboro, N. C., where he had gone for treatment. His body was brought to his home in Southern Alamance County, N. C., for funeral and burial. His parents are H. C. and Ida Dixon Teague, of the Pleasant Hill community. On December 5, 1921, he was united in marriage to Miss Beatrice McPherson. He leaves a wife, two children and many relatives and friends to mourn their loss.

The funeral services were from Pleasant Hill Christian Church, conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. Bro. Fogleman. His body was laid to rest in the Church cemetery. The floral tributes were beautiful, and the attendance large. May the blessed Christ comfort those who mourn.

P. H. FLEMING.

THOMAS.

Departed this life at his home, near Pleasant Hill Christian Church, Alamance County, N. C., Mahlon N. Thomas, aged 45 years. In early life he confessed faith in Christ and united with the Church. He was a devoted member of Pleasant Hill Christian Church, an interested member of the Sunday School, and a faithful member of the choir.

He leaves a wife, seven children, many friends and relatives who mourn his going. He will be greatly missed in home, Church and community.

The funeral services were conducted from Pleasant Hill Church by the writer, and his body laid to rest in the Church cemetery. The large audience and the beautiful floral tributes told of the esteem in which he was held.

May God our Father be merciful unto and bless the home thus bereaved.

P. H. FLEMING.

HARPER.

Died at the residence of her husband, at Oxford, N. C., May 8, 1924, Mrs. Louvenia Morton Harper, and was buried at Pope's Chapel the 9th instant. She was a member here from her girlhood. Age, 26 years. She left her husband to care for her infant son. A large number of relatives and friends followed this young Christian mother to the grave.

Fortebee

A REMEDY FOR TUBERCULOSIS.

FORTEBEE is a remedy discovered recently for the external treatment of tuberculosis, pleurisy, and "flu." Here is what people are saying about it already. From a letter received from Veanie McGhee, Ellerson, Va.:

"Since using FORTEBEE I have good appetite, all pains are gone, and I feel like a new person. My left lung was bad, and FORTEBEE healed it. Through the use of this remedy, I am restored to good health, and am glad to tell others about it."

This is from a letter received from M. E. Gordon, Richmond, Va.:

"A friend brought me a bottle of FORTEBEE. The first application was put on my chest, and for the first time in many weeks I could breaths freely without the catch in my side. After several applications the pleurisy pains were dulled, and then they came only at intervals. Now I am again at my work, feeling stronger every day. It is a privilege to tell you the good FORTEBEE has done me."

Many other such testimonials.

Try FORTEBEE yourself, and be your own judge as to results. It is harmless, and you can apply it on yourself by following the directions. $2.50 per bottle. Large size, $4.00. Order direct from FORTEBEE, INCORPORATED, 28 N. Eighth St., Richmond, Va.

Why Drugs Fail

Many chronic diseases fail to respond to drug treatment, even in the hands of the best physicians, whereas acute diseases usually respond readily. When a disease has become chronic, drugs often seem to do as much harm as they do good, for the system rebels against them. It is just this class of cases which derive the greatest benefit from drinking Shivar, America's best stomach, liver and kidney Water. If you suffer with chronic dyspepsia, indigestion, sick headache, rheumatism, kidney or liver disease, uric poisoning or other curable conditions due to impure blood, do not hesitate to accept the Spring's liberal offer as printed below. Their records show that only two in a hundred, on the average, have reported "no benefit." This is a wonderful record from a truly wonderful Spring. Sign the following letter:

Shivar Springs,
Box 16-H, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if I report no benefit you agree to refund the price of the water in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return within a month.

POWELL.

Giles Allen Powell fell on sleep in St. Leo's Hospital May 12, 1924, aged 9 years 5 months and 18 days. He was a bright child and was much loved. His father and brother Bernard preceded him to the spirit land. He leaves mother, Mrs. Giles Powell, and brother and sister to mourn their loss. The funeral and burial services were beautiful. The floral offering was abundant. The flowers were carried and placed on the grave by the tender hands of some twenty boys and girls, and while they formed a circle around the grave each of them promised to try to meet little Giles in heaven.

The pallbearers were four young boys, who bore his body to the grave in a very loving and tender manner.

"I cannot say, I will not say
That he is dead—he is just away.
With a cheery smile and a wave of hand,
He has wandered into another land."

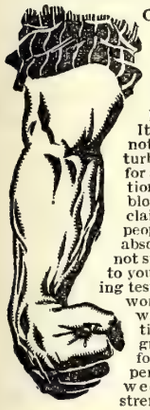
There is Strength in Every Tablet of This Newer Form of Iron



One dose often helps commence to enrich your blood and revitalize your worn out exhausted nerves — it is a newer form of iron, like the iron in your blood and like the iron in spinach. It is so prepared that it will not injure the teeth nor disturb the stomach. It is ready for almost immediate absorption and assimulation by the blood while some physicians claim metallic iron which people usually take is not absorbed at all. If you are not strong or well you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next take two five-grain tablets of this newer form of iron — three times per day, after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see how much you have gained.

NOTE — The manufacturers of this newer form of iron known as Nuxated Iron are thoroughly reliable: since its introduction it has reached the stupendous sale of over 4,000,000 packages annually, and it has been used and highly recommended by former U.S. Senators, Members of Congress, Judges of U. S. Courts and many physicians. We are able to guarantee that if you do not obtain all and even greater results than you expect from Nuxated Iron the manufacturers will promptly refund your money.

ROLLINS.

Miss Mary Adelaide Rollins was born November 8, 1863, and departed this life on April 9, 1924, aged 61 years and 7 months. She was the daughter of the late Jesse H. Rollins and Mary R. Rollins. Richard Rollins being her only surviving brother, the other three, Wiley A., Samuel J., and Everett T., have preceded her to the grave, and one sister, Missouri Davis, deceased.

Miss Adelaide was a member of Barrett's Christian Church since her early childhood, and lived a pure Christian life. She never married. She lived with her brother, Everett, and they were the dearest of companions. He preceded her to the grave a little more than a year ago. Theirs was a home open to friends, and especially to preachers, where they could always feel at home. The writer often thought of this home as the one pictured in the New Testament, where Christ enjoyed going to the home of the two sisters and brother.

Funeral services were conducted at the home (the old homestead) by two of her former pastors, J. M. Roberts and the writer. The remains were laid to rest in the family cemetery.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By Rev. S. M. Lynam.

Chains Did Not Restrain.—

The influence of Paul in chains reached into the palace of the Caesars. There is no place where the influence of a good man cannot penetrate.

Stockyard Worker Resigns.—

John Paul Stafford, the great social worker among the forty-five thousand employees of Swift & Co., in the stockyards of Chicago, has resigned. He will return to the regular pastorate. Mr. Stafford has done much toward organizing better relations between employer and employee, and his leaving the work is a regret to both men and the company. His work has been such as is so much needed in many of the industries of today. He has carried the teachings of Jesus into practical application to every-day living and working.

Chief Justice Clark Dies.—

On May 19th Chief Justice Walter Clark, of the North Carolina Supreme Court, passed into the great beyond. In his going, the State lost one of her ablest sons, and the Church a loyal supporter. At sixteen, the Chief Justice was a soldier in the Confederate Army; at seventeen, he was a lieutenant-colonel. He was on the bench for many years. Chief Justice Clark had meant much to his State and to the nation, and through all his long life of nearly seventy-eight years he has held unswervingly to the Church of Christ. Just such men as Walter Clark are those who have made America great, and just such men alone can keep it great.

Methodists Vote for Union.—

The Quadrennial Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, North, in session at Springfield, Mass., voted 802 to 13 for unification with the Southern Methodist Church. The Southern Church are to meet in extraordinary session to consider a vote. Prospects now look bright for a Methodist union. This will bring seven million Methodists into one body.

Such actions make one feel sure that the power of Christ is marching steadily onward toward the Church triumphant here among men. The causes for separation have long ago disappeared, and there is no reason why the Church should not unite. The union will add much to the efficiency of the Church.

A Great Missionary Resigns.—

Mary Mills Patrick, president of the Constantinople Woman's College, has resigned her position. She began her work as a missionary in Turkey in 1871. The Constantinople Woman's College was founded as a high school for girls. It is now the largest woman's school in Turkey. The college may be closed, since it is rumored that the Angora government purposes to close all Christian schools in Turkey.

Such educational institutions have done much to bring about the hopeful situation now obtaining in the Near East, and, as Christians, we must stand behind the schools there. Our prayers and our money should be freely given, that the kingdom of Christ be made a reality among men.

Church-Worker Wins Marathon.—

Clarence de Mar, who won the Marathon race in Boston, Mass., for the fourth time recently, is a member of the First Baptist Church of Melrose, Mass. He is a leader of the Boy Scout troop for that Church, and an active worker in other Church activities. Mr. De Mar is a World War veteran. He will go to Paris for the Olympic games there.

The thing which has caused Mr. De Mar to win the Marathon race of twenty-six miles so many times is his clean and wholesome living. He shows that a great athlete may be a great Christian too. The Church needs many more men like Mr. De Mar, who can and will gain the admiration of the boys, and lead them in ways of clean living.

Bonus Bill Becomes Law.—

President Coolidge vetoed the soldier-bonus bill, as was to have been expected. The two houses of Congress immediately passed it over his veto with a good number of votes to spare above the requisite two-thirds. The bill provides a system of insurance for the veterans. It will effect more than three million men, and in working out the schedules, much time and labor will be required. No policies will be issued until after March 1, 1925, and those who are to receive cash will not receive it until then. The President, in vetoing the bill, declared that it cheapened patriotism, and was contrary to American principles, and that the country could not afford the immense expenditure which the passage of the bill involves.

Bombay for Prohibition.—

The Excise Committee of Bombay, India, recommended the abolition of the liquor traffic in their report. They favored local option on the subject, but feel that prohibition is the best thing for Bombay. Agitation for prohibition has marked the Ghandi Nationalistic movement throughout India.

The Christian lands may yet have much to learn from those not professing the name of Christ. The strong movement in India for prohibition comes in marked contrast to the speech of President Butler, of Columbia, against prohibition. When such men as President Butler take such stands as he has taken, it means that the country is facing a rather grave situation. The agitation for the repeal of the Volstead act merits the disapproval of every Christian. Every man and woman in the Church should hold himself or herself personally responsible for law enforcement. It is only by enforcing the law that the children of the world today who will be the men and women of tomorrow can have the best world in which to live. We owe them a great deal, and we should see that we give it to them.

Religious Bodies for Peace.—

Many religious bodies have been in session recently in all parts of the United States, and one of the great issues discussed in all of them has been world peace. They have all taken definite action favoring it, and the Church is beginning to agitate for some sort of co-operation on the part of the United States with the rest of the world in order to maintain peace among the nations.

It is a sad fact that the Church in every age has followed the nation in which it was into war, and has taken sides against its brothers in another land. This the Church must determine never again to do. The Church can have peace in the world. It belongs to the Church to give the world the two-fold peace of the Christ which He left to His followers. Every Christian should stand for some form of international co-operation in which the United States should participate. If the Church-folk of America take such a stand, the government cannot and will not resist the pressure which they can bring to bear. World peace is up to us. Shall we have it?

D. V. B. S. in China.—

In 1918 there were six daily vacation Bible schools in China, with 32 student teachers and an enrollment of 724 pupils. In 1923 there were 1,079 such schools in China with 5,073 teachers, and an enrollment of 55,282 pupils. These figures show a marvelous growth in the daily vacation Bible schools in China. They show a popularity in that country not found in Christian lands.

The daily vacation Bible school promises much for the future of the Church. The Chinese Christians are making the most of it. In every Church there ought to be one of the schools conducted during the coming summer. It would be a joy to the children of the community, and it would mean much to the older people as well. Only through education can we ground the childhood of the nation in things Christian in this busy age, and this the Church must do. The daily vacation Bible school will help to do it. We certainly ought to go forward as rapidly as the Chinese!

NOTES-PERSONALS

President W. A. Harper spent part of last week in New York on business for the college.

Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., pastor of First Christian Church, Richmond, Va., is attending the Board of Trustees' meeting of Elon College this week.

Our brethren of the Alabama Conference are determined to have a nice brick Church building in Roanoke, Ala. God speed them in this holy ambition.

Rev. R. P. Crumpler's address is now Linville, Va. He has just recently moved into the parsonage recently purchased for the pastor of Antioch, Linville and New Hope Churches.

The Virginia Bible Society held its annual meeting at the First Baptist Church Sunday night. The principal speakers were Governor Trinkle and Dr. Geo. W. McDaniel, pastor of the Church.

Of the forty graduates in this year's class at Elon, sixteen are to be teachers or instructors in religious education; seven ministers; three foreign missionaries; six go to the learned professions; four to business, and four to scientific professions.

Rev. Sion M. Lynam was the preacher at the 11 A. M. service for the Elon College congregation Sunday, May 18th. Bro. Lynam is a member of the class graduating this week and is a man of talents and ability. His services at Elon were highly spoken of.

Rev. C. H. Rowland, D. D., preached the baccalaureate sermon for the Elon High School Sunday evening, May 18th. The exercises were of a high order and greatly edified all present. The graduating exercises of the school continue through the week. There were eleven graduates.

Rev. G. D. Hunt has lectured at several Churches in the Alabama Conference on the work done at the Norfolk Convention. Bro. Hunt says: "I am determined that our people shall be informed upon the vital issues of the Christian Church in this section." A most worthy and timely determination.

Rev. P. L. Duke has returned to his home in Columbus, Ga., after seceral months' resting and health-seeking in California. He writes that the rest and treatment in California had helped him much, and that he hopes to continue to rest and improve at home. His address now is 3405 Earline Ave., Columbus, Ga.

At the officers' and teachers' meeting of the First Christian Church, Richmond, Va., the following was adopted as a financial policy for the Sunday School: First Sunday in each month, Christian Orphanage; second Sunday, literature and other expenses; third and fifth Sundays, missions; fourth Sunday, Church building fund.

Rev. H. E. Truitt, who graduated in May from McCormick Theological Seminary, Chicago, has accepted the pastorate at Waverly, Va., to succeed Rev. J. L. Foster, whose resignation at Waverly becomes effective with the present Conference year. Any Church needing a supply from now to Conference could doubtless secure Bro. Truitt. His address at present is Elkton, Va.

Rev. A. H. Hook, who graduates from Elon this week, and who has already proven himself the successful pastor of our Henderson Church, having served them acceptably since Annual Conference, went, with Mrs. Hook, immediately after graduation, to live at Henderson. The people of our Henderson Church are to be congratulated on having this pair of very competent, loyal and devoted workers. It means progress and development for our Henderson work.

Rev. C. H. Rowland, D. D., pastor First Christian Church, Greensboro, N. C., has been assisting Rev. J. Briscoe Hall, pastor of Palm Street Church, in a very successful revival the past ten days. Bro. Hall will give an account of the meeting at an early date. Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, a former pastor, paid the congregation a visit and preached for them Sunday, May 18th. The most encouraging reports come from Palm Street of the work Pastor Hall and his loyal and devoted wife are doing in building up the Church and Sunday School at Palm Street. Dr. Rowland and Bro. Hall are happy yoke-fellows and are fortunate in each other's fellowship.

COPY OF DEED TO OLD LEBANON CHURCH.

This indenture, made this 22d day of June, in the year of Christ 1802, between John Warren, of Surry County, of the one part, and John Moring, Batts Lane, John Pyland, Samuel Rowell and John Bartle, Jr., trustees for the society at present known by the name of the Christian Church, of the other part, witnesseth that the said John Warren for and in consideration of the sum of five shillings to him in hand paid at or before the ensealing and delivery of these presents, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, and for diverse other good causes and considerations, him thereunto moving, hath given, granted, bargained and soil, released and confirmed by these presents doth give, grant, bargain and sell release. I confirm unto the said John Moring, Batts Lane, John Pyland, Samuel Rowell and John Bartle, Jr., trustees, as aforesaid, one acre of land situate in the County of Surry, aforesaid being a part of the tract whereon the said Warren now resides, and bounded as follows, namely:

Beginning on the north side of the public stage road leading from Surry Courthouse to Cabin's Point, at a pine in Joseph Warren's line, thence along the said Warren line to a lightwood post on the south side of the said road; thence along a line of marked posts to a corner post; thence by marked posts to a pine on the north side of the said road marked for this purpose; thence along a line of new-marked trees to the beginning, together with all the estate, right, title, interest, claim, trust property and demand of him, the said Warren, in and to the said one acre of land, to have and to hold the same to them and to their successors forever with the express proviso and upon the special trust and confidence nevertheless that the said John Moring, Batts Lane, John Pyland, Samuel Rowell and John Bartle, Jr., trustees, as aforesaid, shall as soon as conveniently, they can raise by subscription a sufficient sum of money to defray the cost and expense of building thereon a house of public worship, the size of which is submitted to their discretion, and so soon as they shall have raised a competent sum, as aforesaid, they shall, having given sufficient previous notice, let the building of the same to the lowest undertaker, who shall enter into bond with security to them and their successors to complete the same within twelve months from the time of undertaking, in a workman-like manner, of good materials, which house being so completed shall be, together with the land aforesaid, appropriated to the use of all Christian people and societies to meet and perform divine worship therein. That sect or society at present known and distinguished in this part of the country by the name of the Christian Church, aforesaid, shall have only this preference, that when they shall have meetings or appointments for worship the members or ministers of other sects and societies shall not interfere with them to incommode or disappoint them; but at all other times and seasons the members and ministers of any and every other Christian society shall have free use and privilege of the same to assemble, to preach and to hear therein, and the said John Warren, for the purposes aforesaid, doth warrant and defend the said one acre of land, with its appurtenances, to the said trustees as aforesaid and to their successors forever against the right, title, interest, claim and demand of any and all persons lawfully claiming from him. In witness whereof, the parties to these presents have hereto set their hands and seals the day and year first above written.

Signed, sealed and delivered in the presence of

JOHN WARREN, SR. (Seal)

JANE WARREN. (Seal)

Received 22d June, 1802, the consideration money within mentioned in full.

Teste: JOHN WARREN, SR.

At a court held for Surry County June 22, 1802, the within written deed of gift from John Warren and Jane his wife to John Moring, Batts Lane, John Pyland, Samuel Rowell and John Bartle, Jr., trustees for the society at present known by the name of "The Christian Church," was acknowledged by the said John Warren and Jane, his wife, to be their act and deed, and by the court ordered to be recorded. A receipt endorsed, signed by the said John Warren and by him acknowledged was also ordered to be recorded. The said Jane being examined as the law directs, relinquished her right of dower in and to the lands conveyed by the said deed, which is likewise ordered to be recorded.

WILD GAME IN THE SUBURBS.

Constantinople is a hunter's haven this time of year, and the Americans there are taking advantage of it. Wild bear, ducks, deer, and rabbits abound just outside the city limits, and it is a popular sport to hunt one's supper and then bring it to the Army and Navy "Y" to be cooked. Some lucky huntsmen have made it possible to serve a wild duck or venison dinner to everybody.

These unexpected changes in the regular menu are usually the signal for informal social evenings, the men remaining afterwards to play pool or to talk over the best method of bagging a rabbit.

Members of the Norfolk councils, Jr. O. U. A. M., recently presented Omohundro High School with twenty-four Bibles for use in the class-rooms and auditorium and four Bibles and an American flag to Campstello School. The Junior Order in that city is taking great interest in fraternal and patriotic movements in connection with school work.

The memorial services that is held every first Sunday in June at the New Providence Christian Church will be held next Sunday. A large crowd is expected to be present and make this the best in the history of the organization's meetings. A place will be fixed for dinners to be spread, and ice water will be placed around on the grounds.

A gold coin from the United States, labeled "Christian Idol From America," is part of a collection of idols from many lands possessed by a man in India.

EASTES.

(Read at funeral by Rev. Jas. H. Lightbourne, pastor Holland Church.)

Rev. Geo. D. Eastes was born to Mr. and Mrs. Meredith P. and Florence Jackson Eastes May 4, 1890, near Warren, Ind. He died May 4, 1924, his thirty-fourth birthday, at the Lakeview Hospital, Suffolk, 11:30 P. M. This soldier of the Lord died on the Lord's Day.

Bro. Eastes early surrendered his life to God and the Lord Jesus Christ, and at the tender age of sixteen began heralding the gospel of his Master. He was raised in the evangelical Church, and upon entering the ministry served Churches of that denomination at Logansport, Ind., and at Greenville, Ohio.

From the very beginning, Bro. Eastes was conscious of a call to the evangelistic field, and had a great love for the work of the evangelist. On resigning his work at Greenville, Ohio, he entered the evangelistic field, and it was while returning from an evangelistic meeting that he met on the train which was bearing him homeward Dr. W. D. Samuel, president of the American Christian Convention. It was this casual meeting with Dr. Samuel that directed Bro. Eastes' thought toward the Christian Church, and it was later at Dr. Samuel's urgent appeal that Bro. Eastes took up the pastorate of the Third Christian Church, Norfolk. This was in 1913.

After the Norfolk pastorate, Bro. Eastes again entered the evangelistic field, but again gave up the work of his heart when appealed to by the Mission Board and the Christian Church at Raleigh, N. C.

At the conclusion of the Raleigh pastorate, Bro. Eastes again entered the evangelistic field and continued at his dearly loved work until his health failed him and his body could no longer keep pace with his passion to call men to repentance.

Last September the invitation of the Holy Neck Church was accepted, and Bro. Eastes began his services as pastor the first Sunday in October. Since, at no time was he vigorous, and much of the time he was compelled to travel back and forth to Norfolk for treatment. These circumstances were thoroughly understood by his flock, and though he was limited in the service he could render, his fine spirit, his courage in the face of so great a handicap, his utter devotion to his Master, his thorough orthodoxy, his helpful and spiritual sermons, his desire and willingness to minister, and his appealing personality, in which were blended in unusual combination earnestness, frankness, humility, loyalty and humor, created for him an extensive field of usefulness, and won for him the regard and the love, not only of his own people, but of the whole community.

On May 4, 1915, Bro. Eastes was united in marriage by Rev. H. E. Rountree, with Miss Susie Elizabeth Morgan, of Portsmouth. Mrs. Eastes has been both wife and helpmeet, making for Bro. Eastes a home and very capably helping him in his pastorates and in his meetings, especially in her chosen field of music.

To this union was born one child, George D., Jr. The father was devoted to the son. Almost daily they would be seen walking together along the village street or riding together in the car.

Bro. Eastes is survived by his wife, his mother, who now lives in Warren, Ind.; his son, Geo. D., Jr.; a sister, Mrs. Blanch Jones, and two brothers, John A. and Leroy, the latter three living near Warren, Ind.

Bro. Eastes was in all respects a true and loyal minister of the gospel, a loving and abiding son, brother, husband and father.

GOD'S FAITHFULNESS IN OUR UNFAITHFULNESS.

God has no greater attribute than His faithfulness. Though we waver, though we break down in a moment of weakness, though Satan catches us off our guard, God always remains faithful and seeks by the power of His love to bring us back to Himself. The outlook would be dark indeed if He changed; but He never does.

Elijah failed his Lord when he ought to have stood true. The tried and trusted servant who had so fearlessly, at the Lord's command, faced the wicked Ahab, hurling back at him the charge, "It is thou who art the troubler of Israel, in that thou hast forsaken the commandments of the Lord," tottered and fell. Just after a great victory we see this trusted servant of the Lord fleeing before the threat of an angry woman, when he had just proved her gods were powerless, and that his God was all-powerful. It is after our greatest spiritual victories the most severe test of our faith and courage, patience and endurance comes to us.

In a moment of weakness such as overtakes God's most faithful servants at times, Elijah had tottered and fallen. There in the wilderness the old prophet's heart was aching until it was near breaking. He was suffering such agony as only those can or do suffer, who have long been true and obedient to God's commands, and have in a moment of weakness failed just when He was counting upon that one to stand true.

But God stays by. Though we let go and fail Him in an unguarded moment, He does not let us go. His faithfulness holds. His faithfulness prevents the eternal wrecking of our lives at such times. When we see our unfaithfulness in the light of His faithfulness, there comes to us a sorrow which we feel we cannot endure. Elijah failed at a time when he might have been very serviceable to Israel. He had every reason to know he could depend upon God's protecting care while doing God's work, but he did what the holiest, truest, strongest servant of God is likely to do—he looked at the obstacles instead of looking to the Lord, and fell. Now, behold him! dejected, prostrate, filled with sorrow, his heart torn with grief.

Our God does not leave His children to suffer on and on. Neither does He break off relations or communion with them because the evil one has been successful in causing their downfall when the crucial test was on. On the other hand, He makes haste to strengthen and prepare them for further usefulness and service. God did not leave Elijah to cry his heat out alone in the wilderness, but He cared for him and sent him forth in His service again. Soon we see the same bold, courageous Elijah, faithful to the Lord's command, standing once more in the presence of Ahab, pronouncing his doom "because thou hast sold thyself to do evil in the sight of the Lord."

Our Lord will defend, protect and shield us in every trial and tempetation. He will meet and overrule the unjust, false accusations of the enemy. He will take care of our honor. We do not need to fret because of evildoers. He has promised to deal with them. He delivers, helps and saves the righteous because they trust in Him. God, in His faithfulness, does not suffer His children to be tempted above that they are able, but with the temptation He makes a way of escape. But we must let Him make the way. Oh, the heartaches and sufferings we might escape if we could only learn to commit our way unto the Lord and rest in Him while He brings to pass in our lives that which is best.

Our God knows the difference between willful disobedience and breaking down when we meant to stand true to Him. He knows how much of it is due to overtaxed strength and overwrought nerves. He knows how terrific the onslaughts of Satan are. So, in His great faithfulness, He makes haste to stand by His servant who is in an agony of suffering because he has failed his Lord in a moment of weakness, with His strong hand outstretched, that hand which always lifts up and leads out His penitent children. He stands by with an encouraging "fear not," and a "be of good cheer," and He issues the command, "As thou hast testified of me, so must thou continue to bear witness."

AN APPEAL TO PASTORS.

Having sent out an appeal in the form of a letter to the pastors on behalf of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, it seems not amiss to let the readers of the paper know of the needs and plans of co-operation. Why not subscribers direct their friends to encourage pastors in their work by handing them their subscriptions before being solicited? The letter follows:

DEAR FRIEND:

To say that the Southern Christian Convention, recently held in Norfolk, Va., was great, is to say what those who attended it know. Reports of the great things done in the past biennium show the great forward steps taken. Never before have such strides been made in the history of the Convention. These undertakings of the Convention are now to be made good. Besides personal representatives and personal contact, we have no greater agency than our Church paper. To carry to success and completion the work of the Convention it will be necessary to utilize this means. To make the paper effective, it must be circulated. To reach the unreached must devolve upon the ministers as leaders. We were able to enlist in this work only 20 per cent of our ministers the last biennium; may we not hope to have 75 per cent engaged in this campaign of publicity work or the soliciting of subscribers for THE CHRISTIAN SUN?

During the past biennium the publishers carried out their contract at a sacrifice, having received less than the estimated cost. By a united effort on the part of the ministers in the bounds of the Southern Christian Convention, the deficiency or loss can be obviated. We have confidence to believe that our ministers will exert themselves to enable the publishers to break even. And our people will be given the best paper that can be afforded. The design is to meet the wants of the constituency and the maintenance of the Church's enterprises.

The editor died at his post, the workers pass out, but the work must go forward. The Convention has made provision for the conduct of THE SUN, which will be published as soon as possible. While a most excellent paper has been given our people, it is hoped to surpass anything our people have yet known.

In this appeal it is not the purpose to offer commissions or premiums, but to ask the co-operation of all who will assist in putting the paper into the homes of our Church people and others as far as possible. The editors serve without remuneration; why not you help to build up our institutions? Sample copies will be sent. The enclosed subscription blanks you can pass out to prospective subscribers; but better to take their subscription. Where a minister is in charge of more than one Church it might be well to name some member of the congregation to represent him. We are asking that this be a ministers' canvass for the next eight or ten weeks.

Yours truly,

P. J. KERNODLE,

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

A NAME SUFFICIENT.

The Christian Church, of course, claims to have been in existence since those eventful days in Syria so graphically described in Act 11:26: "And the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch." But many disciples, very zealous in their enthusiasm for some particular form of doctrine, or system of government, and very eager to emphasize their specific beliefs about these forms of doctrine, or systems of government, have shifted the name by which they were originally called, and are willing to this day to be called by names not found in Scripture or dictated by the Spirit in the early history of the Church. To illustrate: Those Christians who greatly desired to emphasize their manner of doing things in the conduct of their Church government, so enthusiastically and heartily emphasized their method of governing their societies, that they very happily called themselves Methodists. Or to illustrate further, and from a point of view of doctrine: Those Christians who wished to emphasize very emphatically a mode of baptism, very appropriately called themselves, or were called, Baptists—and so on, till instead of one family known as Christians only, we now have, for the sake of emphasis, either on a specific form of government or doctrine, eight kinds of white Methodists and nine kinds of colored Methodists; nine kinds of Presbyterians, fourteen varieties of white Baptists (this includes the "Duck River" variety), twenty-one varieties of Lutherans, six varieties of Dunkards, four kinds of Friends, and seventeen kinds of Menonites. There are others also who have not chosen their name from Scripture, but desire to be known under a name that will emphasize their point of departure from other of the Christian family, rather than their point of contact or union with others of the Christians, or even Protestant household. It would seem that the founders of these faiths and communions were more zealous to emphasize the doctrine or governmental function of their organizations than they were to emphasize the oneness, the unity, the solidarity of fellowship and of salvation in Jesus the Christ.

There was a time, let us admit, when a certain dogma, doctrine or form of government needed to be emphasized. One wonders if the emphasis has not now been sufficient; if the world has not learned; if theology and parliamentary practice have not sufficiently emphasized the points of departure and of difference between the different faith and forms and communions! This age of ours demands concert of activity, co-operation and emphasis on the character, the saving power, the unifying process of the life and the death of Jesus the world's Saviour and Redeemer.

His life, and His only, is sufficient to save this age. His name, and His name only, can be reckoned with and relied upon to redeem this evil time, and unite the forces and factors of Christendom for a solid impact upon the organized and ever-increasing forces of evil. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church. It would seem to be sufficient that the Church wear His name only.

THE NEW BIRTH.

When Jesus said to Nicodemus, "Ye must be born again," He was not only talking to Nicodemus; He was talking to all men and all women, all boys and all girls for all time to come. He was speaking a truth of universal application. He had in mind a thorough understanding of human nature. He spoke out of an acquaintance with human needs, human frailties, and human possibilities. He spoke a truth of scientific proof, of philosophic discovery and of religious application. You can no more abolish the truth, the fact and the necessity of the new birth than you can that of the old or natural first birth. "That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the spirit is spirit."

They tell us we are living in a plain, practical, scientific age. So be it. There is no plainer fact, no more thoroughly established scientific truth, no more practical a matter than the necessity, the actuality, the eternal demonstration of the new birth—the rebirth, the spiritual birth our Lord was telling Nicodemus about.

We are first of all born in the flesh. Ours is a natural body. About this flesh, about this natural body in earliest childhood, we begin to center our activities, organize our conduct. About the flesh, about material things, the mind thinks and the person acts. Around the body and its needs, the appetite and its wants, the flesh and its cravings, young life is first and fundamentally organized. God intended it and created it so. This first and fundamental tendency will continue and will persist through all the life of the body and the flesh, unless there is introduced a higher principle from without and from above, around which the growing and developing life is to organize itself.

Jesus was not enunciating a new principle to Nicodemus. He was declaring in simple terms, as He always did, an age-old truth. The children of Israel, if they are to be the children of light and redemption must organize their lives, not about the flesh-pots of Egypt as a center, but around the high and holy spiritual truth and facts of Sinai. The original organic principle of the flesh must be replaced with the spiritual Christ. The discovery must be made sooner or later, far better sooner than later, that self is insufficient as organic principle of life. Some other than self must be placed at the center as the fundamental, as the organic center of life.

"Nicodemus," said the Christ, "except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." For in the flesh he sees the things of the flesh with an eye of flesh. The kingdom of God is a spiritual kingdom. No flesh hath ever yet discovered, much less seen, that which is spiritual. Before you can see things spiritual, discern the kingdom of God, your life's original and organic principle of flesh must be supplanted with another and higher principle of organization and activity. Your life has been organized around self as a center, around the flesh as the basis of activity. It must be organized around God as center, around the spirit—yea, even around the spiritual Christ—as the basis of activity. Happy is that child who, in tender and teachable time, is led by Christian parents, teacher or pastor to the discovery that self is insufficient as a guiding principle in life. That there is another and a far better close at hand and to be relied on, who will help and who, coming into the life, is friend and companion indeed and at all times.

It was necessary that life in the flesh be organized about the flesh as a center. This is the first birth. It is equally as necessary that life in the spirit be organized about the spirit as a center. This is the second, or new birth. Lord Christ was scientifically accurate and philosophically safe, sound and secure when He said, except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God. Spiritual things are not discovered with the eye of flesh.

OLD LEBANON CHURCH SITE.

In pursuance of a decision of the Southern Christian Convention at Norfolk, a committee was appointed to visit and locate the Old Lebanon Church site, in Surry County, Va., and to secure funds and erect a suitable marker on this historic spot. On Thursday, May 22d, Judge J. F. West, of the Supreme Bench of Virginia; J. O. Atkinson, editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN; Bro. J. M. Darden, Suffolk, Va., as proxy for Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, Durham, N. C., and Dr. W. W. Staley, Suffolk, Va., by the request of the committee, went to Surry Courthouse and secured a copy of the old deed to the acre of ground which was given to the Christians for the purpose of erecting a suitable building for worship. Elsewhere in THE CHRISTIAN SUN this deed is published in full. It may be interesting to SUN readers to know that the original deed still exists, and is in the hands of one of the members of New Lebanon Church, which now stands about five miles from the original Lebanon site.

There was no difficulty in locating the spot. There is no question as to the title to the property. By a vote of the Eastern Virginia Conference at Holland last fall, the court of Surry County was requested to appoint the trustees of the Eastern Virginia Conference as trustees of the Lebanon Church property, to take the place of the trustees long since deceased. Judge West, who is chairman of this committee on memorials, is to have the land surveyed this week, and if possible get the order of court, confirming the present trustees. This done, the Executive Committee of the Eastern Virginia Conference will be asked to order a sale of about four-fifths of the land, the remainder being considered more than ample for the purpose of the permanent marker. It is an interesting fact that the Virginia State highway from Norfolk to Petersburg goes directly through this acre of ground, but leaving the old Church site entirely on the south side of the highway in a most beautiful and very conspicuous place.

On this site it is proposed to erect a monument worthy of the cause and the event it is to commemorate. Dr. Staley has been requested to draft the proper wording and submit to the committee, and Mr. J. M. Darden and Dr. W. W. Staley have been requested to consult stone and bronze dealers and get estimates on a suitable marker.

The present thought is that this cannot be purchased and established for less than $1,000, and the treasurer of the committee has the assurance of a friend that if we will put up a marker costing $1,000, this friend will pay one-tenth of the entire cost. It is in place to say here also that immediately that the motion was passed in the Convention at Norfolk creating the committee, a good and interested friend, Bro. V. E. Kitchens, Roanoke, Ala., handed the writer $5.00, to be used in the purchase of this, and also in the purchase of the O'Kelly Memorial, which this committee is also to look after erecting. Bro. Kitchens' gift is the first money to be paid in on this fund. It is going to take something like $2,000 to put the proper marker at Old Lebanon and to the memory of Rev. James O'Kelly.

History has it that in 1794 the various Churches that had followed O'Kelly, Rice Haggard and others, met in a General Conference at Lebanon Church, in Surry County, Va., and while casting about for a name, it is reported that Rev. Rice Haggard arose in the Conference and moved that all party and sectarian names be excluded and that henceforth we be known as Christians only, the name by which the disciples were first called at Antioch. It is said that about 1,000 entered into this organization in 1794, and from the time the name was adopted at Lebanon, their numbers rapidly increased.

To some, there may seem to be a discrepancy in this historic date 1794 and the date on the deed to the property, which was made in 1802, eight years later. There need be no discrepancy on this account, since in all probability there was an old building which the Christians and others had the free use of, but the title to which, with the land on which it was situated, was not actually deeded till 1802. Land was more abundant, the population not so great and deeds were not deemed as necessary in those days as at present. In fact, when a deed was given, it could not be recorded except by order of court. In all probability, our people used a building on the very site on which soon after, 1802, a larger and more permanent building was erected. The history of the matter seems to be straight and secure.

It seems a great pity indeed that we Christians have neglected this sacred historic spot so long. By putting a suitable marked there now, with proper wording, thousands and thousands who throng the State highway will stop and read, and, having read, will learn and know of an important event in Church history and our denominational life will be known in its beginnings to thousands who know nothing of it now. Now that we are getting at the work, let us do it properly and in a way and manner that shall be a credit to the noble souls and great minds who, at this sacred spot, called us forth to do and to dare in the name of Christian liberty.

THE HEART OF THEOLOGY.

The Apostle Paul is the father and founder of Christian theology. It is true that he wrote no systematic treatise on theology. But his analytic mind, and his habit of profound thinking, drove him to search out the basic fundamental things of religion. It was not sufficient for him that the doing of a certain thing was manifestly his Christian duty. He must analyze it until he had discovered the reason why it should be done. He must see it in its relation to the entire Christian life. He could not be content to accept isolated truths of the gospel. He must study them until he had seen them as part of a unified whole.

The only writings of Paul which we have are pastoral epistles, dealing with questions of doctrine and Christian practice. They were written with the purpose of correcting current mistakes and abuses. Had Paul been content with superficial thinking, they would have been practically useless to us today. But because he never stated a single duty without showing how it grew out of the basic things of salvation; because he never touched upon a doctrine of the gospel without tracing its relation to the entire plan of redemption—his writings are invaluable. And very naturally they have become the very foundation of Christian theology.

Granted that Paul is the father of Christian theology, we very naturally ask, "What is the heart of his teaching? What is the basic truth of his theology? To what end are these mighty powers and fundamental truths directed?" To Paul, the crucified, resurrected and reigning Christ is the foundation of his teachings and beliefs. And his ideal of Christian perfection is expressed in his love chapter, the thirteenth chapter of 1 Corinthians. Paul's theology is essentially a doctrine of love. He himself emphatically states that without love all the other things of belief and practice are nothing.

Jesus' summary of the law, and Paul's summary of the life lived in Christ, are absolutely identical. Jesus said: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, mind, soul, and strength. This is the first and greatest commandment. And the second is like unto it: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Now, listen to Paul: "And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not love, I am nothing." Insofar as I am acquainted with the writings of theologians, the only teaching of Paul that they have overlooked is the one that he makes the greatest of all—that of love. And when you have left out love, you have left out the heart of theology.

If theology has lost favor with the masses of Christians, it is because the theologians have missed Paul's wonderful gospel of love. Great teachers and great writers always face a grave danger when their disciples begin to write about their teachings. There is always the possibility that the disciple will fail to grasp the one central truth around which all other truths have been grouped, and thus distort or misrepresent the entire system. In a hasty survey of the field of systematic theology, it seems that theologians, in failing to make Paul's teaching of love the center of all their thinking, have done grave injustice to Paul. And because they have left out the love note, the harmony and beauty of religion as expressed in theology is incomplete.

In the light of these facts, it seems that the one supreme test of doctrine should be the test of love. No theology can rightfully be called Christian that does not breathe the very spirit of love for God and love for men. The only man who deserves to be branded as a heretic is the loveless man. The false system of doctrine is the one that fails to take account of the wonderful message of love. Love is the fulfilling of the law. God is love, and love is God.

Love is the heart of Pauline theology, and the inspiration of all life. It is the one perfect test of faith, of orthodoxy, and of life. Love never fails. S. C. H.

TRIBUTE TO A TRULY GOOD MAN.

Bro. Geo. D. Eastes has passed from labor to reward—and what a glorious reward is his! "He was a prince in the house of Israel." He lived his religion. His sincerity of life and consecration of soul were beautiful beyond words. Bro. Eastes was indeed "a man after God's own heart." His spirituality was so real, so genuine, so wholesome, so winsome! His life was a challenge to every minister to put away petty jealousies so common and so deplorable to the profession. He abhorred the practice of ministers who pick to pieces the character of other members of the profession, and truly pitied the men who pass sour grapes around in ministerial group conversations.

I remember on one occasion when a brother-minister was speaking depreciatively of the really great work done by another minister, Bro. Eastes gave the party a look of disapproval, as if he were not interested in such conversation, and with a kindly look from his noble eyes he seemed to ask the man, "Have you ever done as much for God as the man you are depreciating?" The look was enough. The conversation turned along paths of appreciation. His very presence was a challenge to purity of thought and speech.

It made his heart ache to hear ministers of the gospel lower their dignity as some ministers occasionally do when in story-telling contests with each other, and the moral tone of the stories drop off color. He was never willing to tell an off-color story just to create a laugh. The price was too great. Nor would he listen to stories and jokes that degrade—even though such had the sanction implied in being told by "men of the cloth."

He loved the truth; he loved the good; he loved the beautiful; he loved the pure; he loved his fellow-man; he loved God with all his heart, with all his mind, with all his soul, and with all his strength.

As a member of the Board of Evangelism and Life Service, he will be greatly missed. His counsel in the work of evangelism was most valuable. He was easily the leading vocational evangelist of the denomination. When revivals he conducted were over, there were no unpleasant reactions following. He knew how to co-operate with the pastor in such a way as to build up the work of a Church permanently. There was nothing sensational about his revival methods. His revival program was dignified and constructive throughout, the which can be said of so few evangelists. Of him it could be truly said, "He was a pastor-evangelist."

The span of his life was short. He was taken right in the prime of life—just thirty-four years old, dying as he did on his thirty-fourth birthday. And yet what a useful life! How much he accomplished, even though he has been fighting off death for the last ten years. In his brief life he has won many more souls for his Master than most ministers who live the allotted three-score years and ten.

I thank God for having known Geo. D. Eastes. I thank God for the privilege of having been associated with him on evangelistic commissions for the past ten years, and during the past two years on the Board of Evangelism and Life Service of the Christian Church. I thank God for his personal friendship. I thank God for the inspiration he has been to my life. I am glad we were friends. R. C. H.

The Seven Sins.

Mr. Alfred E. Luccock, the noted essayist, declares that the seven worst sins of Church architects are: (1) the basement Sunday school; (2) the Akron-plan Sunday school; (3) the pulpit in the corner; (4) the preponderance of brass organ pipes; (5) sliding doors; (6) uncomfortable pews; and (7) impossible ventilation.

All these are, as Mr. Luccock says, grave sins, and no Church should attempt to build without carefully studying the best Church plans and employing a Church architect with modern ideas, and a knowledge of Christian education.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Ownership of land is a big asset in human character. There is no better anchor for human safety than deed to land. It is this fact in human experience that inspires the suggestion for ownership of homes even in cities. Land is known as real estate. It is the only possession that is safe. It cannot be stolen. It cannot be destroyed. It cannot be removed. Ownership is more than occupation. Men will take better care of houses and lands they own than rented homes or farms. The best citizens are those who love their country and their homes. Vagrants are the homeless, the houseless, the farmless. The best deed in the world is a grave, and the best possession is land. Economy is the finest on land. Extravagance is greatest among renters and homeless. Patriotism has its roots in the soil. The reason why cities are worse than the country is because there are so many homeless, shiftless, unsettled, unemployed.

Whatever else may inspire civic pride, the love of country is at the foundation of stable government and honest, happy people. The man in the country who owns land feels different, looks different, behaves different, is different from tenants and renters who change from farm to farm. Any man will fix up things better where he owns and stays. Much is said and written in these days about farmers. There are gratuitous advisers, suggestions for farms and farmers by men who never plowed a furrow nor planted a seed. The presumption of some people with reference to farming makes one feel like quoting, "Keep back thy servant also from presumptuous sins." Farmers have as much sense and as good judgment in their business as other people have in theirs. Farming is the largest business in the world. There are more people engaged in farming than any other business. It is the most essential business in the world. It is the oldest business in the world. No other business can ever supplant farming. It is here to stay. Such a business can never fail. While the earth remaineth, seedtime and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night shall not cease." Necessities continue while man lives upon the earth. God has made it so.

As to financial conditions, the farming class is not so poor as some politicians and writers would lead you to believe. If all classes had to pay their debts within ten days, the farmers would have more left than any other large class. The small business man lives from hand to mouth from day to day. The farmer does not live that way. Most of the great men come from the farms. They say that the race runs out in great cities within five generations. The recruits come from the country where there is honest work, time to think, the suggestion of God, a real Sabbath, and real homes. Man is at his best when he lives close to nature. Artificial life is a sham. Neighborly feeling, strong friendships, spiritual and intellectual aspirations, all thrive in the country where the sun shines, the zephyrs creep over fields and gardens and carry the fragrance of apple blossoms, honeysuckles, and roses into the homes of tired men and women who rest at night.

W. W. Staley.

MUNCIE (IND.) LETTER.

The news of the death of Dr. J. P. Barrett brought a distinctive sense of personal loss and sorrow to this writer. My home Church was his first pastoral charge, when he was a student at Richmond College, and I a small country boy. The keen interest he then manifested in me, his tender and earnest conversations with me then concerning my spiritual interests, in his visits to my father's home, stirred the inward promptings of my young heart toward Jesus Christ. Through all these intervening years, even at times when we differed, and some time very widely, the warmest friendship existed. It was he who seemed first to discover that in my young life there was a battle going on with reference to my call to the Christian ministry. He led me into the kingdom, received me into the Church, introduced me into the biblical class, prayed with me, counseled me, while his example of loyal devotion to the Christian Church and Word of God wonderfully lent inspiration to my life.

He was the last of the ordaining presbytery when I was ordained, and has been a ready and loyal friend and counselor in the deepest sorrows and trials of my life. He has never once failed me. He was my friend, and I was his. Why should I not here shed a tear and feel a loss? I was near him when at times almost alone he fought with pen, and before Conventions, for the college, the orphanage, the cause of missions in the South.

A great man has passed away, but left an imperishable influence in the world in which he served and wrought for the kingdom of God. His life was not without mistakes and imperfections any more than other men, but he will be greatly missed. In harness to the last, his tired, weary body failed, and his great soul has gone home to God. Dr. Staley, of Suffolk, Va., is the only remaining minister with us now with whom I was associated in my early ministry and school days. How rapidly in recent years have the ranks been broken and servants of God laid down their tasks to others and passed to their reward!

It may be of interest to some of our friends in the South to know that our work at Muncie moves encouragingly. Last Sunday we observed Mothers' Day, both in the Sunday School and Church service. The auditorium was beautifully decorated with choice flowers, and six canary birds added to the occasion, especially in the Sunday School. During the last year our school had doubled in average attendance and offerings, while the membership and congregations have increased. We have recently received seven good members into membership, and the older people who have stood by the work through a long period of struggle and reverses say that the work was never so promising as at present, since soon after the present building was erected. But it is a most difficult field, as after a number of years it was practically abandoned until just before the writer came to it a little more than three years ago. Just a handful remained, and often only one man in the congregation. We had 153 at Sunday School last Sunday and about 100 at Church service.

WHAT IS EDUCATION?—AN AGE-OLD QUESTION.

By Wm. Thornton Whitsett.

Many Definitions of Education.

A quaint old writer once said: "In ye case of a very sick man, when ye call in many doctors, each doctor will have some various and sundry opinion of ye sick man, and will desire to physic ye sick man with many and curious remedies; beware lest ye many doctors, and ye many remedies, kill ye sick man, rather than cure him." This comes to mind as we look back over the history of the education and training of youth, and as we read the various and sundry ideas and theories of education that have been so plentiful in every age. There are able thinkers who even declare that with all our so-called advances that we have not yet arrived at a point where we can truthfully claim to have reached any settled science of education.

One has only to consider the educational field of his own time to learn that theories and practices have been accepted and followed for years, only to be rejected and cast aside in favor of other new and seemingly more promising prospects. Transition and change have been the order of the educational world for decades, and even today we are very far from any fixed conclusions along many important lines. Primary education has seen many upheavals, and high school and college standards are called into question today on every side. Unsatisfactory results have seemed in many cases to demand radical revision of methods.

Dr. Arnold's statement, "I believe the universities are the best places in the world for those who can profit by them, so I think for the idle and self-indulgent they are about the very worst," has never been very seriously questioned. Burke inquires, "Is the world generally educated by reading a parcel of books? No. Restraint of discipline, emulation, examples of virtue and of justice, form the education of the world." John Locke claimed that in one hundred people, ninety or more were what they were because of the instruction they had received. Lord Macaulay, in a speech, once said that if we were to leave out altogether the question as to whether the English system of education be good or bad, the fact would still remain that those who were leaders in our schools would be the leaders in the affairs of life. He was stressing the importance of application, industry, the power to think, the ability to mingle with one's fellows, and the formation of much good habits as a proper school might be expected to give. He went so far as to say, "If the Ptolemaic system were taught at Cambridge instead of the Newtonian, the senior wrangler would, nevertheless, be in general a superior man to the wooden spoon.

If instead of learning Greek we learned the Cherokee, the man who understood the Cherokee best, who made the best and the most melodious Cherokee verses, who comprehended most accurately the effect of the Cherokee particles, would generally be a superior man to him who was destitute of these accomplishments." It was his idea that discipline, and order, and the power to do consecutive work had such training power that they rose far above in value the subject that might be used as a means toward the desired end.

Milton's fine definition comes to mind: "A complete and generous education fits a man to perform justly, skillfully, and magnanimously all the offices of peace and war." Plato's claim for education was, "to develop in the body and in the soul all the beauty and all the perfection of which they are capable." Broadly speaking, then, education is the effort of the adult members of society to shape and fashion the coming generations in accord with some certain fixed ideals. As these ideals have varied, so have educational systems varied. Perfection, or approximate perfection, would be vastly different in Rome, Athens, and the New York of today. When goals and standards have changed, education must change with them to adapt itself to the new criterions.

Wendall Phillips once said, "Education is the only interest worthy the deep, controlling anxiety of the thoughtful man." Wise old Horace Mann, who did so much for American educational efforts, agreed, "Education alone can conduct us to that enjoyment which is, at once, best in quality and infinite in quantity."

Early Educational Methods.

The aim of Greek education was to fit the young for their places in the State. Only a few could follow knowledge for its own sake; the chief aim was citizen-training. The boys were given the training at Athenian standards; the girls were expected to receive a domestic training. The schools of the Sophists opened the way for the demagogue with his flowers of oratory, ripening only into the Dead Sea fruit of misdirected government; such culminating in so much sterile, unreal rhetoric that Justinian dissolved the university in A. D. 529.

The early Roman father trained his sons in the duties of moral, civic, and relgiious obligation. The coming into Rome of the decadent Greek culture led to the establishment of the grammatici, or schools for the teaching of grammar and literature and oratory. There followed a State system of organization for the higher schools giving Hellenized Roman education. We may find this system worked out fully in the Institutio Oratoria, by Quintillian, which is the most wonderful and systematic treatise on education which has come down to us from the ancient world.

Coming on down the years, we find the early Christian leaders somewhat perplexed as to what should be done with the scholarship of the pagan world. Clement, in 150 A. D., and Origen, in 185 A. D., both took the position that Christians could live lives of faith and obedience even in ignorance, but that only through culture, even the culture handed down from pagan Greece and Rome, which expanded the mind and opened to it the mysteries of philosophy, could they reach a true understanding of the intellectual truths of the faith. Both St. Jerome, 346 A. D., and St. Augustine, 354 A. D., held that pagan literary and rhetorical culture are good if only held subservient to the guidance of a Christian life.

The intellectual activities of the eleventh and twelfth centuries resulted in the founding of the universities of Western Europe. In these pagan scholarship as represented by the literary remains of Greece and Rome mingled with the Church teachings of the earlier centuries. The German universities came later, Prague in 1348, and Vienna in 1365.

Feudalism came along later to add its peculiar ideas to education. The historian Hallam recognizes this in saying: "Three powerful spirits have moved to give a predom'nating influence and impulse to the energies of mankind; these are the spirits of religion, of liberty, and of chivalry." The following period of scholasticism finally merged the accumulated stores of knowledge and theology. Later on in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries the universities began to ralize that it was their function to investigate and open up new lines of thought, and new sources of truth, as well as to comment on the stores of the accumulated knowledge of the past. This opened a new day for education, and gave it an outlook on the future.

The great nations of the world have come to claim the right of demanding a certain minimum of education for their future citizens. This does not give the State a monopoly of education, such as Napoleon's despotic plan claimed; neither does it grant the State any right to impose any peculiar religious views upon the child. It is simply citizen-training with the view of State-preservation through a trained and cultured citizenship.

The problem of lower, or elementary, education must always be the greatest problem, for it will always be the problem of the great majority of citizenship. Higher training for those of special and extraordinary talent is desirable, but it will in all times be a minor problem as compared with the necessary training of the great masses of our populations in all countries. Again, higher education for the elite of intellectual power can never be a strictly local matter anywhere, for the number will be so limited who have the ability to take the very highest training that it will always be necessary to gather them at strategic points covering a wide territory in order to reduce, so far as possible, the cost of higher or strictly university training. Special faculties devoted to higher training can only be maintained at great cost, and their range of territory must be as wide as possible to bring the cost of strictly higher training within somewhat reasonable bounds, whether offered at private cost or at public expense.

Any institution that offers a range of work too wide for the reasonable accomplishment of its limited faculty, thereby advertises itself as proposing to do the impossible. This easily explains why the world has never had many really great universities for the highest possible training. Much has been lost in the past from an attempt to do too much, and to cover a range too wide, with limited faculties, no matter how able certain individual members of these faculties may be.

Education in Modern Times.

Our chief interest, of course, is with education in the United States; however, it may be well to note the great nations that have in our modern times made notable advances in educational matters.

Education in England, our mother country, is in our times the outgrowth of long and tedious processes working for centuries in English life. The earlier influences were religious rather than economic, although Henry VIII did give us the first hint of the State's taking part in the training of children by his laws for apprentices. By the close of the seventeenth century, the classics began to yield to industrial demands in the schools. It was near the close of the eighteenth century before the need for a State system of day schools was fully realized. In 1839 education was first recognized in a separate office called the committee of council on education. The well-known elementary education act was passed as recently as 1870.

In Ireland the problems of government have greatly delayed the progress of training the young, and it was as late as 1892 before she succeeded in passing her Irish education act.

Scotland early saw to it that the most promising pupils in her parish schools were offered further opportunities in higher schools. Her act of 1908 was to strengthen her secondary schools chiefly.

Belgium permits religious training under the direction of the clergy; it is not certain that this will be permanent. Private schools receive much recognition.

Switzerland, with her central authority vested in the canton, is a fine type of local democratic rule in education. She has given us many ideas worthy of careful study.

Everybody knows of the efficient German schools, and that with the growth of the Prussian State, education and training went hand in hand with material and national development. One result of Jena was to focus attention upon education as a means of national redemption. From elementary grades, on to her universities, her educational work has claimed the studious attention of the thinkers of all lands.

In the republic of France we have almost a complete State system for our study. As early as 1791, primary training was decreed free and compulsory. In 1806, Napoleon centralized education in the Imperial University. M. Duruy, in 1869, made marked advances in the education of girls by State enactment. The republic has always been active in its encouragement of all that pertains to training the youth of France.

The first settlers in the United States brought with them their advanced European ideas of education, and were further spurred on by the spirit of freedom and liberty so soon to develop all over the new country. They early recognized that free, democratic government carried with it the idea of universal education. Hindered by the hardships of early pioneer times, struggles with the Indians, with the mother country, and from other sources, nevertheless, the idea of general education was an early conception of the majority. As early as 1647, Massachusetts passed an act which really founded her school system, and became in a way the model for all the States of the Union. In a colony of only 20,000 people, this act which was the first of its kind in the world's history, marked an era, and an advance never before reached. It will repay careful study from those who wish to know the true beginnings of American education. The ordinance for the government of the northwest colonies, passed in 1787, recognized the necessity of aiding and encouraging education, and this has been governmental policy ever since.

The United States government has given in land grants and money over $300,000,000 to assist in education among the several States. The U. S. Bureau of Education was formed in 1867. We now have in the United States about 25,000,000 pupils in our schools, taught by over 500,000 teachers, with $1,000,000,000 invested in school property. We are spending about $30 per pupil annually to keep the vast work going. This tremendous business, because of its cost and its importance, is worthy the careful study of every patriotic citizen. Its problems are the problems of all; its future, if rightly directed, will largely solve the difficulties of the future of the country. It has been neglected in the thought of many; its powers have been abused by politicians and demagogues; it offers a field for some of the finest constructive work of the century, and it is worthy the best intellectual effort of the wisest of our citizenship. Its popularity is universal; it only remains to see that, through this vast machinery, we secure such products in properly trained and cultured citizens as will make secure the days of the future life of these United States.

BOY TRAFFIC COPS.

The famous General Butler, head of Philadelphia's police force, addressing several hundred members of the safety patrol of the Rapid Transit Company in the central branch of the Y. M. C. A. in Philadelphia, urged that the work of the patrol be continued.

The duty of the patrol, which is composed of selected public school pupils, is to serve, to some extent, as traffic police in assisting other children and old people to cross the streets. The members are on duty in all kinds of weather. As a result of their activities, there has been a marked decrease in the number of accidents to school children.

Records found in the tomb of Tutankhamen indicate that there really was a Helen of Troy and there was a Trojan War, and that the historical records of Greece on this subject were based on fact and not the imagination of a roving Greek minstrel.

SCHOOL OF MISSIONS.

The Norfolk district one-day school of missions was held at the Newport News Christian Church April 11, 1924.

Meeting was called to order by the superintendent, Mrs. J. E. Cartwright, and, following a song service, the devotional period was conducted by Mrs. R. B. Wood, of Norfolk.

Minutes of 1923 meeting were adopted as read. Thirteen organizations responded to the roll call of Churches, as follows: First Church, Rosemont, South Norfolk, Berea (Norfolk), Elm Avenue, Portsmouth, Christian Temple, Old Zion, Ocean View, Newport News.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson, mission secretary, introduced the officers of local societies and Conference officials. Brief responses were made.

The annual message of Mrs. J. E. Cartwright was filled with information of the local and general work, and was a stirring appeal for better service.

The addresses of the morning were given by Mrs. W. H. Denison, president of the Woman's Mission Board, and Miss Pattie Coghill, field secretary of Southern Christian Convention. Dr. Atkinson spoke on our mountain work.

The chair appointed committees as follows: Nominations—Mrs. F. A. Osborne, Mrs. L. I. Taylor; place of meeting—Mrs. W. H. Baker, Mrs. C. H. Coles; resolutions—Mrs. L. W. Stagg, Mrs. J. H. Cooper. Following prayer by Dr. Atkinson, adjournment was made for lunch.

Afternoon Session.

The afternoon session was opened with song service, after which devotional exercises were led by Mrs. M. J. W. White. The choir furnished special music at intervals during the day, and among other numbers were a violin solo and a vocal solo by Mr. W. H. Baker.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson brought the message of the afternoon, and emphasized how far-reaching the influence of one righteous person could be.

Mrs. W. H. Denison conducted a discussion period, and gave a brief review of the new study books, leaflets and pamphlets; also explained many points of interest about the general work.

The superintendent made an appeal for the Christian Missionary, and stated her goal for the year would be organized mission work in every Church in her district.

The reports of committees were made and adopted. Next place of meeting—Christian Temple. Officers for ensuing year—Mrs. J. E. Cartwright, superintendent; Mrs. L. W. Stagg, secretary; Mrs. J. W. Lewis, treasurer.

Much appreciation was expressed for the splendid entertainment and lunch given by the ladies of the Church.

Closing prayer by Mrs. W. H. Denison.

AMERICA'S MULTIPLYING WEALTH.

Since it is wealth and not poverty, luxury and not want, indulgence and not self-denial that have destroyed the governments and nations of the past, surely America needs to take counsel from history and carefully guard her steps. We are, according to statisticians, not only the richest nation in the world, but the richest nation that ever was in the world. A metropolitan daily had this statement last week: "The wealth of America has multiplied to such an extent that its own industries are, for the first time in history, unable to employ it all."

When one thinks of our manifold industries and the millions and billions employed in carrying on our gigantic corporations and enterprises, such a statement staggers the imagination. "And this is said at a time and in a year in which," continues the same paper, "business is proceeding at a fast rate compared with all years except 1920-21 and the early part of 1923." That is to say that, though business is brisk and buoyant everywhere, our industries cannot employ our wealth, for the first time in all our history.

This information was given out by the metropolitan daily referred to, in commenting on the fact that the State of North Carolina borrowed fifteen million dollars from one bank in New York at a lower rate of interest than the United States government has sold its bonds for since the Liberty Loan days, and the bank taking this North Carolina loan announced that these bonds were not for resale, but to hold. Hence, the comment of the paper quoted, to the effect that industries are, for the first time in history, unable to employ all our wealth.

Such an appalling fact should create in us a sense of awe and anxiety rather than a spirit of pride or a boasting. God is the giver and owner of all wealth, and unless a nation and the people use God's wealth to further His kingdom and uplift His subjects and improve the conditions of His world, He will hold them to account, and in the day of their boasting and pride will bring them to naught. Egypt, Babylon, Greece and Rome perished with their civilizations from the earth because, through their increasing wealth and prosperity, they forgot the virtues, the habits and the traits of character which come from proper worship and service and consecration to high and holy ideals. A nation needs to beware in the day of her prosperity.

THE FRUIT OF ELON COLLEGE—CHRISTIAN CHARACTER BUILDING.

(Baccalaureate address Sunday P. M., May 25, 1924, at Elon College, by President W. A. Harper.)

"See that thou make all things according to the pattern showed to thee in the mount."—Heb. 8:5.

This building in which today, for the first time, a graduating class has met, is erected according to a pattern. Long before a brick was laid, the architect knew not only the materials that would be used, but the form of the finished structure. That is why all its parts fit together in unity and that the building itself is a thing of beauty and, we devoutly trust, is destined to be a joy forever.

Last September, in the unfinished, temporary chapel of the Alamance Building, in the opening message to the student body, I tried to be the interpreter of the spirit of our alma mater. We found that spirit to be a composite of certain spiritual elements which were discussed under the reverent search for truth, the encouragement of a wholesome social life, athletics as promotive of the welfare of our bodies, which are the temples of God, unalloyed allegiance to Jesus as Lord and Master, crowned by the persistent pursuit of Christian character, without which Elon will have fallen short of her most cherished ideal.

For four years now you who constitute the class of '24 have lived and loved and worked in the climate of this environment. The spirit of Elon has acted and reacted upon you, and you have acted and reacted upon it. It is a fundamental law not only of physics, but also of the spirit, that action is always equal to reaction. Some of you, therefore, have been influenced more than others by the Elon spirit, and at the same time and for the same reason some of you have contributed more than others to the efficacy and pervasiveness of that spirit. When I hear that some student, or citizen, or alumnus, or faculty member has sneered at that motto of our alma mater—"Christian Character, First and Always"—I always know that person is not adding his full influence to the building up of Elon's spirit; but at the same time I always feel sure that time will correct the occasion for such a sneer. I say this because my conviction is unalterable that Christian character is the finest flower of humanity, its crowning glory, and that ultimately Christian character shall grip the imagination and conquer the hearts of all men. Time will glorify Elon's motto now prophetically embraced.

We are living in the age of youth. It is better that we should. In youth is the hope of the race. Old men dream dreams and occasionally have nightmares, but youth sees visions and untrammeled by experience, valiantly sallies forth to make them real. We are told that youth has revolted in our day and declared war on the elders. There is always encouragement in such a situation, provided the basic elements of character are adhered to in framing the constitution of the new social order to which the revolutionists have committed themselves. But there is only disaster ahead when these basic elements are repudiated. Something must happen in Russia before the liberty achieved over a thousand years of suffering under the Romanoffs is safe for that truly lovable people. The dominant party in Russia is openly and avowedly atheistic. No man can belong to it till he has repudiated God. No nation yet has been able to survive the loss of its faith in and commitment to God. Grote properly places the fall of Greece in the brilliant days of her intellectuals, for it was they who destroyed Greece when they destroyed her idolatrous religion and gave her nothing better to satisfy the innate, incurable longing of the heart of man after God.

Here and there are no doubt groups of youth in our country who have revolted against God as well as against the traditions of the elders, but the youth I know is of a different character. They are restive, but restiveness is evidence of life. It but needs to be harnessed and directed in the servic of mankind. The spirit of youth, as I know it, is not a mere protest. It is a protest against certain restraints plus a devotion to certain ends, and in such a situation as I have said there is always hope. I say it deliberately, there is no ground for pessimism because of the revolt of youth. I am glad it has revolted.

The only ground of pessimism is in the eclipse of the idealism of the age. In 1917 our country was electric with the aspiration after brotherhood and service and democracy. We were ready, all of us, we declared, to lay our all on the altar of sacrifice for the sake of humanity. We were entering a war to end war, and any man who came out of it without having nobly sacrificed was to be regarded not only as a slacker, but as a traitor as well to humanity's highest good. This doctrine of social solidarity appealed with alluring charm to the altruistic heart of youth. They literally flocked to the colors. They believed the eloquent protestations of their elders and, as youth always does, acted on their faith. It was a glorious revival of altruism that swept our country in those fitful days of national dedication to the cause of world brotherhood.

The war was won. Thanks to the speedy termination of the conflict made possible by the noble spirit of our youth's entrance into the fight, all but one hundred thousand of our boys returned. And what did they find? They found they had been betrayed by their leaders while they were gone. We had every reason to believe then that the fine, the holy altruism of the men at the front would be transferred upon their return to the Church, as the peace-time agency and conservator of the altruistic spirit. The opposite is true. There has been a spiritual depression. We are told such is the aftermath of every war. This is true and ever and always for the very same reason. Selfish, designing men following every war betray the high enthusiasm of youth, who are always the soldiers, and they resent such betrayal. That is why even a war like the World War undertaken from altruistic motives results in spiritual decline.

When our soldiers returned to their country after their victorious crusade in which they sought nothing for themselves, what did they find? They found America the money center of the world, with two-thirds of the gold of the world locked up in her bank vaults, made possible by their sacrifice. They found that by clever manipulation, this enormous increase in wealth had been concentrated in the hands of a few. They found that the war had produced a noxious crop of 23,000 additional millionaires. They found evidence of graft and scandal in the executive offices of the government, of which the end is not yet. They found the Senate of the nation already committed by signatures in advance to defeat any treaty of peace that promised the ending of wars. They found the press of the nation in the subsidized service of plutocracy. Their hearts sank within them, and they revolted. They had a right to revolt. Those who were the trusted master-builders of the edifice of world brotherhood changed the blueprints and used cheap materials in violation of the agreed specifications, deliberately betrayed the owners, and those owners have rebelled against such dastardly methods. There would be no revolt of youth today had the work of reconstruction been perfected according to the pattern of idealism in accordance with which the ground was to be cleared for the building by the heroic sacrifice of our young life.

But the fact that youth has been thus betrayed is no defense of their rejection of the principles for which they so valiantly did battle. The march of altruism is temporarily halted, but not permanently impeded. The very revolt of youth against the high treason of their betrayers promises a better day of hope, wherein youth's own leadership seated in places of authority will achieve the redemption of their disappointed and delayed aspirations.

The spirit of altruism is certainly not dead in Elon College. Your young hearts have not been embittered by the disappointments your spirits have sustained. Your choice of lifework is guarantee that I speak forth the words of truth and soberness. There are forty of you. With all the world of opportunity before you to choose from, your selection of the vocations in which you will invest your lives is highly indicative that the spirit of your alma mater has functioned with high success in your decisions. You have deliberately and without undue influence from others chosen to devote your energies to the constructive callings with which the spirit of altruism is properly associated. Sixteen of you have decided to give yourselves to some form of teaching in general or religious education, seven are to be ministers of the gospel, three will be foreign missionaries, six are to enter what the public styles the learned professions, four are to engage in business, and a like number in the scientific professions. Twenty-six of you are to enter callings wherein the reward will be the consciousness that you have well served your day and the cause of the Master, and I am sure, from my personal acquaintance with the motives of your lives, that the fourteen of you who are to engage in business or the learned or scientific professions have been actuated by the highest considerations of service to mankind in arriving at your decisions. My heart leaped for joy recently when one of your number told me a large group of you had gotten together and given it as your deliberate judgment that no student could spend four years at Elon and go away with the thought of material gain as a life-satisfying aspiration. Truly the spirit of altruism is not dead in our college, and I am persuaded it is alive also in other colleges. While altruism thus abounds in youth, there is hope for humanity.

But altruism may become cynicism. It may also degenerate into atheism. The only guarantee that it will go forward to full fruitage in the years that lie ahead is that its devotees incorporate in their swift-flying shuttle of character-making the cardinal principles of Christian idealism. Youth must be alert always to weave its character out of the materials of Christian brotherhood and social solidarity. Their lives must be constructed according to the pattern given mankind in the Sermon on the Mount and in the noble example of Jesus. There is no other pattern that can bring to humanity a completed structure fashioned in terms of its cherished hopes and fondest aspirations.

I am happy that every one of you has committed his or her life to the program of Jesus. It is the noblest commitment you will ever make. Now, be careful to shape and fashion the edifice of your personal character and of your social achievement according to the pattern your alma mater has for four eventful years held up before you and which she honestly believes is in accord with the pattern Jesus has enunciated for His kingdom. As your alma mater has further time for interpretation, she will no doubt find errors in her practical applications of the spirit which has grown up on our campus and which you have helped to generate. It would be calamitous were it otherwise. Growth and development and progress in the understanding of the principles entering into the constitution of Christian character are always desirable, and the record of Christian history testifies that such growth and development and progress have characterized every age. Enlarged conceptions of Christian truth are not only desirable, but also inevitable. But the record of Christian history shows no amendment of the Sermon on the Mount and reveals no slightest flaw in the teachings of Jesus. With assurance and with reverent consecration, we may safely commit our lives to the program of His teaching and endeavor with all our powers to follow the leadership of His spirit in our efforts at personal and social character building.

Let us this day reconsecrate ourselves to the service of God and of brotherman. Let us determine in all the relations of life, in all its experiences, in all its vicissitudes, to motivate our conduct in terms of Christian idealism. Let us reverently seek the truth, being sure it will lead us straight to God, the author of all truth. Let us strive for wholesomeness in every aspect of social and recreational life. Let us in consequence of our commitment to the program of Jesus give ourselves whole-heartedly to the work of building Christian character for ourselves and in the social order. So shall the spirit of Elon rejoice in you, her sons and daughters, in that you have incorporated her own spirit and the spirit of her Master in the pattern of your lives.

OUR PLEDGES to Men and Millions are Sacred, Solemn and Binding.

These obligations were made through the Church to the Kingdom of God and to all that pertains to building up that Kingdom in the world, so far as our Christian Church is concerned. As Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has so pertinently pointed out: "A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations--'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42)--but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

Many are making great sacrifices to meet these obligations and pay these pledges. Every one who fails to do so not only produces paralysis in his own moral system, but to that extent paralyses the efforts and sacrifices that the faithful and the loyal make.

BEAR IN MIND MEN AND MILLIONS MEAN AND STAND FOR ALL THAT THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH MEANS AND STANDS FOR.

—REMEMBER—

that the fourth year ends April 30, 1924.

After that, we have only one more year in which to meet these obligations. Unless we put forth a mighty effort to pay some on these pledges during the last quarter of the fourth year, there is great danger that we will fail entirely, because of the bulk of our pledge looming up before us in a one-year period.

Paying SOMETHING by April 30, 1924, will make it easy to pay ALL by April 30, 1925. Where there is a will there is a way, and God always helps those who try to their capacity to help themselves.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

A GREAT CONQUEST.

"Lord, teach us to pray."—Luke 11: 1.

The disciples had observed two things: that John the Baptist had taught his disciples to pray, and that their Master was a man of prayer; also they felt their need of prayer. Silently and courteously they wait until Jesus has concluded His prayer, and then piously say, "Lord, teach us to pray." In their request they had unconsciously uttered a powerful prayer, and it was to receive from the Master an immediate answer. He gave them the greatest prayer of the world and as enduring as the ages. The first two words of this prayer sounds the keynote of all prayer and has in them the very essence of heaven's ministry. "Our Father." The word "our" does away with all selfish ideas and teaches to be all inclusive in our petitions. We cannot pray as Jesus taught us if we leave out others.

Prayer.—Our Father, we do not know how to pray as we ought. Teach us to pray, that we may live and love like our Master. In His name we ask it. Amen.—Rev. T. E. White, Windsor, Va.

TUESDAY.

LISTEN AND LEARN FROM THE OTHER FELLOW.

"Let not the wise man glory in his own wisdom."—Jer. 9:23.

"Thou shalt not rule with rigor, but shalt fear thy God."—Lev. 25:43.

Perhaps you are in a position to dictate to others what is to be done all day.

Do you live up to that privilege?

You know that there never existed but one faultless man; one man whom all Christians acknowledge as being without error and always right.

You have not the nerve or the temerity to place yourself on the same footing, have you?

You cannot name one man who has always made correct decisions.

You have not an acquaintance who is flawless, why set yourself up?

You might even learn a little from the other fellow if you would listen instead of bossing and cramming your ideas down some one's throat all the time.

You are so full of your own conceit that you shrug your shoulders or sit back bored and yawn even when you hear another advance an idea.

In fact, you are so filled with yourself and your own purposes and ideas that none can get a wedge in to tell you anything any way.

You are missing a lot of knowledge you would appreciate if somebody could knock it into your brain hard enough to have it penetrate. Wake up! (Copyright, 1924, International Feature Service, Inc.)

Prayer.—Eternal and Heavenly Father, at the beginning of every day teach us how to humble ourselves before Thee and our fellowman, that we may better realize the glory of true service. Help us to sit at the Saviour's feet and drink of His spirit of life. May the spirit of self-abandonment be ours, and may we concentrate in His service, working the works of Him who has sent us into the world. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

GET YOUR SATISFACTION FROM THE KNOWLEDGE THAT YOU ARE IMPROVING.

"Whosoever shall humble himself shall be exalted."—Matt. 23:2.

What is your greatest aim in life? Is it to exalt and put forward yourself, or is it your job which concerns you most and your ambition that it shall count for something in the world for the good of mankind? If you gave as much thought and energy to the latter as you do to the things which you think will bring plaudits to you, would you not be better off?

At that meeting the other day, was it more important to you to shine rather than to forget yourself in the effort to complete your job—duties—in a satisfactory manner, and in a way that would serve others best?

Take an inventory of what you have done each day and get the most satisfaction not in words of sympathy and praise from others, but in the conscious knowledge that you are improving. "Study to show thyself approved of God." "Whosoever wants to be great among you must be your servants, and whosoever wants to be first must be your slave."—Mark 10:43-44.

Prayer.—Dear Father, with longing and expectant hearts we cry unto Thee. Sharpen, we beseech Thee, our spiritual perceptions, that we may know Thy will and Thy way. Grant Thy cleansing to our souls, that we may sanctify all things that we touch. Help us to do more than we did yesterday, and make our job better and life happier for others. Amen.

THURSDAY.

BEING BORN AGAIN.

"Except ye be converted and become as a little child, ye shall in no wise enter the kingdom of heaven."—Matt. 18:3.

When this message was brought to the world, the whole creation seemed a failure. It is appalling to realize the dark background of pessimism that existed in the time of Christ's coming to the world. Riches were with only a few. Poverty and misery were characteristic. Hundreds of years without a revelation of God had robbed the people of the Messianic hope. Life had been robbed of motive. Pleasure had failed and degeneracy, beastiality, and insanity were greatly prevalent. The best of religious teachers desirved to be called "whited sepulchres." One group invoked maledictions on the other until there was no peace. Under these circumstances, Christ came and brought the new hope, and with it the new birth for every soul, and in his life he showed them how.

Something new then comes into the life of the world. The prophecy was fulfilled and at last salvation was at hand. From that time the world has grown toward that perfect hope.

As Christ was born into the world, so is He born into the heart and life, to dispel every doubt, halt every failure, cleanse from every sin, and make new creatures of us all, and except we be converted and be born of Him, we cannot see the kingdom of God.

Prayer.—Dear Father, forgive us. Help us to realize that the wicked are cut off. Show us that without the new life in Him, we are in slippery places, and to walk that way comes to want and loss of soul. Show us that to be with Thee, and in Thee, is to have Thy hand for guidance, Thy counsel for inspiration and Thy strength for glory. In His name we ask it. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE UPWARD LOOK.

"I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills from whence cometh my help."—Ps. 121:1. (Read Ps. 103—don't fail.)

Our help comes from thousands of sources—lands, woods, hills, dales, fields, gardens, flowers, vineyards, fruits, harvests, and back of it all is God handing these thing to us. All nature lifts up to bless us, and never more so than in spring, with all its verdent glory. Let us lift up our heads and give thanks.

Somebody said, "One thing in this world never looks up—hogs." Watch them when you will, scarcely do they ever lift their snouts from the ground, perhaps never unless you have something to give them which they can choke down their throats. Chase them, and they blunder away, noses still to the ground, crunching and grunting. They are always bent on gorging themselves. They never look up.

There are humans who seem to have no appreciation of God's bounties in His beautiful world, and no thought of the Creator and Father Himself. They put their faces to the ground with never a reflection of soul within, nor of the good God who gives all things. They are blind to everything but that of getting for themselves. Are we?

Prayer.—Our dear Father, we thank Thee for all Thy goodness to us as a family and as individuals, and for all the love and care with which Thou hast surrounded us. Help us to ever look up and be thankful, be filled with Thy goodness, love and follow Thee all the way. In His name we ask it. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE MEANING OF THE CROSS.

"The word of the cross is to them that perish (are perishing), foolishness; but unto us who are saved (who are being saved), it is the power of God."—1 Cor. 1:18.

Today is Saturday, and tomorrow is the Sabbath. Prepare today for tomorrow—to do what will glorify the cross.

The high and the low, the rich and the poor, the cultured and the uncultured, all alike have no standing before God except in terms of the cross. Our Saviour says that He who would be His disciple must take up His cross and follow Him. That is, not only must one accept the fact that in this He underwent the supreme punishment for a vile world, but, just as He, one must be willing to submit readily to whatsoever afflictions may be laid upon him in the service of God, even death if necessary.

The cross is the symbol of these things. It typifies the subduing and the mortifying of sin in our lives, breaking the strength and suppressing corrupt nature, and the giving of life for the good of others. Mountains give up their mineral to make the valley fertile, the vegetable lays down for the animal, the lower order lays down for man, the scientist lays down for future world good, the physician lays down for the health of the sick, and the teacher lays down for the education of the oncoming generation. In this way, all life is maintained at the expense of other lives. This can't be done without suffering. He has laid down for us. We are called upon to lay down for Him. The cross, by its expression of love and sacrifice, is the power of that which stops at nothing in order to make better and bring the world to perfection.

Prayer.—Our Father, in the agonies of our Lord, help us to see the beauty and glory of all righteousness and feel the power to make us right. Give us an inspiring faith and an eager yearning for the new life. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"THE SABBATH WAS MADE FOR MAN."
(Mark 2:27.)

Since the time of Christ, the religious importance of the Sabbath has been in the conviction that Christ arose on what we know now as that day. One thing most certain, that in the resurrection Christ was manifested to the apostles as living among them in the fullness of personal life, so the commemoration of the first day of the week as the Sabbath is the celebration of His resurrection day, and keeps before us the fact that He is also manifested to us and is also with us in that same fullness. By an inspired and divine instinct, we keep Sunday as set apart for Christian fellowship, attendance at Church, religious exercises, spiritual culture. It is a day given of God and by God for this, and for us to recover our connection with spiritual things.

"Sundays the pillars are
On the heav'n's palace arched lies;
The other days fill up the spare
And hollow room with vanities:
They are the fruitful beds and borders
In God's rich garden; that is bare
Which parts their rank and orders."

A STATEMENT OF CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP PRINCIPLES.

Furnished by the United Stewardship Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

1. Stewardship Fundamental.

The recognition of our responsibility to God as stewards of everything we are and have—life, time, talents, possessions and spiritual resources—is fundamental to a wholesome Christian faith and experience. Stewardship is primarily spiritual. Its great objective is character. It is the principle on which daily life must be organized in order to be fully Christian.

2. Not Optional.

Stewardship grows out of our obligation to God as Creator, Owner and Giver of all things, material and spiritual, and is indispensable to a life of obedience, love and gratitude.

3. Solves Problems.

Stewardship, in its full New Testament meaning, involves responsibility to man, and provides a solution for the social, racial, industrial, and economic problems which confront the modern world.

4. How Acknowledged.

Suitable acknowledgment of our stewardship can be made only as we set aside for God's service such measure of time, possessions, and vital energies as a scripturally enlightened judgment demands.

5. Relation to Money.

Stewardship involves both the beneficient use of money and the spirit and method of its acquisition, investment and expenditure. The Christian's total attitude toward material things is of great importance to himself, the Church, and the world, in this time of social reconstruction.

6. Proportionate Beneficence.

Stable provisions can be made for the support of kingdom enterprises only through the systematic, proportionate and adequate contributions of Christian people. System should be adjusted to the needs involved, proportion should be relative to personal income and agreeable to the scriptures. The dedication of the tenth of income offers a basic principle of beneficence supported by centuries of religious custom, biblical teaching, and joyful experience. While emphatically recommended to the people of our Churches, it must not be regarded as exhausting the meaning of stewardship, but rather as the beginning of our service to the kingdom.

7. Education in Stewardship.

Stewardship instruction should be included in the program of religious education of both home and Church. It is of primary importance in building the type of Christian character most urgently needed at this hour. Religious leaders and heads of families should be diligent to understand and practice Christian stewardship, and to instruct in its principles all who come under their care. That the acceptance of stewardship may speedily become universal, every steward should be encouraged to bear witness to his faith and to unite in such stewardship movement as his communion provides.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR DOINGS.

Speakers of national and international prominence have accepted places on the program of the All-South Christian Endeavor Convention, which takes place in Richmond, Va., on July 10-14, 1924.

E. Lee Trinkle, Governor of Virginia, is honorary chairman of the Convention committee, and probably will welcome delegates from the Southern States when they assemble for the opening session.

Dr. Francis E. Clark, founder of the movement and president of the United Society, has returned to America from a tour abroad, and will be present to take part on the program.

Dr. Daniel A. Poling, associate president of the United Societies of Christian Endeavor, and noted orator, also has been secured for the Convention.

William Jennings Bryan, Dr. Peter Ainslie, of Baltimore; Edward P. Gates, general secretary, of Boston, Mass., and Frank Linn Freet, of Ohio, have accepted places.

Percy S. Foster, of Washington, D. C., will direct the singing and the musical program during the sessions.

Many features have been prepared by the Convention committee, making it an outstanding event in religious service in the South. Besides the educational advantages provided through the Convention, there will be a mammoth parade, showing all phases of Christian Endeavor work; recreational features, and an after-trip by water as far as Boston, the national home of the Christian Endeavor movement.

The Convention will be directed by Charles F. Evans, executive secretary of the work in the South. He will be assisted by a number of field secretaries who are conducting an extensive educational campaign in the interest of the movement, which today is represented in eighty-eight denominations and religious bodies and in every country of the world, standing as one survival of many interchurch fellowship ideals.

NEWPORT NEWS, VA.

Dear Dr. Atkinson:

I have been still and have not written for The Sun family for over a month. I feel as if I must write a few lines today, as there are things I want to say.

May I say, congratulations to you and the new editorial staff! I believe you are going to make The Sun's rays shine bright throughout our Southern Christian Convention. Our prayers are for you.

Two from our Church and myself attended the Southern Christian Convention. We enjoyed it. The fellowship was fine. Dr. Smith and his good people of the Christian Temple certainly know how to entertain a Convention, and do it in royal fashion. I think the Convention acted wisely in extending the time for the payment of the Men and Millions pledges. Together, brethren, let us do our best to pay these pledges and see the Christian Church go forward.

Our Local Church Activities.

Some time ago (April 6th) we were favored with a visit from Mr. J. F. West, Jr., of Waverly, who shared our pulpit in the interest of the Men and Millions forward movement. We were delighted to have Mr. West with us, and shall be only too glad to offer him the use of our pulpit whenever he can come again. I think there is nothing more vital to the growth of our Church than the payment of these pledges to Men and Millions.

Evidently ours is a Christian Endeavor Church. Miss Lucy Eldredge said it was when she was here over a year ago to conduct a Sunday School institute. Our senior society has been under the direction of Mrs. C. E. Chappell since last January, and has done some very fine work. They handle the program for the Wednesday evening prayer service, and these meetings have proven interesting and helpful. This society has met all its obligations and expects to be represented at the All-South Christian Endeavor Convention, which meets at Richmond in July.

Our Intermediate Christian Endeavor Society, under the direction of Mrs. T. G. Hyatt as superintendent, has gone forward with leaps and bounds during the sixteen months of its existence. It has the honor of being the mother Intermediate Christian Endeavor Society on the peninsula, and if you attend the Convention at Richmond, or the Chautauqua at Elon College, you will hear of some of the good work this society has done.

Our Junior Christian Endeavor Society is not as large as it was a year ago. Our superintendent was forced to resign because of other duties, and this group of little ones must get busy and make their society "grow, and go, and glow" for "Christ and the Church."

Our Sunday School continues holding its own and doing some good work, directed by Superintendent Caleb D. West, who is a trustee of the Christian Orphanage, and who is faithful at his post on Sunday morning, despite the strenuous office work that keeps him busy every day in the week. Most truly, our Bro. West is one of the busiest men in our city, and yet he stands loyal to his Church and Sunday School, and rightly so. Our Sunday School has met all its obligations, and expects to be represented at the Convention at Bethlehem July 22d and 23d. We have a teacher-training class, small in numbers, but doing some excellent work. The pastor teaches this class. I am hoping that, commencing with next quarter, our Sunday School will use exclusively our own denominational literature. One special feature that proved quite interesting and was highly enjoyed was a banquet given in honor of the "Wicker" (men's Bible class) by the "Golden Rule" (women's Bible class). About forty or more were present, and an excellent program rendered.

The Woman's Missionary Society, with Mrs. Ada Williams as president, is doing good work. In addition to the work connected with the monthly meetings, Mrs. Williams is teaching a class in missions, which meets each week. The society recently conducted a parcel-post social, which proved to be both interesting and helpful.

In general, I feel that our faithful members are doing a good work in Newport News. Our population here is floating, or transient. Many who come here stay only a short while and go elsewhere. Many who are here go elsewhere and get work, and their families are in our city. Certain members of our congregation are continually changing, but by God's help we are doing the very best we can, and we have some mighty faithful members, even if the number is small, who stand by the Church in an admirable way.

Yours for Christ and the Church,

B. J. Earp.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

June 8, 1924.

Subject: "Ezekiel encourages the exiles."—Psa. 137:1-6; Ezek. 34.

Golden Text: "I will seek that which was lost, and will bring back that which was driven away."—Ezek. 34:16.

Devotional Reading: Psa. 23.

The blow had fallen. Judah had been carried into captivity. The nation, as a nation, was dead. The people were in exile. And while it may be true that "a man may be down, but he is never out," it is just as true that "a man may be down, and almost out." This was the case with the Jews who had been carried into exile. They were in a strange land; they had been put to strange tasks; they were denied the privilege of going to the temple, and thus of receiving the comfort and the strength which religion gives. They were lonely, homesick, discouraged, down—almost out!

It did not help any to know that they were to blame. They could see it all now. The prophets —those whom they had called idealists and "cranks"—were right after all. Their sins would, yea had, found them out. They were reaping only what they had sown. And when, after cruel taunts by their captors, they had attempted to sing the songs of their own homeland, the words stuck in their throats. They might well have endured the physical privations and even sufferings at the hands of a heathen power had it not been for the fact that always there came the thought that this heathen power was but punishing them for their sins. Ah! there was the rub.

And the worst of it all was that they were Jehovah's people. He had chosen them. He had had a peculiar interest in them. He had aroused great hopes in them. And then with an apparent indifference and even a rank cruelty, He had suffered them to be overcome by hated foreigners, and even transported from their own land, which He had promised them as their possession. How could these things be? Was it all an idle dream? Was there no hope? It would seem as if the seed of Israel were both down and out.

And yet they came back. They came back as if from the dead. Indeed it was from these very people that there sprang Judaism, that religion that found its flower and fruitage in Jesus Christ. How can one deny miracles when he reads this story?

If we seek an explanation of this striking fact, we find it in large measure in the life and work of Ezekiel. He ranks high in the list of the world's great men of all time. And his message still has perennial charm and power. He was carried away as a middle-aged man with the first deportation in 597 B. C. He was of priestly origin and probably exercised a priestly function. It was not until about five years later (592 B. C.) that he received his prophetic call. It came to him in a striking way and deeply impressed him. From that time on, he felt no hesitancy in prefacing his remarks with "thus saith the Lord." Ministers today need just such a conviction.

Ezekiel at first directed his attention primarily to those who had been left behind in Judah. He denounced them for their sins and prophesied further dire consequences upon their land. When Jerusalem finally fell, in 586 B. C., Ezekiel had the strength of fulfilled prophecy behind him, and the people gave more heed to his words. This certainly was one of the factors in the great work which Ezekiel did.

For Ezekiel's message to the exiles was a message of encouragement and hope. In spite of the fact that the facts in the case seemed to be against him, he declared that Jehovah would yet redeem His people, and that He would restore them to their homeland. In a graphic way, he portrayed Jehovah as making His way from Jerusalem to Babylon, where He took up His residence with the exiles. In this way, Ezekiel showed that Jehovah was still with His people. It was because of the comfort and inspiration that Ezekiel furnished that the Jews a few years later went back to rebuild Jerusalem and the temple.

It was Ezekiel who was responsible for many of the detailed regulations for worship and service that became the core of Judaism later. It was he, also, who placed a new emphasis on the Sabbath. And it was probably largely due to him that the synagogue had its rise and growth during the exile.

Just one thing more in connection with Ezekiel's message and ministry. He individualized religion to a far greater degree than it had ever been before. It was he who insisted upon the individual responsibility of every soul to God. There was no nation in Ezekiel's time; there was only the individual. Thus it was that he gave to us in its crude form the doctrine which later found fullest expression in the teachings of Jesus—the individual relation and responsibility of every soul to God.

Suggestions From the Lesson.

1. People are usually more receptive to divine counsel when they are in sorrow or trouble.

2. The man who is down and out does not need condemnation; he needs sympathy and help.

3. The man of God should live so close to God that he can say, "Thus saith the Lord."

4. The optimist sees the "golden days" ahead, and not behind.

5. God always has a man in waiting to do His work.

6. Jehovah is our Shepherd. We shall not want.

7. The Good Shepherd takes a personal interest in His sheep.

8. Men, like sheep, are prone to go astray.

9. Jesus came to seek and to save that which was lost.

10. Every one of us must give an account of himself to God.

11. Misfortunes are often but blessings in disguise.

12. He who has once enjoyed the blessings of fellowship with God can never be happy without them.

13. The only captivity that is not irksome is captivity to Christ.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

June 8, 1924.

Topic: "Christian Courtesy."

Lesson: 1 Pet. 3:8-13; Rom. 12:10.

Daily Readings: Fellow-feeling.—Acts 27:1-8. Human kindness.—Acts 28:7-10. Courteous speech.—Col. 4:6. Abraham the gentleman. Gen. 18:1-8. The root of courtesy.—1 Cor. 13:1-7. Reward of courtesy.—Matt. 25:31-40.

Courtesy is good manners. It is the art of being polite, the outer expression of an inner gentlemanly or gentlewomanly life. It is one of the fine graces of life. And it is an absolute essential of real manhood and womanhood. A man may lack many qualities and still be a gentleman, but he can never lack courtesy and be a gentleman. And the same principle obtains in regard to a woman.

Courtesy doesn't cost much. Sometimes it is just a tip of the hat, a greeting or acknowledgment of a greeting, a holding open of a door, a giving of a seat, a lift with a load, a respectful listening (people are often discourteous when others are talking), helping an older person, a hundred and one little things—for courtesy is a matter of little things—which do not cost much time or effort. Courtesy doesn't cost much.

But it pays. Pays handsomely. It pays from the standpoint of dollars and cents. The clerk who is courteous will receive promotion over the clerk who is discourteous. He who would "get on" in the world will do well to learn his lesson in courtesy. And it pays in terms of character. There are few qualities which so enrich life and give tone to acts like courtesy. He who is courteous is likely to be rich in many other fine qualities of life.

Courtesy is not so much a gift as it is an achievement. It is true, of course, that some people seem to be "born gentlemen." This is especially true of the South. But by and large the men and women who are courteous and who are gentlemen and gentlewomen have developed the art of being courteous. They may have mastered the habit until it has become second nature with them. Some folks are born courteous, but the most of us achieve courtesy.

The acid test of courtesy is, I think, the ordinary relations of life, and especially our attitude toward those with whom we are most familiar. It is easy enough for a young man to be polite when he is with his girl friend—at least it ought to be, although I have seen young men blow smoke in a young lady's face and do many other things that were unbecoming a gentleman—or for young people to "be on their good behaviour" when company comes. But the acid test of a young person's courtesy is his attitude toward his father or mother, or sister or brother, or chum, or the cook, or chauffeur, or teacher. He who would learn courtesy must begin right where he is, for courtesy, like charity, "begins at home."

Courtesy has its root in a respect for our fellowmen. When we see all men as children of God, we will respect their personality. If we Christian Endeavorers would always consider the feelings of other people we would be more courteous.

Reverence is but another name for courtesy or good manners in its highest form. A man who is reverent is courteous toward God. It seems to me that the best way for a man to become a gentleman in his relations with his fellow-men, is to become a gentleman in his relations with God. He who is reverent is likely to be courteous.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT.

1. Is it true that young people of today are not as courteous as they were a generation ago?
2. What is the difference between courtesy and Christian courtesy?
3. By what standard should we judge courtesy?
4. How can we show courtesy in our homes?
5. In our school?
6. In our place of work?
7. In Church?
8. In our Christian Endeavor Society?
7. Give some examples of courtesy from the life of Jesus.
8. Tell about the most courteous thing you have ever seen anybody do.
9. "Civility costs nothing, but buys everything."
10. "The courteous person is like a man carrying a lantern—he lights the road for others."

WORK IN ALABAMA.

I would like to say a few words about our work in Alabama. At Roanoke, just one month since, Miss Siddie Latham assisted our women in the organization of a Woman's Missionary Society. We are having a fine little society. Our people here are poor, and our numbers are small, but we are a determined little band. We purchased a nice lot in the town, and we expect to build a nice brick Church on it in the near future.

I hope every one who reads these lines will please take notice that it is still in order for them to send the "dollar" spoken of in my other letter to THE SUN. Thank you, friends, for your kindness. We need $1,000 to finish paying for the lot. We must locate a good, wide-awake pastor in the town of Roanoke. This Church must have preaching and pastoral help more than once a month. I will say more about this later. Since my return from the Convention I have lectured at Antioch, Pleasant Grove and at Christiana Churches on the Convention work. I am determined that our people shall be informed upon the vital issues of the Christian Church in this section.

We look forward to our School of Methods at Bethlehem with a great deal of interest. I hope every school and Endeavor Society in both the Alabama and Georgia and Alabama Conferences will begin now to arrange to attend the whole session.

Brethren, let us rise up and see and hear what the Lord would have us do. It is such a grand opportunity to have the privilege of such rich instruction in our Christian duties for a whole week, with such teachers as the program provides. Get ready to attend. Everybody come—superintendents, teachers, and classes, old and young, rich and poor, learned and unlearned. Let us seek the things that will do us good and make us more efficient servants of God.

God bless our brotherhood from North to South, from East to West, from the rivers to the ends of the earth.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

I want to beg your pardon for making an error in my statement last week in regard to the amount raised on the special Easter offering. My stenographer made the additions, but I find that she got her figures wrong and showed more than we had actually received. Including our report this week, we still lack $652.69 being to our goal.

If all our Churches that have not sent in their Easter offerings would take the offering and mail it in, we will get to the goal. I need your help right now. We must reach our goal. We will hold our books open to receive the offering through the month of June. I am working and praying that you will come to our rescue now. If we ever needed your help to reach a goal we need it now.

Four persons or Churches, $50 each	$200.00
Ten persons or Churches, $25 each	250.00
Twenty persons or Churches, $10 each	200.00
One person or Church, $2.69 each	2.69
	$652.69

We have this many in our Churches who can make up this amount. Will you be one of the number? Just be one of the happy ones!

Some time ago we made an error and gave the Ladies' Aid Society of Suffolk Christian Church credit for a box containing 2 boys' suits, 12 dresses and 6 blouses. This should have been credited to Bethlehem Church, Eastern Virginia Conference. We beg pardon for this error.

The following have been sent in: Mrs. Lizzie Rice, Arthur, Ill., 1 dress; Missionary Society and Sunday School classes, Meron, Ind., 5 sheets, 2 pr. pillow cases, 4 towels, 5 dresses, 2 pr. hose; Mrs. W. B. Madison, Wentworth, N. C., 2 pillows, two pollow cases; Mrs. J. C. Madison, Wentworth, N. C., 2 pillows and 2 pillow cases; Mrs. W. L. Wheeler, 2 pillows and 2 pillow cases; Ladies' Aid Society, Shallow Well Church, N. C., 4 towels, 12 hdkfs., 4 bath cloths, 1 sheet, 12 cakes soap; Mrs. Williams, 1 quilt; Ladies' Aid Society, Goshen, Ind., 1 box clothing; Mrs. J. A. Williams, Franklin, Va., 1 box clothing; Mrs. M. S. McNeal, Hobson, Va., 4 dresses.

YEARLY MEETING OF FRIENDS.

The Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends, in its annual session assembled, approved the following minute and its accompanying direction:

"This meeting desires to reaffirm its belief that the primary loyalty of all Christians is due God, our Father, and all His human family. We believe that the whole system of determining right by violence and destruction rather than by friendly conference and negotiation is fundamentally wrong, inefficient, and un-Christian. We call upon Christian people of whatever sect or creed to join in renouncing for the future all participation in war, and to seek through our national representatives such international organization as will supply peaceful methods of dealing with all international differences. We also urge upon Christians consideration of inter-class and interracial problems and an effort to solve them through good will and understanding."

The clerk is directed to sign, and the peace and service committee to send copies of this minute to officials of the various Churches and to the religious press, as widely as may be found practicable.

On behalf of the Yearly Meeting,

JANE P. RUSHMORE, Clerk.

MISSIONARY RALLY.

The district missionary rally of the Halifax district met at Lebanon, Semora, N. C., April 22, 1924. The program of the missionary rallies was given with particularly inspiring and helpful addresses from Mrs. Denison and Miss Coghill. Mrs. J. J. Lincoln spoke for Mrs. J. W. Pierce on "Goals" in a most pleasing and instructive way.

This district is composed of seven Churches, all of which were represented by a good delegation except one, and each reported an active woman's society. One reported a young people's society.

The Lebanon Church entertained us in a bountiful and cordial manner. The collection was $15.14. Mrs. J. W. Pierce was elected to take the place of Mrs. Charles R. Clark as secretary. The Danville representatives extended an invitation for the rally next year.

MRS. T. W. CHANDLER,
District Leader.

The Y. M. C. A. in San Juan, Porto Rico, makes it easy for American sailors and marines to see the sights of the city. When the men from the United States destroyer Preston, and from several other vessels put ashore last month, they were each given a double-sized postcard on which was printed a colored map showing the location of the principal streets and buildings. On the back of the card was a list of interesting things to see in San Juan, with information about ferries, trains and bus lines, special automobile trips and restaurants.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas, an honored and faithful member of the Citizens' Bible Class of Elon College answered the call of death and passed to the great beyond when, on the afternoon of May 1, 1924, Rev. J. Pressley Barrett, D. D., died in Lawrence Hospital, Winston-Salem, N. C., following an operation on the preceding Tuesday; and whereas this class feels keenly the loss of so valuable a member and Christian brother—be it resolved:

First, That this class hereby testify to its appreciation of the noble life, the Christian fortitude, and to the constant force for righteousness throughout the community that our friend and brother exerted.

Secondly, That this class has lost one of its most valuable members; that the whole Church has suffered the loss of one of its most faithful and able champions, and that the world of religious journalism has lost one of its most conscientious and facile writers.

Thirdly, That, as a class, we hereby tender our sincere sympathy to our bereaved sister and fellow-member, Mrs. Barrett, and pledge to her our prayers at a throne of grace.

Fourthly, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, a copy placed in the records of the class, and a copy be furnished The Christian Sun for publication.

FOUSHEE.

His many friends were grieved to learn of the death of Bro. L. M. Foushee on May 1st, at the age of 61 years, 1 month and 21 days.

December 12, 1888, he married Miss Mattie Miller, who, with three sons—C. C., of Jonesboro; Dr. L. M., of Burlington; C. Graydon, of Elon College—and two daughters, Mrs. O. C. Liles, of Goldsboro, and Miss Gladys, of Baltimore, survives.

Bro. Foushee had been a deacon of Shallow Well Church for many years. In that capacity, as teacher in the Sunday School and in other positions, he had served faithfully and well. I nthe home, community and Church he wil be sadly missed, the writer sharing with many the loss of a true friend. In the absence of his pastor, the funeral was conducted by Revs. B. M. Stanfield and M. A. Ray. He was buried with Masonic rites. May the Lord comfort the bereaved wife and children. R. L. WILLIAMSON.

To Make Rich Red Blood

Revitalize your worn-out exhausted nerves and increase your strength and endurance take Organic Iron; not metallic iron which people usually take, but pure organic iron—Nuxated Iron—which is like the iron in your blood and like the iron in spinach, lentils and apples. One dose of Nuxated Iron is estimated to be approximately equivalent (in organic iron content) to eating one-half quart of spinach, one quart of green vegetables or half a dozen apples. It is like taking extract of beef instead of eating pounds of meat. Nuxated iron is partially predigested and ready for almost immediate absorption and assimilation by the blood, while metallic iron is iron just as it comes from the action of strong acids on small pieces of iron filings

Over 4,000,000 people annually are using Nuxated Iron. It will not injure the teeth nor disturb the stomach. A few doses will often commence to enrich your blood. Your money will be refunded by the manufacturers if you do not obtain satisfactory results.

Beware of substitutes. Always insist on having genuine organic iron—Nuxated Iron. Look for the letters N. I. on every tablet. Sold by all druggists.

Fortebee

A REMEDY FOR TUBERCULOSIS.

FORTEBEE is a remedy discovered recently for the external treatment of tuberculosis, pleurisy, and "flu." Here is what people are saying about it already. From a letter received from Veanie McGhee, Ellerson, Va.:

"Since using FORTEBEE I have good appetite, all pains are gone, and I feel like a new person. My left lung was bad, and FORTEBEE healed it. Through the use of this remedy, I am restored to good health, and am glad to tell others about it."

This is from a letter received from M. E. Gordon, Richmond, Va.:

"A friend brought me a bottle of FORTEBEE. The first application was put on my chest, and for the first time in many weeks I could breaths freely without the catch in my side. After several applications the pleurisy pains were dulled, and then they came only at intervals. Now I am again at my work, feeling stronger every day. It is a privilege to tell you the good FORTEBEE has done me."

Many other such testimonials.

Try FORTEBEE yourself, and be your own judge as to results. It is harmless, and you can apply it on yourself by following the directions. $2.50 per bottle. Large size, $4.50. Order direct from FORTEBEE, INCORPORATED, 28 N. Eighth St., Richmond, Va.

Why Drugs Fail

Many chronic diseases fail to respond to drug treatment, even in the hands of the best physicians, whereas acute diseases usually respond readily. When a disease has become chronic, drugs often seem to do as much harm as they do good, for the system rebels against them. It is just this class of cases which derive the greatest benefit from drinking Shivar, America's best stomach, liver and kidney Water. If you suffer with chronic dyspepsia, indigestion, sick headache, rheumatism, kidney or liver disease, uric poisoning or other curable conditions due to impure blood, do not hesitate to accept the Spring's liberal offer as printed below. Their records show that only two in a hundred, on the average, have reported "no benefit." This is a wonderful record from a truly wonderful Spring. Sign the following letter:

Shivar Springs,

Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if I report no benefit you agree to refund the price of the water in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return within a month.

Salt Your Stock the Blackman Way

DO YOU TAKE SALT
with meals, or just fill up on salt once or TWICE A WEEK?

A few licks of BLACKMAN'S Tonic Salt should be a part of the daily diet of your live stock. It is medicated and will improve digestion, make the feed go further, and keep them in healthy condition. So simple, so easy. Just drop brick in feed-box—it will do the rest.

THE WHITE HOUSE DAD.

A dozen boys visited President Coolidge the other day, spending nearly half an hour with him in the White House. Here are some of the things he said to them:

"A good boy now will make a good citizen later. When I was a boy I did not care so much about going to school. I was rather glad when school was over; but boys must remember the expense and pains to which their government and their parents go for their good, and they should take every advantage of their opportunities.

"The boy is the father of the man. Remember that when you grow up you will be about the same kind of a man that you are a boy. You don't need to rob yourself of your boyhood, but you can take your pleasures in a manly way. You will find when you grow up that the things you learn now will be the things you must know then. You will have to obey the laws, and it is important for you to learn the lesson of obedience now.

"Remember that this is your country, and the country will be what you make it. I think it was President McKinley who said: 'A boy doesn't amount to anything unless he is good to his mother.'

"I have two boys of my own. I tell them there are only two things necessary in a boy—hard work and to behave himself. Do that and there will not be any doubt about the future of this country."

COOK—WHITMER.

On the first Sunday in April, I was met at my regular appointment at Joppa by Mr. Earl Cook and Miss Mary Whitmer, who desired to be united in matrimony. It was my pleasure to comply with their request. The groom is a native of that section and a member of that Church. He has been working in York, Pa., where he met his bride. It was his desire to be married in his old home Church and by his home pastor, hence the trip was made from York to Joppa for that purpose and for a few days' visit among home folks and friends.

Best wishes to these splendid young people in their married life.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By Rev. S. M. Lynam.

G. Campbell Morgan Coming.—

Dr. G. Campbell Morgan has accepted the pastorate of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York City. His work is to begin January 1, 1925. He is to be relieved of all pastoral work, and will deliver two sermons on Sunday and a Bible lecture on Friday evening. Dr. Morgan is perhaps the best-known Bible student in the world, and his coming to America to work will mean much to this country along religious lines.

Ministers' Salaries Increase.—

It was learned at the recent meeting of the Southern Methodist Church that the average salary of the minister in the M. E. Church, South, was $1,350, and that the salary of presiding elders is, on an average, $3,237. These figures show that the salaries of ministers in the Methodist Church are increasing constantly. A large number of the Churches of that denomination pay $5,000, and a number of their congregations number more than fifteen hundred members.

The Foreign Field Ahead.—

The Churches of America can learn much in co-operation from the Churches on the foreign mission fields. In Santo Domingo, the denominations all work together in a common cause. There are no denominational lines drawn there. This same thing is true in almost every foreign field. We yet have much to learn from those we go to Christianize. Our foreign work would meet with much more success could we co-operate here as they do there in the common cause of the kingdom.

Greece Honors America.—

The masterpiece of the great Greecian sculptor Praxiteles has been offered to America for free exhibition in this country. The masterpiece is the statue of Hermes carrying the infant Dionysus. The work is 2,500 years old. In making this offer, Greece has greatly honored America. The coming of the statue, as the Greeks feel, would mean much to international good-will. The love of the beautiful is universally possessed by all, more or less, and the enjoyment of the same treasures of beauty will bring men closer together.

Religious Education Growing.—

The department of religious education of the Northwestern University was recently made an integral part of the university by a vote of the board of trustees. The department was founded as a separate school in 1919 on funds gathered in the centenary movement of the M. E. Church. During the past five years the department has grown rapidly, and is now the most popular graduate department of the university. Its enrollment is almost double that of any other department.

Such reports as this from Northwestern is gratifying indeed. It means that the American people are waking up to the vast possibilities of religious education, and that they are moving in the right direction in education for service.

Los Angeles Ministers Speak.—

The Ministerial Association of Los Angeles, Calif., has outlawed war. They feel that never again must the Church support a nation in war, nor must the Church ever again bless an army. The criticism of those who stand for peace should be condemned and withstood.

The Los Angeles ministers have outlawed war. They have found the only way to permanent peace. We tried to restrict the use of intoxicating liquors and failed, and had to outlaw it. We tried to prescribe boundaries for slavery, but we could not; we had to outlaw it. We have tried and are still trying to regulate war. It cannot be done; it must be outlawed. The Christian people of America should stand squarely against war, and outlaw it. There is no other way to peace.

Federal Council Supports Court.—

The Federal Council of the Churches of America are standing squarely behind the movement for the entrance of the United States into the world court. The leaders of the council appeared before the Senate subcommittee recently in an effort to influence a favorable report. The chief speech was made by Dr. Chas. H. Brent, of Buffalo, N. Y. Other movements in America are backing the world-court movement, including the American Chamber of Commerce and the American Federation of Labor. The world court would mean international co-operation for the United States. It merits the most careful attention of the American people. Each citizen should express himself on such a vital issue, but he should be first well informed regarding it. The world is no longer large, and the policy of splendid isolation can no longer be pursued. America must do something. Only the citizens have a right to say what—and they should say it to be heard, too!

Tornado Again Sweeps South.—

On May 27th, a terrible tornado swept over the Southern States again. It was the second great storm within a month, and followed practically the same lines as did the other storm. In Alabama and Mississippi, the damage reached large proportions. The dead, as a result of the tornado, number more than fifty, and many are seriously injured. Property damage goes into the millions. The Red Cross is at work in the stricken areas bringing relief as rapidly as possible.

The Red Cross, founded, as was primarily, for war time, has been through the years a ministering angel of mercy in peace as well as war. The organization is deserving of our support, and in the roll call this year we should each respond with our money. Twice within the month has it come to the South to aid us in time of trouble, and we should see that it has means with which to give aid to others in such times.

Japanese Nuns Would Marry.—

The new spirit is manifesting itself in the Far East in the movement of the nuns of all Buddhist sects looking toward the securing of the right to marry. The Buddhist priests are now permitted to marry, and the nuns feel that the same privilege should be given them. The nuns of all the Japanese religious organizations will meet at Kyoto at an early date, and the right to marry will be the topic uppermost at the meeting. One hundred nuns from the great Zenkoji Temple, at Tagano, will lead the movement for marriage rights.

This movement of the Japanese nuns shows how powerful has been the influence of Western civilization in the Far East. So far as numbers of converts are concerned, the missionaries are successful—if not so much so as we could wish—but along other lines more difficult to measure, they have achieved much. Christianity, with its freedom, is fast permeating the whole national and social fabric. The Church will some day reap its full reward for the worthy labors of the years.

The Passing of Marion Lawrance.—

Late Thursday night, May 1st, Marion Lawrance died in Portland, Oreg. He was stricken with pneumonia while on one of the tours which have meant so much of spiritual uplift and practical helpfulness to the Sunday School workers of America. Marion Lawrence was consulting secretary of the International Council of Religious Education, and for a generation has been a leading spirit in the development of the Sunday School throughout the world, highly esteemed both for his great ability as a religious leader and speaker and for his winsome and great-hearted Christian personality. In the introduction to his latest book, "My Message to Sunday School Workers" (Doran), which will soon come from the press, Marion Lawrance says, "To help Sunday School workers has been the ambition of my life, the burning passion of my soul," and he died, as he might have wished, in the exercise of that burning passion. His last message fully exemplifies his life and character: "I wish to express my love for my associates and friends, and pray for them all God's richest blessing. We shall meet again. 'He that liveth and believeth in me shall never die'—Jesus said it; I believe it."

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. Elisha Bradshaw writes that all the Churches of his pastorate seem to be making progress, and that the work goes well.

Voice of William Marconi is transmitted from Poldhu, cornwall, to Australia, a distance of 10,000 miles, by means of radio telephone, according to London Daily Mail.

A brother sending his subscription to THE CHRISTIAN SUN says: "I feel like it is a member of my family, as I have been a subscriber for nearly thirty-nine years." A good record.

The great event in our Zion last week was the Elon College commencement. THE SUN cannot carry a complete account of all the exercises this week, but will endeavor to do so as soon as possible.

Rev. O. D. Poythress, pastor South Norfolk, Va., Church, writes a most interesting Church letter for this issue. Read it and get the thrill that comes from contemplating great achievements in the name of the Lord.

Elon commencement is a great occasion in the life of our brotherhood. Friends and acquaintances are made and revived, and the whole atmosphere of the occasion is charged with the enthusiasm of youth and good-fellowship.

Our total increase in the Southern Convention the past year was about 300 members. Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that He will send forth laborers into His harvest. May we not ask the Lord for an increase of 500 in membership this year?

One has not exhausted one's own resources in behalf of the kingdom of God until one has exhausted the resources of God also. Some speaker at the recent Elon commencement used that sentence. Think of its worth, and try it out.

Some are paying their Men and Millions pledges promptly, happily, sacrificially. If all would manifest the same gracious spirit of cooperation, fellowship and sacrifice that these do, what a glorious victory the dear Christian Church would win in our Master's name and service!

The editor sends us the good news that a leader has been selected to conduct a department in THE CHRISTIAN SUN for our young people. Since a note has been written and is in type, both notices will appear. The end to be attained is the same in both, and the plans will be harmonized.

Elsewhere in THE SUN will be found "Meditations from a Parson's Diary." The parson who is to give us these meditations prefers, for several reasons, to have his own name withheld and let SUN readers guess who and what he is. The parson promises to send regularly these meditations from his diary.

While North Carolina is making progress along many lines, one could wish that the wheels of progress were more evenly balanced. For instance, the estimate is that in the State this year $200,000,000 are invested in automobiles, while scarce one-fourth that amount (less than $50,000,000) is invested in school-houses and equipment.

President Coolidge signs revenue bill, providing general reduction of excise and income taxes at the same time issuing a statement in which he declares, while bill does not represent sound, permanent tax policy, its passage affords temporary relief and adjustment of business conditions.

The Junior Endeavorers of Newport News and Hampton are to have charge of the "junior float" in the great "C. E. Parade" on Saturday of the All-South Convention, July 10-14, at Richmond, Va. We have every reason to expect it to be one of the big features of the parade, too, because these juniors and junior leaders never do things by halves.

A "Children's Corner" in THE CHRISTIAN SUN is being arranged for, and the plan is to have it filled with gems and original sayings from the young. Discussions, studies, and stories of the Bible, questions and answers, home life—these all as they may be related to the Sunday School, the Christian Endeavor, and the Church. If the wee young people desire such a corner, write the managing editor, who will confer with the board.

THE SUN is very happy to present in this issue a program for Women's Missionary Societies in June. The present program is presented with the cradle roll meeting in mind. This is done because June is the month to emphasize the cradle roll work and to hold annual cradle roll meetings. It is the plan to present a program in THE SUN for every month of the year, and it is hoped that these programs will be found helpful in our women's societies. Miss Pattie Coghill, the secretary of the woman's department, is to furnish the programs.

Brother Hermon Eldredge, our secretary of administration for the Christian Education Department, leaves this week to attend the World's Sunday School Convention at Glasgow, Scotland, and then goes to the shrine of freedom of Europe. Many SUN readers who know Bro. Eldredge so favorably will join in wishing for him bon voyage and a happy return. At the urgent request of THE SUN, Bro. Eldredge is to write a letter each week for our readers. This will be quite an event indeed, and some readers have something to look forward to in this promise.

THE SUN is happy to announce that Miss Madge Moffitt, of Ramseur, N. C., is to conduct a department in THE CHRISTIAN SUN for our boys and girls. The editors feel that the children should have a department in THE SUN which would attract them to it and interest them in its visits each week. Miss Moffitt graduated from Elon College last week, and is a genius in her work of gripping, entertaining, and training children. We look for her department to be a most attractive and helpful feature of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and one which will popularize our Church paper among the children in our Church homes.

Rev. N. G. Newman, D. D., who retires from the pastorate of the Elon Christian Church the 1st of September, is too well known among our Churches to need a word of commendation as a preacher and pastor. In all our brotherhood we have no man of more lovable character and disposition and of greater thought and spiritual insight in presenting the word of truth. That Church or pastorate will be most fortunate and happy indeed who secures the services of this beloved brother and most faithful and able preacher and pastor. We are sure his services are needed and will be demanded by some of our most promising pulpits.

BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

Economic conditions indicate that neither a marked expansion nor a marked contraction of business is likely to occur in the near future. The fact that business sentiment has become more conservative, evidently rendered uneasy by political developments and also probably in part by the failure of the spring business to come up to expectations, will tend to a continuance of the slowing down of operations which has begun. Such reaction as may occur, however, appears unlikely to be great in extent or to be long continued.

The more probable outlook is that the volume of business during at least the next six months will be, on the average, not very different from that of the present. Money is easy, the banking situation is exceedingly strong, the country's purchasing power is large, distribution of goods continues at a high level, and stocks of goods and of raw materials are, in general, apparently not of burdensome size. These conditions are favorable to the continuance of a good volume of business.

Karl Lehmann, the man who conceived the idea of the Dixie work, who builded the foundation and made possible what is being done today, has just accepted a place on the Richmond program of the Christian Endeavor Convention.

Mr. Lehmann has recently received signal honors in the work of Florida Chambers of Commerce, as told in another place in this issue, is president of the Florida State Union, still retains his interest in Christian Endeavor, and continues to insist that "One person with enthusiasm can make anything go!" His contagious enthusiasm and forceful messages will mean much to the Convention.

Industrial accidents have increased 33 per cent throughout the country, according to statistics compiled by the American Association for Labor Legislation. Some of the reasons given for this increase are the employment of inexperienced workers during strikes, carelessness among employees following the war, a waning sense of responsibility among employers, and the general increase of industrial activity. If more men are working than before, we may naturally expect an increase of accidents. At the same time, in the interest of humanity and efficiency, every possible effort should be put forth, by employers and employees alike, to reduce them to a minimum.—Ex.

The cross was the center of the earthly life of Christ. He knew that He came into the world to die, as a Redeemer from sin. The shadow of the cross was always about Him. And the cross was no pretty thing for poets to sing about, but a place where the burden of sin would break His heart. It is vain for a man to glorify Christ and minify the cross. In the theology of Jesus, "The way of the cross leads home."

A youth once said: "I always have a good time because I carry it with me." Here is the secret of a happy life. We are always going somewhere in search of happiness, when we could be happy at home if we had Christ with us there. Happiness is not a place; it is a condition of the heart.

The Newport News Christian Church Christian Endeavor intermediates have nineteen of their twenty-two members enrolled in a "Front Row Club" for the Sunday night preaching service, which is a great delight to their pastor.

American aviators reach Kagoshima, Japan, from Kushimoto, flying 425 miles through rain and windy weather.

Cotton for 1924 in Virginia apparently is doomed, it is announced from the offices of the Virginia State Department of Agriculture. Sudden dry, warm, sunshiny weather and a very late fall are the only hopes for any cotton this year, said Commissioner George W. Koiner and Assistant Commissioner J. J. Owen. And this promised to be the biggest cotton year in Virginia's history.

The vast majority of farmers in the State have not been able to put any cotton in. Those who have planted cotton now are plowing it up, the officials stated. Few will venture on the sudden dry spell and the late fall.

Last year 73,000 acres in Virginia were planted to cotton. The average per acre yield was higher than in any other State. The total crop was 50,000 bales, and the value totaled $8,000,000. This year, given a fit season, the crop would have yielded 200,000 bales—four times last year's total.

Other crops besides cotton are suffering, it was stated. Unless dry weather comes before June 10th the tobacco and corn crops probably will be exceedingly poor. Tobacco is suffering badly now. There has been a month of rainy weather. The farmers have been unable to bed their tobacco fields. They cannot plant tobacco flat. They will be quite late with their planting. This will not mean so much to dark tobacco, but will run bright tobacco very late. Few farmers have planted corn.

"But all hope is not lost," said Mr. Koiner, smiling. "Don't paint the outlook too black. Sometimes things are not so bad as they promise."

JAPANESE WAGE RATES.

The average daily wage of Japanese laborers, including women, is 1.55 yen, at normal exchange about 78 cents in American currency, according to figures published by the home department. The average wage for male laborers is 1.79 yen, and for women 88 yen, and the average work-day is ten hours, twenty-six minutes.

IMPROVED IN HEALTH.

I arrived home on April 11th from my trip to California seeking restoration to health. My physicians in California told me they could not do me any further good, and that the climate out there would not help either, so they advised me to come back home, take nourishment and rest here. I am not able to do any work. Haven't preached much in five months. I improved while I was in California, but physicians there said it was the rest that improved me so much, and not the climate.

I deeply appreciate what the Board of Superannuation has done for me. Be assured of my gratitude to the dear Church that made this possible.

I regret very much to learn of Dr. Barrett's and Bro. Eastes' death. We will miss them very much. I am trusting and praying that the Lord will heal me and that I may be able to do more in his kingdom than ever before.

Yours in Christ,

Columbus, Ga. P. L. Duke.

THE RULE OF THE HOME.

A Brooklyn judge asserts that more than 80 per cent of our criminals are under twenty-five. Another New York jurist observes that the average hardened criminal is about seventeen, and that the age at which the largest numbers of prisoners are committed to jails and reformatories is nineteen. This implies a youth situation of alarming proportions and implications.

How can this frightful wastage of young life be accounted for? Those nearest to the facts tell us that it is not the fruitage of a crime wave that inevitably follows in the wake of war. The causes go much deeper. In the final analysis, the principal indictment falls upon one only institution, and that institution is the average American home.

The tap root of the situation is contempt for rightly constituted authority. A generation ago the parents governed the family. Today the tables are turned, and the family policy is largely dictated by the children. Consequently, before either the school or the Church can assume any guardianship, the seeds of potential disorder have been sown. Nothing is plainer than that normal education, like charity, must begin at home.

The child who has not learned a wholesome respect for home-law will have nothing but disdain for school-law. The youth who has not been disciplined to regard either will leave school around fourteen and go out to defy all law. And when he falls into the stern hands of the guardians of the law, he will have his parents to thank most of all.

The remedy is not better laws, or better schools, or better Churches; it is better homes and better parents.—Independent.

THE PERSISTENT AIM OF CHRISTIANITY.

The special persistent aim of consecrated Christianity should be that of winning souls. Not indeed seeking to save the soul as a distinct entity, but rather to save the entire personality. Soul salvation necessarily includes bodily salvation, but there is a physical salvation which leaves the soul groveling in its sinful state. There are schemes of reform which deal with man outwardly. To this "per se" we make no objection. But the gospel of Christ takes hold on the inner life and elevates the entire being. It penetrates to the interior spirit, and thereby renews the whole man. This divine remedy, brought to light through the gospel, saves the sinner from sin's penalty and power. For sin ramifies every department of our nature, physical and moral, perverting the will, corrupting the affections, searing the conscience, infecting the soul. So grace announces pardon, leads to purity, assures victory, elevates and ennobles, gives promise of final redemption from sin's dire curse in complete restoration by a resurrection from the dead.—George Needham.

NOTED AMERICANS HONORED.

Patriotism is made to burn brighter as students are taught of the great deeds and the lofty purposes of those Americans who gave of their lives, their thought, their genious to their country.

In the Hall of Fame of New York University, ten busts have just been unveiled, commemorating great Americans, whose work has meant much to the nation. According to the regulations made and provided for this temple of fame, no man or woman is eligible for honor therein until he or she has been twenty-five years dead, thus removing any possibility of hysteria or immediate enthusiasm from influencing the choice.

The busts which have just been unveiled are of John Adams, the second President; Phillips Brooks, the great teacher and preacher; Samuel L. Clements (Mark Twain), the beloved humorist; Peter Cooper, founder of Cooper Union; James Buchanan Eads, great civil engineer; Joseph Henry, noted scientist and father of the electric magnet; Andrew Jackson, sometimes called the real father of the Democratic party, since he carried on and made universally known the principles of Jefferson; Thomas Jefferson, one of the founders of the nation; William Thomas Green Morton, distinguished surgeon; and Alice Freeman Palmer, noted educator and leader of women.

GROWN-UPS NEED EDUCATION.

That adult education must not be neglected while considering the needs and extension of juvenile education, is a caution uttered by more than one educator. An enlightened citizenry is the best preventative of war; and enlightenment for grown-ups who did not receive an adequate education as children is as much a State duty as primary education. At least, so believes State Superintendent of Public Instruction Will C. Wood, of California. He says: "The more progressive nations of Europe after the war, awakened to the fact that a knowledge of reading, writing and arithmetic is not sufficient to enable citizens to meet the challenging problems of the post-war period. Tradition and prejudices, which had so much to do with the determination of public policy before the war, were hopelessly insufficient in the face of new issues. What was needed to overcome misunderstandings was better understanding growing out of more thorough knowledge.

"Adult education is not to be confused with university extension as we know it in America. In adult education, the students are active, not passive, questioners, rather than mere listeners. They seek to discover the truth by considering conflicting views on economic and social questions. The instructor is a leader, not a didactic or dogmatic teacher.

"The adult education movement stands for progress through constructive effort. In stands opposed to revolution. Its purpose is to find a way to insure industrial, economic and international peace. These ideals it would attain through an active search for truth, which we must know in order to be free."

RELIGION AN INSPIRATION.

There can be no doubt but that, in the minds of a great many people, religion seems to be a restraint rather than an inspiration. To them it is a kill-joy, a skeleton at the feast of life, a kind of incarnate "don't." In Robert Louis Stevenson's essay on Robert Burns, there is this striking passage: "Burns was not devoted to religion, but haunted by it." That is exactly how thousands of people feel. Even when they appear to accept the fundamental truths of religion, they do so almost reluctantly, and such intellectual assent means little except to lessen their enjoyment of life. For them, religion, as a power, enriching life, can scarcely be said to exist. They simply cannot understand the frame of mind which constrains people to sing:

"My God, the spring of all my joys,
The life of my delights;
The glory of my brightest days,
And comfort of my nights."

This unfortunate misconception of religion is particularly common with young people. Probably it accounts, more than any other reason, for the Church. During recent years there has, undoubtedly, been much effort to remove such an idea, and there are signs that a very much more wholesome idea is gaining ground. In creating this latter view of religion, the Sunday School has played, and must continue to play, a very important part. The splendid good cheer and happy atmosphere to be found in so many schools, is doing more than anything else could do to dissipate the gloomy view of religion. It is being demonstrated that the happiest young people anywhere are those to be found in the Sunday School and Churches. And people are being made to realize that the restraints of religion make not for the impoverishment, but rather for the enrichment of life.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE HEAD OF THE CHURCH.

The first principle and fundamental position of the Christian Church is that "the Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church." And Christians are happy and contented in this belief and assertion. If the revealed will of God, as expressed in His Word, is to be relied upon, the Christian Church is certainly safe in this belief and assertion. In Col. 1:18, Paul, in speaking of the Lord Jesus, says: "He is the Head of the body, the Church." Again the same inspired writer, in Eph. 1:22, declares, in speaking of the God of our Lord Jesus Christ: "And gave him to be the Head over all things of the Church which is His body."

The Christian Church believes, therefore, with Paul, that the Church has one Head, and one only, for a normal living body cannot have two heads. Matthew had anticipated Paul in this declaration by saying, in Matt. 23:8: "For one is your Master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren." And in the same chapter, the 10th verse: "Neither be ye called Masters: for one is your Master, even Christ." Every individual Christian, therefore, whether the makers of the creeds will grant it or not, has just one Lord and Master over him or her, namely: the Lord Jesus Christ.

Matthew and Paul were not speaking on their own authority in their declarations. One recalls the fact that none other than Jesus Himself had said: "I will build my Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Neither popes, priests, bishops, presidents, nor principalities are building the Church—the Lord Jesus reserves that right to Himself. He is its Founder, its Builder, its Master, its Head. Every individual, through His grace, his direct access to Him and to the Father through Him. There are no masters, there are no rulers, there are no overlords in the Christian Church.

The prophet Isaiah had anticipated such a day, such a time, and such a Church, when in Isaiah 61:6, he made this declaration: "But ye shall be named the priests of the Lord, men shall call you the ministers of our God." Before God, every man is his own priest, meaning in this that as the priest of old had access to God through the holy place, so should there come a time when men who accepted Jesus Christ as their own should have access through Him, their High Priest, to the most holy place.

Evidently, Isaiah was speaking of the radiant Church and the day of the radiant Church when he exhorted (Isa. 60:1), "Arise, shine: for thy light shall come and the glory of the Lord is risen upon Thee."

What a responsibility, therefore, and what a challenge to every individual member of the Christian Church! "Arise, shine: for thy light is come"; that is, the light from the life and the teaching, the death and the resurrection of our Lord Jesus, and through this the glory of the Lord is risen upon Thee—the Church, the individual, in those of the Church who are sharing the glory of the Lord as they walk in the light and the life and the truth of the Lord.

The Christian Church, at any rate, is willing, through the declaration of its first principle, to rest its case here and to declare to all mankind that Jesus is the Christ and He only is the Head of the Church. We Christians have a great task here. We should be declaring this fact in the thousand places where we are not now declaring it. For this is the declaration that must carry the Church to ultimate triumph and eternal victory. Bear in mind that Jesus said He would build His Church on the revelation to Peter, namely: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." The word should go out to all the world from pulpit and press and pew that Jesus Christ is the Son of the living God, the Founder and Builder of the Church, its supreme and undisputed Head and Master.

No one who accepts the Bible as the Word of God can successfully gainsay the first principle and fundamental position of the Christian Church.

A CORRECTION THAT DOES NOT CORRECT.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN believes in Christian union, and, with all their faults, loves the Disciples of Christ still. The Disciples of Christ believe in Christian union and have a way of claiming our people and our possessions without due process of law or due attention to the facts which we cannot endorse and will not condone.

There is no need to camouflage the facts. The Disciples of Christ persist in calling themselves the Christian Church when the U. S. Census and the Federal Council of Churches have given that title to our Church. God forbid that we should wear our title arrogantly or in unchristian spirit. We are anxious to share it with all Christ's followers, but legally, historically, and morally the title is ours. The Disciples of Christ should take steps to correct any of their ministers, Churches, or organizations who use our name improperly.

The great Christian Temple of Norfolk, Va., with its thousand and more members and its distinguished pastor, Dr. L. E. Smith, were all calmly placed in the fold of the Disciples of Christ by Mr. W. F. Nee, of Lynchburg, Va., correspondent of the Christian-Evangelist, of St. Louis. THE CHRISTIAN SUN protested vigorously against this "ecclesiastical rape," as its editorial styled the matter, and sent a marked copy to the Christian-Evangelist.

Under date of April 21st, the Rev. B. A. Abbott, editor of the Christian-Evangelist, wrote THE CHRISTIAN SUN and said the Norfolk matter had been taken too seriously. He was asked to write a disclaimer and correction in his paper, in which event THE CHRISTIAN SUN would make favorable comment and so close the incident.

Accordingly, on May 8th, the following appeared in the Christian Evangelist:

"A Correction.

"Both the Herald of Gospel Liberty, Dayton, Ohio, and THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Richmond, Va., have called our attention to an error in the Christian-Evangelist of April 3, 1924. In a letter from a correspondent at Lynchburg, Va., on page 445 of that issue, an account of the dedication of the 'Christian Temple,' in Norfolk, Va., was announced as belonging to the Disciples of Christ. The extensive and costly structure is the property of the Christian Church, and these brethren are justly proud of it. The error was due to the fact that many of the Churches of the Disciples are known as Christian Churches, especially throughout the South. In Baltimore, Md., for example, the Disciples have had a fine Church known as 'The Temple' for fifteen or twenty years, thus somewhat pre-empting the name. It was easy, therefore, for our young correspondent to be misled. THE SUN felt that we were trying to 'steal' their fine new house of worship; but instead of a 'trick so dark and vain,' we cordially wish that they may prosper and build many more such structures to adorn their own Church and further the work of the kingdom."

Now, this correction does not correct. It leaves the way open for this very thing to happen again. THE CHRISTIAN SUN owes it to its constituency to say that it will continue to protest such "errors" and to do it until the Disciples of Christ take steps to remedy an unjustifiable or unexcusable practice. Particularly in this connection do we object to the covert defense of the correspondent of the Christian-Evangelist by claiming that "The Christian Temple" of the great and lovable Dr. Peter Amslie, in Baltimore, had pre-empted that name for Churches of the Disciples of Christ. A local Church is a local Church, but a denomination is a national, a world affair. We had a right to call our great Church in Norfolk "The Christian Temple," and the fact that we did so in no way justified Mr. Nee in thinking it was, therefore, a Church of the Disciples of Christ.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN will not retain as correspondents men who do not know the difference between the Christian Church and the Disciples of Christ. Further, Lynchburg College, where Mr. Nee is a student, knows fully the difference between the two Churches. There is more we could say, but we refrain.

We repeat here, as in THE SUN'S former editorial, that such practices are the way to disunion rather than to union. We say it with sorrow all the greater, because in an effort to explain an error one of their leading periodicals has revealed a disposition to grab at a straw. Such camouflaging will not get us anywhere.

We love the Disciples of Christ, but we feel that they should respect our name, and when an error is made that they should willingly correct it without attempt at justification or camouflage.

THE BIG CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The Christian Church was big in origin, for it grew out of a sincere desire to relate the Church to the divine plan as revealed in the Acts of the Apostles 11:26, and to make Christ the only head of the Church. There was no human ambition in the mind of Rice Haggard when he arose in the meeting in Old Lebanon, Surry County, Va., on August 4, 1794, and moved the Church be known as the "Christian Church," to the exclusion of all party or sectarian names. He seemed to have been inspired to make that motion. No selfish motive, no personal gain entered into the mind of that group of earnest disciples as they sought, and obtained, divine guidance in that simple action which lives still, and no doubt will live to the end of time.

This Church is also big in its history. It is not big in numbers; it is not big in wealth; it is not big in its reputation—but it has been as leaven in the great body of Protestantism. There is one peculiarity of leaven that it works silently in the meal and loses itself in the larger lump. The Christian Church history has been making itself felt, but not written, in other denominations converted them into its own position, changed old views, and challenging the conscience on great fraternal and co-operative service. Its history is greater in others than in itself. The great Church from which the Southern branch of the Christian Church sprang has adopted everything for which James O'Kelley stood, except the elimination of the episcopacy. Lay representation has become a great factor in the Methodist Church, which has modified even episcopacy itself.

This Christian Church is big in its potentialities. The leaven idea is measured by its constituent principles as a chemical agent. The Christian spirit of this Church is expressed in an old statement by an unknown author—"In essentials, unity; in nonessentials, liberty; in all things, charity.' That position is potential in the kingdom. It is working silently, powerfully, and it cannot be stopped. The Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America is the result of this idea at work in Protestantism. The great thinkers in all denominations are inspired by this same principle of "the kingdom first and always." The purpose of the Christian Church is larger than the organization. It is not what the world thinks of us, but what God thinks of us; not what we are, but what we can do for Him.

The Christian Church is great in its future. Jesus "shall see of the travail of his soul and shall be satisfied." He was never satisfied with what He had accomplished. He was always looking forward to greater things; and His future was in others. "Greater things than these shall ye do, because I go to my Father." The Christian is small enough to keep pride out; it is big enough to keep Christ in; it is hopeful enough to live and work in the future; it is leaven in a larger Church that will be touched and influenced by its position till the whole Church realizes "the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace."

KEEPING OUR OBLIGATIONS.

"Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledge. A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership." So writes Dr. Staley about our Men and Millions pledges. Yes, many have decided they will never make another pledge. So be it; but that does not release us from the pledges we have made. Let us, by God's help, pay the pledges we have made—and then decide what we will or will not do. Certainly all who love or care for the Christian Church and its enterprises want to pay their pledges, and will pay them. To this end, many are nobly sacrificing.

A resolution asking the trustees of Columbia University to remove Nicholas Murray Butler as its president because of his attack on the eighteenth amendment, was passed by the Kings County, N. Y., W. C. T. U. at the closing meeting of its forty-first annual convention.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY PROGRAM.

June is set apart as cradle roll month, when our Churches and missionary societies will plan for better cradle roll work. Every baby in the Church community should be enrolled. It will be especially appropriate for the monthly missionary meeting to be in the form of a "mother and baby" meeting and party. Every mother and baby in the Church should be invited. A special poster announcing the time and place of the meeting should be made and hung in the vestibule of the Church. This may be made by arranging a number of pictures of mothers and babies in a circle and writing in the center, "Jesus loves the little children," or "America's greatest asset." The following may be used as an invitation to the meeting:

Mothers and babies! Mothers and babies!
Come for a meeting and party with us.
We'll work together and play together,
And you'll have a good time, we trust.

Place and time of meeting may be added.

Program.

Devotional services.

1. Meeting called to order.

2. Special prayer for the meeting. Close by all repeating Psa. 19:14.

3. Songs, "Jesus Loves Me" and "I Think When I read that Sweet Story."

4. Scripture lesson read by some mother: Matt. 18:2-6; Mark 10:13-16.

5. Prayer—that the mothers may be better Christians and better prepared for the task of leading their children to God. For the babies, that they may early love and serve the Master.

Points for special talks, papers and discussion.

1. The cradle roll work explained. Ages from birth to four years. Must have a live, wide-awake superintendent, who keeps a record and chart in the Sunday School room and looks after the babies by visiting and remembering each birthday with a card. Emphasize the importance of giving the child an opportunity to be linked up with the Church early in life, and thus drawing the parents into closer fellowship with God and their own children. Discuss "Mary the mother of Jesus and Jesus the babe in Bethlehem and boy in the temple."

2. "Jesus loves the little children—all the children of the world: red and yellow, black and white—they are precious in His sight. Jesus loves the little children of the world." (This is sometimes sung to the tune of "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp.") Make this a real missionary talk. We love Jesus because He loves all the people of the world. Picture Him blessing the little children of the world—the red, yellow, black and white. Emphasize the importance of teaching children that Jesus loves all and that we too must love and help those who are not so fortunate as we.

3. Teaching stewardship to boys and girls. That we are stewards of all that God has given us—our lives, our thoughts, our actions, our material goods. Matt. 6:19-34: "Lay not up treasures for yourselves, etc." Haggai 2-6:8: "The silver is mine, and the gold is mine, saith Jehovah of Hosts." Every boy and girl should be given some money of his (or her) own and taught to give it for the work of the Sunday School and Church.

4. Open discussion (leader in charge), "Is the Sunday School giving our boys and girls the needed missionary and other religious instruction?" Consider the preparation for teaching, both secular and religious, the Sunday School teachers have had. Is one hour per week ample time for religious instruction? Do they have separate rooms for classes? Is your Sunday School teaching missions as something vital and practical or as side-issue? Are your own missionaries and mission fields presented to the boys and girls? The boys and girls are early thinking of a life-work; do you present the needs of the darkened lands to them as fields for life-service? Does your Sunday School give one offering each month to missions and one to the orphanage?

Angie Crew's mother had her prayer for a missionary from the West Milton, Ohio, Church answered when her own daughter volunteered for the foreign fields. Angie Crew is our latest missionary to Japan.

Business Session—Closing Song and Prayer.
Notes—Things to Do.

1. If you don't have a cradle roll in your Church, organize one immediately. If your cradle roll is only a Sunday School cradle roll, make it a missionary one, too. Information about the organization will be sent to you at your request.

2. If your Sunday School does not have a missionary superintendent, have your woman's society elect one who will, once each month, make a five-minute missionary talk.

3. The following leaflets may be ordered from Mrs. Emma S. Powers, Room 25 C. P. A. Building, Dayton, Ohio: Roberts' "Missionary Cradle Roll," 10c dozen; "Sonny Jim," 2c each; "Hints and Suggestions for Cradle Roll," "Cradle Roll Certificates," 20c dozen; cradle roll mite-boxes, 10c dozen.

4. Subscribe today to the Christian Missionary, 50c per year, from C. P. A. Building, Dayton, Ohio. It gives information about our missionaries, mission fields, and programs for monthly meetings. No society can afford to do without it.

Prohibition and Industry.

Courtenay Guild, of Boston, editor of the Commercial Bulletin, has rendered the cause of prohibition and prohibition enforcement a real service in again calling to the people's attention the attitude of business and industry on the dry policy.

Business men of the United States have not changed opinion on the question of prohibition. They became convinced in days of license that the liquor traffic, from an economic standpoint, was wholly a liability. No drunken man can successfully compete with a sober man in the industrial field. No industrial concern handicapped with drunken employees can compete with the industrial concern where the abstinence rule is enforced. Carrying the rule to its ultimate conclusion, no drunken nation can successfully compete in the industrial field with a sober nation.—American Issue.

Our pastor, Prof. A. R. Flowers, spent the week ending May 24th in the Christian Brethren's Industrial School, at Geer, Va. Superintendent Bowlinger was called back to Manchester College to take part in a reunion of his old class, and Bro. Flowers was secured to take charge of the work in Bro. Bowlinger's absence; and we understand that the students were so much pleased with Bro. Flowers' services that he received a rising vote of thanks for the splendid manner in which he filled the position. Bro. Flowers spent two weeks in the Blue Ridge Industrial School, in April, on account of the illness of one of the teachers; and the students under his charge speak of him in a most complimentary way. Since coming among us, as our pastor, Prof. Flowers has proven himself to be a real competent worker among young people, in Sunday School and in Christian Endeavor, as well as a competent teacher and school manager.—E. S. Morris.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

We live in an unselfish world. Nature smiles on all. God sends His rain on the just and the unjust alike. The sun shines upon the bad as well as the good. God lavishes His blessings upon a dependent world. There is not a human necessity that is not more than met in nature, which is God's manifestation of His nature, which is love. All that God made was for many, and the world is no respector of persons. Contrary to what I have heard all my life, I am going to say that the people of the world are unselfish; but that may be a hard proposition to prove.

We work for others. A large proportion of the human race is employed by other persons or corporations. Another large number of persons are parents, and they work for others; teachers, preachers, doctors, house-servants, clerks—well, the work of the world would be small if men worked only for self. If the farmer had to produce nothing more than his family needs, he would cultivate very few acres and have little to do. If a shoemaker made shoes for none but his own family, he would not work much. The world is at work for others, and the courtesy, friendliness, intelligence of men is increased by such service as we render to others. It would be a rude world if men could work only for themselves. The co-operative work of the world is a refining process as well as a wealth-producing process. It is the unselfish work of the world that makes the world better and proves that man is made in the image of the unselfish God.

We live for others in our thought, our plans, our dress, our education, and our religion. The barber-shop would die if men cared nothing for what others think; the fashion shop would have no place in the city if ladies did not consult the thought and taste of the public. How many sidewalks would be swept if no pedestrians passed that way? What would people care for grammar if no human ears listened when they speak? Would painters furnish pictures for art galleries if no eyes gazed in admiration upon their work? What would the morality of the world be if none passed judgment but the actor in this field? How would parents conduct themselves if their children were left out of the equation of home life? The rich man invests his money for the public good; the poor man works for the needs of men; the whole machinery of human activity is unselfish, has consideration for public opinion, for what others think. Where would religion go if there were none to pass on human beliefs and conduct? What would become of the Sabbath, the unfortunate, the Church, the school? The human race is not as selfish as we too often think; though there is enough selfishness left to make us work, dress, and live as we ought.

ELON LETTER.

The thirty-fourth Elon commencement is history. For the first time, the Whitley Memorial Auditorium was used, made possible by Trustee J. M. Darden. Sunday was a beautiful day. The great auditorium was filled at the morning service when Mr. Darden made a brief statement following the Scripture lesson by Hon. Geo. F. Whitley, son of the late L. H. Whitley, whose memory the building is ever to commemorate. Dr. Alva M. Kerr preached the baccalaureate sermon, and it was a masterpiece. No one who heard him can ever forget his message.

The other exercises of the commencement were largely attendd and highly apprciated by the concourses of Elon's friends who came. Our own people from a distance do not attend the commencements as they should. We need that more of our people should look forward to the Elon commencement as a major event on the calendar of each year's life.

The speeches by Drs. H. Shelton Smith and Walter S. Athearn were great deliverances. The seniors, both in their class-day exercises and through their representatives on commencement day acquitted themselves with credit to their alma mater. The musical concert under Prof. Greenwood's direction was a fitting close to a great commencement season.

Alamance Building was formally presented to the college by Mr. W. E. Sharpe on Tuesday afternoon at 3:30. Mr. Sharpe was chairman of the committee that raised the money for the building. Dr. E. L. Moffitt accepted it on behalf of the college. Dr. W. W. Staley made one of his extempore speeches. It was in characteristic vein and pleased his hearers. But the item that pleased me most was the following voluntary message, signed by each member of the senior class:

"The senior class, believing in the ideals for which Elon stands, pledges its loyalty to those ideals, but feels that at the close of the four years of college work that the men and women of the class are not able to do for their college that which they feel should be fitting.

"The senior class believes that Elon is worthy of the best which it has to give, and pledges itself, in the coming years, to give as it has been prospered. The seniors pledge individually their lives in loyalty and service to the college, and that each member will make donation worthy of the things which the college has given him, as early as it seems possible. (Signed) S. M. Lynam, Jennie Gunter, Victoria Adams, Essie Mae Cotten, Ora Belle Pace, Della Cotten, Isabella W. Cannon, Alice Weber, Mary G. Lawrence, Freda Dimmick, Lucy Austin, Joe T. Banks, R. H. Gunn, Marjorie Burton, C. W. Hook, Myrtle Somers, H. W. May, G. C. Mann, Nannie Aldridge, Wm. R. Hardesty, Wm. T. Scott, president; Louise Homewood, secretary; M. L. Patrick, treasurer; M. Alice Barrett, P. D. Rudd, J. D. Barber, A. H. Hook, J. Mark McAdams, Opal S. Howell, G. C. Crutchfield, H. C. Hainer, O. C. Johnson, Madge Moffitt, John C. Whitesell, Mabel Cheek, Mary Hall Stryker, M. Ethel Hill, J. A. Hornaday, W. W. Woody, J. R. Barker."

I know that the reading of this pledge of loyalty and devotion to the college will bring joy to the hearts of those who love and have sacrificed for Elon, even as it does to my own heart. A college that can produce graduates of such spirit cannot be said to be altogether a failure.

ROCKINGHAM PURCHASES PARSONAGE.

Antioch, Linville, and New Hope Churches of the Rockingham pastorate, Virginia Valley Central Christian Conference, have recently jointly closed a real estate deal by which they have secured some very desirable property in Linville, Va., which is to be used as a parsonage for the pastor of this group of Churches. The property, consisting of an eight-room modern dwelling, lot and other buildings, is in a very desirable location, being conveniently situated as to the Christian Church here, the Linville-Edom High School (one of the best in the county), two stores, and the railroad depot and the post-office.

The membership of the three Churches that made this valuable purchase are to be congratulated for having taken this forward step in meeting a long-felt and urgent need. Heretofore, when this group of Churches has called a pastor, it had no suitable place for him and his family to live. Dwelling-houses are very scarce in this section, and rent is high, especially in Harrisonburg, where some of the recent pastors have located.

Now, whenever these Churches have to call a pastor they have quite an inducement to offer him, in addition to his salary and plenty of work. However, the present pastor and his wife cherish the hope that it be a long, long time before these good people have to call another pastor, for we have already fallen deeply in love with all of them and have found them a most congenial people to serve. Besides, we are highly pleased with the "parsonage" and our new neighbors. We moved into the parsonage May 21st. We are exceedingly happy and grateful. We are also made to feel more humble and more thankful to our Heavenly Father and our Saviour.

The Ladies' Aid Society of Antioch Church expect to hold their next monthly meeting (Wednesday, June 11th) in the parsonage.

As to the general work of this pastorate, we can already see many indications that it is "taking on new life" and moving forward.

MEDITATIONS FROM A PARSON'S DIARY.

The man who has the disposition to rule or ruin should, under no condition, be granted the authority to rule. Such an attitude disqualifies him for leadership.

The man who thinks that every one else is crooked will bear close watching himself. The chances are he is only judging other people by himself.

Arkansas leads the Richmond parade because she is first State to reach her goal. Other States will follow in ranking as goals are reached. Where will your State march in this parade? Are you helping, by securing registrations, to put your State at head of line?

The second State to reach its goal will have the hotel room provided free for its State president. The third State will receive a subscription to the Dixie Endeavorer for each of its State officers. Which award will your State receive?

THE INTERPRETATION OF LIFE.

By Rev. S. L. Beougher.

We are immortal beings—beings compacted of the germs of all excellence. Each human being is a power, more or less conscious of itself, tending toward the things that are absolutely right. In every soul exists the power of being honorable, faithful, patient, pure in heart; the power of loving, of making sacrifices for the sake of love and righteousness, and especially the power of independent exertion of will. The beginning of the realization of everything that has ever inspired our race lives in these immortal souls of ours; and the deepest thing that is in us, inspiring the exertion of that power of the immortal life, is a great yearning to express these qualities of our nature and of our whole being. We desire, in that self-expression and by that self-expression, to bring ourselves into contact with God, so we shall know day by day more and more about God, and so make him the greatest and nearest reality of all our experience. We desire, with this great and wonderful longing, to find satisfaction in living, so as to be glad that we are alive day by day, moment by moment, in that we are able in some way to express ourselves, and by the very joy of that expression to come to the consciousness that we have that in us which is worth expressing.

Yet, behold the conditions which we find confronting us—a world dominated by hardship, disappointment, loss, sorrow, and things that crush our souls—and the harder we try to express that which is best in us, the more forcibly we come up against those barriers, shall I call them? Whatever they are, we group them under the name of life's discipline. How are we to interpret this relation between our eager spirits and the world in which we are compelled to live? The only way to interpret our life is to study our own souls as they are now, conscious of their immortality, conscious of their nearness to the life of God. Let us study human souls and see what is the effect upon them of these conditions of living which are called the disciplines of life.

There are those who tell us that these hard things in life are dark shadows coming between the light and the creatures of God that cannot live without light. They tell us that these trials are something to be battled with; that they are foes of our finer being; that they are the instrumentalities of the great enemy of God. They even dare to tell us that these things display the wrath of God. So they call us to arms whenever they ask us to serve God and humanity, and urge us to come out and fight—fight our enemies, beat down the things that obstruct our progress.

How easy it is to respond to that great appeal! The challenge to arms moves every strong nature; and when we answer it, and take the world that we live in as a hostile thing, feeling that we are indeed given over by God into the hands of Satan for some mysterious reason ever unknown to us, then how easy it is for us to imagine that, whatever we do, God is on our side and not on the other side! How easy it is to imagine that we are following our fine ambition to express our being, when we are simply asserting ourselves in a way that is not noble, but chiefly animated by the desire to win, to put down something, to overcome some force or party. It seems to me that this interpretation of life is deficient in the fundamental principle of Christian living—that of self-denial. A certain type of self-denial appears in the life of the soldier; these men have displayed courage, which, in the pages of romance and reality alike, always inspires us. Yet back of that note of triumph which comes to us out of the military life there lies the great, underlying, mournful wail of them that suffer wrong, of them that are beaten down with sorrows that need not have been. So we learn that that kind of self-sacrifice is a self-sacrifice which gets so overwhelmed with the vision of glory as to forget the consequences of rushing onward after glory, as to forget the sorrows, the afflictions, and the sins that have ever followed in the trail of the simple militant life. There are others who hold that this time of ours does not produce those beautiful things that shine out of the records of a thousand years. They say that whosoever would find ideals of righteousness, whosoever would find human strength, the ability and the power of putting forth the things that are great, must go back into the past and see what men have done. When the ardent souls of the present, active world come to these people who know the goodness of the past, and tell them with brave, young emotion what they mean to do for the uplifting of the world, these who think that life is completed always reply: "That has been tried, my young friend; that has been tried." And the restless spirit, overcome by the perception of the reality of life so as for a moment to overlook the natural reverence for human experience, can but reply, "Yes, tried by you; but I have not tried these ways, and I propose to try them." Why, it is given to every one who will deeply and nobly understand the possibilities of his being to know that it is not the success of the effort that is the chief thing, but the effort itself. It is he endeavor to make us be what we can be; and, compared with the endeavor, all results are as nothing. Heaven lies out there before us; but it is the effort to get there that means something to strong souls, not the livingt herein. In that fable of ancient Rome, Peter, discouraged by the great difficulty of the task in which he was engaged, had deserted the cause, and was fleeing from that wicked city when he met the mysterious figure of his Master, and asked Him: "Whither goest Thou, Lord?" And the Master answered: "To Rome." He turned his back upon heaven to go to the place where the stress of life was most serious. Where can any man, if he desires to express himself in works that shall be of use to the world, find a possibility of expressing himself other than under conditions which are hard? Adam and Eve, created mature and happy, must of necessity prove to be moral weaklings. Not until the flaming sword blazed between them and their paradise did they begin to do anything for this race or for God.

There is hinted the true interpretation of life—an interpretation which recognizes this existence of ours as one of responsible progress. These hard things that come down upon us so overwhelmingly are not to be taken as something to be fought against, but as something to be used by souls that know how to employ material that is given to them, used in the cause of all righteousness, used in the putting forth of the power that is in us.

When the sorrows of my life come down upon me, I may, in my human ignorance of the future, pray that the cup may pass from my lips; but, when that cup actually touches my lips, then I have a chance to be patient, earnest, consecrated unto all good things, such as I never had before. How could any human soul grow in the power of patience, through God, unless he had something that required patience in him? How could we, by any possibility, put forth into this world the splendid influence of purity of heart unless there were continually confronting us possibilities of being something other than pure in heart? You will find that every hardship that comes to any human soul, however excessive the hardship may be, gives him the chance so to use it as to become a better soul than he has been before. He may not be glad that it has come, for it may not add to the happiness of his life. Yet I have seen enough of life to dare to believe that, whensoever any human soul takes hold of his life in the spirit of the soldier who goes forth to serve and not simply to fight, and acts constantly by the great purpose of building the kingdom of God and his righteousness, invariably finds contentment, happiness, or something else which satisfies him just as well.

God asks us to be good; and here all around us, like flowers in our way, he scatters opportunities to be good, and to do something that is helpful, something that is patient, something that is pure. He asks us to follow the Master in the great demonstration of the law of self-sacrifice; and here, by our way, there are opportunities for us to do that thing, and nothing to prevent us from doing it save the weakness that exists in our souls. It is our duty to put forth the qualities that are within us by means of the opportunities which God has given us, understanding, through this Christian interpretation of life, that our difficulties are divine opportunities, and not limitations set up by Satan. The great symbol of the cross of Chrst expresses this side of life. The cross was to Him what these crosses are to us—His moral opportunity. In the presence of that opportunity, what did He not do for this world of ours! If life is not hard for anybody, his first duty under God is to go out and find something that is hard. There is no other way to get that cross upon one's shoulder than to go out and find something that is hard. Life, then, is not a battle. Put it the other way, and it will be true: battle is a life. Battle of all kinds gives us a chance to live, the chance to be men and women, the chance to be heroic, the chance to be divine. Action, then, is the keynote of this interpretation of our lives. It is given to us to turn upon these perils of our daily lives instead of fleeing from them. The greatest work to which the mind can turn is to go out and interpret to a nation the underlying divine purposes that are to be found in everything that is sad, in every affliction, in every crime, to see the larger meaning of the hero's death—whosoever can see these things can teach the whole world to possess their spirits in magnificent patience in recognition to the unfailing law of God. There lies before the Church of God in this world of ours a destiny compared with which all the glories of the past shall be forgotten. Here and there in the past we find a man who has been both a hero and a wise soul, and has put forth his activities on such a basis; but the Christian Church as a whole has never dimly understood the possibility of doing it.

We have got to revolutionize our modern methods of charity. We have got to revolutionize our preaching. We have got to get a new comprehension of the possibilities of Christianity. When at last the Church does measure up to the level of the life of its Master, men will be glad that they have a chance of grappling with the things that are hard, and will accept their lot as a challenge from God to call forth the best in them. It is your privilege and mine to take a man-part in these coming grander days of enlightened and invigorated Christianity, and thus render unto God an acceptable sacrifice, and unto men an inspiring service.

CHRISTIAN COLLEGE, FRANKLINTON, N. C.

The graduating exercises of the Christian College, Franklinton, N. C., were held on Wednesday, May 21st. There were four graduates from the high school and nineteen graduates from the grammar school. There have been enrolled the past session 148 pupils. We are now doing the work at Franklinton as required by the State for high schools, but on account of a lack of some teaching facilities we have not been placed on the accredited list. But we are supplementing the facilities required and have put in our application accordingly and expect to be placed on the accredited list by the opening of next session. The college had eight teachers in instruction last year.

The one vital need now is more dormitory room. President Henderson is my authority for the statement that if we had had the room and one or two more teachers, we could easily have from 200 to 300 students; and with the increase of the number of students, the expenses per student could be curtailed.

The college has had a very fine year under the capable and efficient management of President Henderson and his able assistants in the teaching. He has been very accurate and prompt in rendering financial statements monthly to the board, and his books and accounts for the past year are exceedingly gratifying.

Dr. D. A. Long, pastor of our Franklinton Christian Church, has taught a course in Bible in the Church and has rendered invaluable aid. Too much praise and gratitude cannot be given Dr. Long for his unabating interest and his untiring efforts for the success of Christian College.

It was a real joy to the writer to have the pleasure this year of delivering the baccalaureate address and meeting such a fine and deeply interested audience at Franklinton.

By appointment of the board of control, a committee of three—J. O. Atkinson, Rev. J. L. Foster, and President Henderson—met architects on the college ground on commencement day and looked over the situation thoroughly, and these architects are preparing, voluntarily, pencil sketches for a girls' dormitory. The board of control realizes that this dormitory is essential, and plans are on foot for its building at the very earliest possible date.

We are expecting to erect a building, substantial, commodious, and fire-proof, at a cost not to exceed $40,000. The board feels that this amount of money must be had from some source and that the Church would find it very difficult to invest this amount of money elsewhere at present with promise of greater returns in kingdom service and growth than at Franklinton. The college deserves this consideration, and it is devoutly hoped that real benefactors can be found who will have the largeness of vision and goodness of heart to supply these much-needed funds.

SUNDAY SCHOOL MISSIONARY OFFERINGS FOR MAY.

The following schools take the monthly offering for missions, and have sent in amounts named in May: Danville, Va., $5.11; Bethlehem, Timberville, Va., $1.97; Rock Stand, Roanoke, Ala., $1.00; Winchester, Va., $4.91; New Providence, Burlington, N. C., $3.13; Haw River, N. C., $8.53; Linville, Harrisonburg, Va., $3.15; Wadley, Ala., $1.14; High Point, N. C., $1.72; Monticello, Brown Summit, N. C., $6.18; Ramseur, N. C., $2.29; Rosemont, South Norfolk, Va., $10; Hanks Chapel, Pittsboro, N. C., $6.08; Palm Street, Greensboro, N. C., $6.90; Rose Hill, Columbus, Ga., $4.57; Pleasant Grove, News Ferry, Va., $3.00; Wake Chapel, Cardenas, N. C., $4.02; Damascus, Chapel Hill, N. C., 54c; Dendron, Va., $4.27; Shallow Ford, Elon College, N. C., $3.53; Apples Chapel, Brown Summit, N. C., $1.60; Wakefield, Va., $4.67; South Norfolk, Va., $8.06; St. Paul's, Wyoming, Del., $1.30; Richland, Ga., $1.33; Portsmouth, Va., $9.51; Leaksville, Luray, Va., $2.06; Hines Chapel, McLeansville, N. C., $2.21; Beulah, Wadley, Ala., $1.00; Mt. Auburn, Manson, N. C., $4.70; Holland, Va., $12.00; Berea (Nansemond), Driver, Va., $8.00; Zion, Moncure, N. C., $4.25; Winchester, Va., $5.89; Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., $100.00; Burlington, N. C., $75.52—total for month of May, 1924, $324.14.

We are grateful to those good schools for their liberal offerings to our mission cause. We trust that this number shall greatly increase, as funds are so much needed now to carry forward our missionary work at home in Carroll County, Va., and abroad in Japan. We are happy at what these wide-awake schools are now doing.

Gratefully,

ELON COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT—A GREAT SERMON.

The thirty-fourth annual commencement of Elon College began here Sunday morning, with the baccalaureate sermon by Dr. Alva M. Kerr, of Dayton, Ohio. The Whitley Memorial Auditorium was formally opened for the first time for this service.

Work on this auditorium has been rushed to the utmost during the past month in order to have it ready for the commencement exercises, and though not entirely completed in every detail it is practically finished and is being used for the commencement.

Rev. Dr. Kerr is editor of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, the official organ of the Christian denomination, and a fluent speaker. After paying high tribute to the greatness of the occasion as manifested in the wonderful new college plant which means a new day for the denomination and its service for the world, Dr. Kerr gave an interpretation of the temptation, as recorded in the fourth chapter of Matthew's gospel. He turned from the usual individualistic interpretation and gave to it a wider application as its principles pertain to the larger content of the kingdom. He found in it not the incident of the hour, but the slow and travail-wrought decision of days and weeks of intellectual and spiritual struggle.

Christ, as a young man, just starting out on His life-work, weighed life and the purposes of life and sought a definite decision in His own heart as to whether he would have the spiritual insight and the moral courage to dare to refuse a crown and choose a cross for the salvation of humanity. He said:

"Christ's first decision there in the wilderness was along the line of that primeval temptation, which seems to be just as contemporaneous today as it was primeval, to allow the physical and material impulses and ambitions to carry us away to our ruin.

"The one gravest question now facing mankind is whether or not our material advancement has not outstripped our spiritual development; whether or not our intelligence, our inventive genius by which we make machinery to pile up wealth, to whirl us off in new and perilous forms of pleasure, to intensify and make more intricate and explosive the contacts of human society—whether or not our intellectual ability to do all this has not outrun our spiritual insight and power to understand and control it? This will be the gravest peril to which you must help to give immediate answer and protection.

"While the Church has been busy here and there with its rapid discussion of ism and asms, of the proper mode of baptism, of the right way to wear a surplice or swing a censor, of fundamentalism and modernism, of whether man is still a bigger monkey than when he started, while the Church has been busy at all this irrelevant and mostly inconceivably trivial mess of dissension and division, our chemists, our inventors, our forces of commerce and industry have gone on piling up agency after agency of pleasure and profit and persecution that will destroy civilization unless they are brought under the sure mastery of the spiritual. The Christian world has not been keeping pace with this material progress, nor producing spiritual insight and motive and power fast enough to master and control these physical and material forces. This is your most immediate and urgent task and responsibility—and mine.

"The second temptation, reduced to its final analysis, was simply the old, familiar one which prompts a man or a nation to take a reckless chance, hoping that God will come to the rescue and prevent a disaster.

"I know that I need take no time to persuade you here that all God's universe is under law. But I wonder if you are just as sure of that momentous fact in the social and political and spiritual world as you are in the physical? Or are you one of that great multitude that still go blundering on in all the great fields of human relations in the hope that God will overrule all our foolishness and recklessness so that everything will come out all right in the end?

"Think for a moment of how inexcusably stupid it is in this twentieth century to conduct our farms and mills and factories and machinery with strictly modern and high-powered skill and efficiency and international relations to blunder along under the most antiquated and high-powered superstition and foolishness—superstition and foolishness of which even the ancient world might well be ashamed. Even our farmers have thrown ignorance and superstition to the wind, and no longer plant by signs or the light or dark of the moon as their fathers did. But in the realm of citizenship we still have the same superstition about party bias, the same fool submission to the party whip, the same mad obsession for party victory, and the same sordid political manipulations in the dark moon, of which our ignorant and superstitious forbears were guilty. It is a strange mark of crude and perilous ignorance standing against this otherwise quite intelligent and modern generation.

"One of the most dangerous sayings of today is that frequently heard hope which piously declares that 'Nothing but God can save civilization.' It seems to infer that God may put forth His hand to save the world from ruin and woe. But that is the very thing that God will not do—no more than He will save a house from burning or a bank from failure or a field from woods. If we persist in dashing ourselves down; if we persist on climbing up on a treacherous and unstable pinnacle; if we go on putting together the highly explosive elements in a highly explosive way, the ruin of civilization is inevitable, and there is utterly no hope that God will cancel the effect of our stupidity and wickedness and save mankind this woe."

And the third definite decision of the Master, said Dr. Kerr, was His determination to give His life utterly to the service of mankind along the line of these principles. He turned away from the easy course, from the glare and the glitter of earthly possessions and ease and safety, and chose the long, hard road which led by the way of the cross and Calvary, but which came at last to the inauguration of a new and irresistible tide of benediction and blessing in the affairs of manhood and womanhood of today to make the same decision to spend and to be spent to the uttermost for the good of humanity, regardless of any and every cost to themselves.

At the evening service, President W. A. Harper delivered the baccalaureate address to the graduating class. He spoke on the theme of "The Fruit of Elon College—Christian Character Building," and took as his text Heb. 8:5: "See that thou make all things according to the pattern shewed to thee in the mount." (This address was printed in full in last issue of THE SUN. It was delivered in Dr. Harper's usual eloquent manner and made a profound impression.)

The outstanding feature of the Monday session of the Elon commencement was the alumni oration by Dr. H. Shelton Smith, educational superintendent of the International Council of Religious Education, Chicago. Dr. Smith is a member of the class of '17. His address occurred at the night program. He is well known at the college among the students, having visited the college and spoke here at a recent session of the General Convention, and his address was well received.

The class-day program, which occurred at the morning hour, consisted of the welcome address by Wm. T. Scott, the class history by Mary Graham Lawrence, the class poem by Sion M. Lynam, the last will and testament by Alice Barrett, the class prophecy by Mrs. C. M. Cannon, the delivery of trophies by Nannie Aldredge, and the delivery and acceptance of the mantle by G. C. Mann and W. B. Terrell.

The graduating class has forty members, all of whom participated in the exercises this morning. Wm. T. Scott, Greensboro, is president of the class; J. R. Barker, Burlington, vice-president; Louise Homewood, Graham, secretary, and M. L. Patrick, New Hill, treasurer.

The class prophecy, the last will and testament, and the delivery of trophies were humorous features, and furnished amusement for the audience and class members. The other items of the morning program were of a more serious nature. Mr. Scott, in his welcome address, made the audience feel that their presence was appreciated, and the delivery of the senior mantle to the juniors brought a realization to the underclassmen of the duties and obligations ahead of them in their college course.

The members of the graduating class who are to come up for degrees on Tuesday morning are Victoria Adams, New Britain, Conn.; Nannie Aldridge, Union Ridge, N. C.; Lucy Austin, Taylorsville, N. C.; Joe T. Banks, Gomez, Texas; J. Dan Barber, Elon College, N. C.; J. R. Barker, Burlington, N. C.; Alice Barrett, Ponce, P. R.; Marjorie Burton, Brown Summit, N. C.; Mrs. C. M. Cannon, Elon College, N. C.; Della Lee Cotten, Greensboro, N. C.; Essie Mae Cotton, Greensboro, N. C.; G. C. Crutchfield, Kernersville, N. C.; Freda Dimmick, Sanford, N. C.; R. H. Gunn, Brown Summit, N. C.; H. C. Hainer, Richmond, Va.; W. R. Hardesty, Swepsonville, N. C.; Ethel M. Hill, Florence, S. C.; Charlotte Louise Homewood, Graham, N. C.; Archie Hines Hook, Greenville, N. Y.; Clark W. Hook, Greenville, N. Y.; J. A. Hornaday, Elon College, N. C.; Opeal Seal Howell, Waynesville, N. C.; O. C. Johnson, Durham, N. C.; Mary Graham Lawrence, Elon College, N. C.; S. M. Lynam, Apex, N. C.; G. C. Mann, Grimesland, N. C.; Henry W. May, Maryland; J. Mark McAdams, Elon College, N. C.; Madge Moffitt, Ramseur, N. C.; Ora Belle Pace, Youngsville, N. C.; M. L. Patrick, New Hill, N. C.; P. D. Rudd, Brown Summit, N. C.; Wm. T. Scott, Greensboro, N. C.; Miss Myrtle Summers, Altamahaw, N. C.; Mary Hall Stryker, Berkley, Va.; Nellie Weber, Morganton, N. C.; J. C. Whitesell, Elon College, and W. W. Woody, Siler City, N. C.

At 10 o'clock this morning the board of trustees met in annual session, with a large majority of the thirty trustees present.

At 3:30 P. M., the society representatives, representing the four literary societies of the college, gave orations and essays. The college band furnished music for the occasion, and also gave a concert on the campus at 6:30 P. M. Sunday afternoon.

The first speaker of the society representatives was S. E. Abell, Clio Literary Society, who used as his subject, "Pushing Back Horizons." Following were Mary Lee Williams, Psykaleon, "Nature, the Riddle"; Kate Vance Strader, Psiphelian, "One Little City"; W. B. Terrell, Philologian, "America's Unfinished Task"; R. W. Utley, Philologian, "The Duty of American Womanhood"; Bessie Martin Psiphelian, "It Takes More than Brick to Build a College"; Rose Howell, Psykaleon, "A Universal Language," and W. C. Elder, Clio, "Social Unrest."

The members from each society spoke in competition for their society medals and pins, the winners to be announced at the society reunions.

BETHLEHEM SCHOOL OF METHODS.

Our School of Methods and Chautauqua will be held at Wadley, Ala., beginning August 11th and continuing through the week following. We hope every pastor, preacher and licentiate will avail themselves of this opportunity for vacation and study. Also, every Sunday School superintendent and teacher, and every class shall either come or be represented in the meeting.

I feel that we are going to have a great meeting—one we, of the South, cannot afford to miss. I trust every pastor in both the Alabama and the Georgia and Alabama Conferences will encourage the Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies to attend. It would be a great time with us if we could have all our Church and Sunday School workers to come together and spend a whole week in religious study and worship.

Let us begin now to plan for the meeting, and do our best to get everything in readiness to attend. There will be a small admittance fee, and board will be provided at the dormitory for all those who cannot go or come from home. We not only invite our own folks, but we welcome all who are interested in the progress of religious work to attend.

We have secured the services of Rev. J. H. Hughes in the Alabama Conference, who will represent the work among all our Sunday Schools and Endeavor Societies. Bro. Hughes is already at work. If it is best for our literary teachers to attend the summer schools to better enable them to do effectual work, is it not, therefore, necessary for our Church leadership to avail themselves of every opportunity to better prepare for the Lord's work? Yours for success,

Wadley, Ala. G. D. HUNT.

OUR PLEDGES to Men and Millions are Sacred, Solemn and Binding.

These obligations were made through the Church to the Kingdom of God and to all that pertains to building up that Kingdom in the world, so far as our Christian Church is concerned. As Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has so pertinently pointed out: "A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations--'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42)--but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

Many are making great sacrifices to meet these obligations and pay these pledges. Every one who fails to do so not only produces paralysis in his own moral system, but to that extent paralyses the efforts and sacrifices that the faithful and the loyal make.

BEAR IN MIND MEN AND MILLIONS MEAN AND STAND FOR ALL THAT THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH MEANS AND STANDS FOR.

—REMEMBER—

that the fourth year ends April 30, 1924.

After that, we have only one more year in which to meet these obligations. Unless we put forth a mighty effort to pay some on these pledges during the last quarter of the fourth year, there is great danger that we will fail entirely, because of the bulk of our pledge looming up before us in a one-year period.

Paying SOMETHING by April 30, 1924, will make it easy to pay ALL by April 30, 1925. Where there is a will there is a way, and God always helps those who try to their capacity to help themselves.

Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

THE MEANING OF PRAYER.

(Read Psa. 50:14-15; 1 Thess. 5:17-18; Matt. 21:22; Col. 4:2; Jas. 1:5-8, 5:15; Prov. 15:29.)

A child thinks of its parents in terms of gifts, and prays "give me." Later, when older, it thinks of them for what they are to him. The prodigal son, when he left home as a child, said, "give me." When he returned, thinking of what the father could be to him, he said, "Father, make me." Prayer is seeking of God not so much what He can give us, but what He can make of us.

Prayer is not a mental exercise, but it is a meeting with somebody, from whose presence we get heavenly thoughts, harmony of soul, the melody of friendship. Sitting with a friend is not a gift; it is communion with a soul and brings happiness. So it is with God in our prayers. Thus the principal element in prayer is self-surrender to Him, ceasing the self-life, letting God have His way. The truly prayerful life lives in a state of blessedness in spiritual relations.

Prayer.—Father, Thou who givest unto all who ask of Thee, who knowest our inward and outward state, who makest us what we are and may be according to the life in Christ; whatever it may be that holds us back from self-surrender, grant that it may be taken away and that there may be a free and open intercourse between us and Thee, and that we may always be willing to trust where we cannot prove and to believe in Thee in spite of all contradictions. Amen.

TUESDAY.

CULTIVATE FRIENDSHIP AS YOU GO THROUGH LIFE.

"A friend loveth at all times."—Prov. 17:17.

"Oil and perfume rejoice the heart; so doth the sweetness of a man's friends that cometh of hearty counsel."—Prov. 27:9.

Nearly every man who leaves good friends in a small place and goes to a city to "make his stake," cherishes the hope that some day he may return with sufficient means to live in comfort, perhaps luxury, in the old home town.

With this in view, often he does not attempt to make new friendships, to establish himself in being more than a man who comes and goes, in the neighborhood where he lives.

Years go, and the expected good fortune is still in the future.

There is a yearning for some real friends in the place where he is forced to stay and live.

Having done nothing to entitle him to friendship among his neighbors, naturally he is not endeared to them.

As a result, he finds himself alone without the kind of friends who are necessary to the full enjoyment of life among normal human beings.

It is a sad condition when a man starts down the other side of life without having near him those who possess for him a heart interest—friends. (Copyright, 1924, by International Feature Service, Inc.)

Prayer.—Our Father, help us to so live that we may be a friend and make friends with an abiding record in the human soul. Teach us the care and the art of engendering this, loving rather than being loved, and so entering fully into the lives of others for the glory of God. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

GET THE VIEWPOINT OF THE CHILDREN.

"Suffer little children to come unto me; forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God."—Mark 10:14.

Parents, in all the child-problem we have learned that children come to us and do what we wish by our often going to them first and getting their viewpoint.

If you will not discommode yourselves in an effort to please and interest your children, you must expect that they seek the society of those with whom they can enjoy themselves according to their desires.

Never was there a time when parents had a bigger job on their hands than they have at present.

It is an age of extravagance in many ways.

Extravagance in spending money, in wasting time, in the sort and amount of amusements demanded—and the quality of amusement must be thrilling—exciting.

The prosaic ways of middle-aged folks do not suit the modern young. Parents must unbend if they wish to maintain association with their children, and they must be chummy and understanding, with the boys and girls.

There must be not so much the spirit of demanding that the lads and the lassies act as the older ones would. Try to get the viewpoint of your children before you make hard and fast rules, but do not make the mistake of being too lenient and become lax.

Prayer.—Our Father, help us to make God and life real to our children, creating and breathing an atmosphere of love around them for their young, growing lives; and we beg of Thee that Thou wilt cause it to be that they shall see the right way and follow in Thy train, that they may rise in the true life and not fail. Amen.

THE GRACE OF KEEPING ON AT IT—FAITHFULNESS.

"And he said unto the king of Israel, Smite upon the ground. And he smote thrice, and stayed."—2 Kings 13:16-19.

This ancient king was guilty of a fault that is all too common nowadays. He started a good work, but stayed his hand. He lacked the grace of continuance and failed to complete his task. Maybe some of us who read this meditation belong to the "Order of Fits and Starts"—the ranks of those who never finish anything!

An ancient proverb says: "Call no man happy until he is dead." Apart from the touch of cynicism, there is truth in the saying. It does seem at times, when men and women of whom we had thought better things, break and fall away, that we can count with certainty on the ultimate victory of few. It is a real danger we all must guard against. Paul knew its insidious power when he said: "I keep under my body and bring it into subjection, lest that by any means, when I have preached to others I myself should become a castaway." If Paul found it so, how much more must we?

However, Paul won through. "I have fought a good fight. I have finished my course. I have kept the faith." So may we, in the strength of the same faith he possessed. We must not weary in well-doing. Like our Master, may we all be able to say, "It is finished," the fight won, the victory gained, the task completed, rest attained. "No man who looks back after having put his hand to the plow is fit for the kingdom of God." —Rev. H. D. Ranns.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

FRIDAY.

THE LIGHT OF THE BIBLE TO YOU.

"Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path."—Psa. 119:105.

Every one of us has had the familiar experience of opening the Bible in a time of trial or sorrow and finding somewhere upon the page the very message we needed to bring guidance, comfort or peace. If it is temptation which must be overcome, we find some word which steadies us in the path of righteousness. It is sorrow or grief seeming greater than we can bear? Is it despair borne of defeat and utter discouragement? Then, like the bright morning sun after the horrors of night, comes this marvelous Book with its light, and tears of sorrow turn to tears of joy. Can any one ever estimate the blessing our Bible has brought into this dark and troubled life?

"Thy word is a lamp"—so says the psalmist; and we repeat it. "A lamp unto my feet" in truth it is. No matter where we may go—on mountain-top or in valley, in darkness and in shadow—this lamp will lead more surely than the stars. "A light unto our path"—oh, how blind they are who will not see this precious light! When we are in black darkness and searching for an object or a path, what a blessing is a candle or a flashlight! But the Bible is a spiritual searchlight. Everything can be seen in its illumination. It is more than a torch, a candle, a lamp. It is a mighty, powerful searchlight, which throws its rays so as to illumine every darkened spot of human life!—Selected.

Prayer.—Our Father, we thank Thee that Thy Word is designed to be to us through the journey of life what a lantern is to the wayfarer, who would pass in safety along a dangerous way during the night. So increase the light of Thy Word along our pathway that we may find the right and God, and at last heaven. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE POWER OF THE CROSS.

"If I belifted up I will draw all men to me."—Jno. 12:32.

We have said before that among the first drawing powers of the cross are, first, faultlessness and, second, not a shadow of a doubt in His action or His authority. The cross draws next because of its inspiration. The invitation of our Lord Jesus Christ was and is always resonant to a soul. His condemnations make us hate ourselves for any wrong-doing. When He sets forth His ideals, our strength goes forward with leaps and bounds. We have great men and great books in the world, but none have inspired the world like Jesus. None have ever sent a David Livingstone to make Christians of a foreign nation like His life and the Bible. That inspiration started from the cross. This is no theory. The thought of it itself is a power. Though the cross is an instrument of torture, in this instance it is an inspiration and a symbol of the transfiguration, the atonement for sin, of a clean soul, of the wonderful love of God for us. Take Him and feed thy soul on Him and give thanks.

Prayer.—Our Father, lighten the path we travel. If dark places come, may they not bewilder us; and if dangerous places must be passed, may no enemy harm us, and no evil beset us. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"THE SABBATH WAS MADE FOR MAN." —Mark 2:27.

Hebrews 4:9 says: "There remaineth a rest to the people of God." This epistle was written to prevent Jewish Christians from apostasy to the old Judaism. The unchristian Jew was trying to entice them back. They said to them: "We have Moses, Aaron, the high priest and Joshua, and we have the Sabbath and the ministry of angels, why something new?" So the author of the Hebrews write this to furnish the Christian Jew with an argument to meet this and a reason to be faithful. This says that Jesus is greater than prophets and angels, that redemption is greater than creation; and as God rested from creation and sanctified a Sabbath, so Jesus rested from redemption on the day that He completed it—the resurrection—and sanctified forever the Sabbath of the Lord. This established for the people of God a Sabbath-keeping for the Christ—the day of redemption—and it abides an infallible prophecy of the eternal rest which awaits us in heaven.

Prayer.—Our Father, give us faith to espouse the cause of Christ afresh today, to live it in the spirit of Him, as the type of the hope that we shall become like Thee. So enable us and fill us that our hopes may not be in vain. Help us to count everything but lost that does not win Thee. Amen.

SOUTH NORFOLK LETTER.

I want to testify here that every one of the few short years of my Christian ministry has been brimful of God's wonderful blessings. I have had some very unique, pleasant and profitable experiences, not only in my own field in South Norfolk, but in different parts of the brotherhood where, under divine leadership, I have been privileged to assist my brother-ministers in kingdom service.

Many times have I listened to the eloquent testimonies of the aged saints of Zion. I have heard them tell of their growth in grace, and that the longer they served their Master, the more they loved Him and the more they wanted to do to please Him. In these days I come to realize more and more just what these wonderful testimonies really meant. I feel from my own experiences that truly the more we do for our Christ and the harder we work to extend His kingdom, the richer our Christian experiences become, and the stronger our love grows for Him.

Certainly, the Lord has been very gracious and good to us in our field in South Norfolk. When I look back nine years and recall the fact that at that time we only had thirty-two members upon whom we could count in our Church here, and through these short and fleeting years, of the wonderful things our eyes have seen, our ears have heard and our hearts have felt, they hardly seem possible, and yet I know that they are true. Time and space will permit me to tell of but just a few of these wonderful things, and they of the most recent ones.

Easter Sunday was a great day in the history of our Church here; great in a number of ways, and one was because on that day more than 300 reconsecrations were made and there were a large number of professions of faith in Jesus Christ. It was the climax of our revival, which had been in progress during the preceding two weeks. Rev. J. F. Morgan, pastor of the First Christian Church of Winchester, Va., did the preaching during our meeting, and he never preached with more liberty, earnestness and zeal, nor with more power. Really, he was at his best, and only those who have had the privilege of hearing Bro. Morgan preach and sing, know what that means. Bro. Morgan has a wonderful and pleasing personality, and he preaches a Christ-like, loving gospel. From the first service of the meeting, the congregations increased not only in numbers, but in interest. Practically at no service were we able to accommodate the crowds that assembled to hear the gospel in sermon and in song. We prayed that God would give us at least fifty souls for our hire during the campaign.

Bro. Morgan had to leave us on Thursday night before the revival was closed on Sunday, and at the close of the Thursday night service exactly fifty had made professions and united with the Church, and at the closing service on Easter Sunday a total of more than seventy professions had been made, and sixty-one of these united with our Church. We have received several members since the campaign closed, and as a result of this meeting we expect to receive more than a hundred into Church membership.

The crowning event of our meeting was, in the closing moments of the last service, the congregation voted unanimously to begin work on our new building at the earliest date possible. Truly it was a great moment in the life of our Church.

Another wonderful result of our revival has been the missionary spirit which is being manifested, and on Sunday, May 4th, our congregation voted to undertake the work of supporting a foreign missionary. Only those who have dreamed their dreams and seen their visions and have prayed, worked, hoped and trusted that these dreams and visions might come true, can realize just how one feels when one sees the wonderful responses that are made to one's feeble appeals. I realize more than ever my utter incompetency and inability to do what I want to do and what I believe God wants done to build up His kingdom, and I realize that I can never hope to live long enough and to render sufficient service to even begin to pay my Lord for what He has done for me.

I realize the tremendous task that lies before me now in the building of our new Church, and may I say that we are not attempting to build here in South Norfolk before we need it. Our Sunday School enrollment is over 240, and we have an average attendance, counting visitors, of 250; and when you remember that our Church auditorium will only seat 325, including the Baraca room, one can readily see what a terrible handicap it is to try to teach boys and girls the way of life. We have a total Church membership of 450, and I believe with all my heart that if we had the room to accommodate the people, in less than one year's time our Sunday School enrollment would be over 500 and our Church membership to 700. We have only a few thousand dollars on hand with which to begin building, but we have a firm faith in God, and He has just plenty of money, and I believe that if we pray right and work right, God will graciously reward our efforts. He has never failed us and, praise His name, He never will.

Our membership is poor, but liberal, and I can only say in the words of Paul, we are "stretching forward to the things which are before; we press on toward the goal, unto the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." (American Version.) We crave the prayers of the entire brotherhood, and not only your prayers, but we urgently solicit your financial support.

Our plans and specifications call for an expenditure of not less than $60,000, and I know that in our brotherhood there are men and women who would like to have a part in our program here of extending the kingdom of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and any contributions that they desire to make in behalf of the work at South Norfolk will be graciously and gladly received, and I know that the Lord will richly reward them for it. Yours in Christ Jesus,

O. D. POYTHRESS.

To think and feel we are able, is often to be so.—J. Hawes.

FAITH THE MAIN ESSENTIAL.

"Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?" Assuredly they do not. They are too well acquainted with the universal law: "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." Yet there is a no more prevalent error than the current one on the lips of too many loose-thinkers: "It don't matter what a man believes, it is only the life that counts." This false thesis is opposed to every pedagogical law. You cannot rear a child a pagan, and expect him to live a Christian. You cannot preach rationalism, and look for a Christian outcome.

Professor Scott, of Union Seminary, has just published a scholarly volume on "The Ethical Teaching of Jesus," in which he maintains the thesis: "Whether we like it or not, the moral teaching of Jesus is rooted in his religion, and cannot be detached from it." Here he lays bare the inescapable principle that the seeds of Christian faith must be sown in our hearts if we would show the fruits thereof in our lives. This is precisely what our Lord meant when He asked the decisive question: "Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?" Our deeds spring from our beliefs as inevitably as fruit from a tree, a river from its source, or a grape from its seed. The faith is the cause, the life the effect. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he," said our Lord.

Herein lies the value of Christian nurture. No parent can escape the solemn responsibility of careful religious teaching of his child, or of sending him to a Christian institution. And herein lies also the duty of the Church to guard her pulpits against "false prophets" who misguide their hearers by preaching the illusive liberty to believe or disbelieve, only so that you live rightly. God sent His Son into the world to proclaim the gospel of a new life, and Paul says: "I live by the faith of the Son of God." Christians need the spiritual strength of this faith to enable them to walk uprightly in a world of temptation and evil. And the more fully and firmly they hold it, the more Christ-like their lives will be. An intelligent, a pure and strong Christian faith alone will enable us to lead a true Christian life. But "faith without works is dead," saith St. James.—J. B. R., in Christian Herald.

A PERSONAL VIEWPOINT ON PEACE.

Chancellor Charles Wesley Flint, of Syracuse University, who was recently sworn in as colonel of the United States army reserves, has made the most sensible statement on the subject of peace that has come to our attention lately. The chancellor said: "I am an apostle of peace, and along with 100,000,000 other Americans have no use for war, and shall do everything reasonable and religious to keep America and the rest of the world out of war. But if in this I, working humbly with all others, also fail, then I am ready to render service within my power in the only way left for service. For myself, I believe that a small regular army, with a large reserve or semi-ready army, is, in present world conditions, absolutely necessary, not merely for incidental, current, national or international police service, but for the protection of life and our civilization and of humanity." This is the statement of a really patriotic pacifist. A great many present-day pacifists come dangerously near disloyalty. War is a fact of our civilization, and while we know that it is an unnecessary and brutal means of settling international disputes, nevertheless a true Christian will render unto Caesar that which is Caesar's, as well as unto God that which is God's.—Exchange.

Subject: "The Return and the Rebuilding of the Temple."

Lesson: Ezra, chs. 1, 3-6.

Golden Text: "Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God."—Isa. 40:1.

Devotional Reading: Psa. 126.

Babylon had carried the Jews into captivity. But Babylon was not to keep them in captivity for long. For only a few years after Nebuchadnezzar had carried the Jews as captives into Babylon, Babylon herself was taken captive. In fact, at the time when Jerusalem fell (586 B. C.), the great empire had already begun to disintegrate, and when Nebuchadnezzar died, the process was speedily completed. The master of ceremonies was Cyrus the Mede, or the Persian as he is usually called. Inasmuch as he was one of the outstanding military leaders of history, we will do well to trace in brief outline his career so far as it affected the Jews.

Cyrus was the King of Anshan, a little State among the mountains of Elam, northeast of Babylon. It seems that the Medes had become dissatisfied with the rule of the Scythians, who had conquered them, and under Astyages they rebelled and delivered their king over into the hands of Cyrus. Cyrus was an able commander, a skillful politician, and a wise statesman, and he soon established himself on the throne of the Median empire. He then embarked on a campaign against the other large powers of his day, and soon over-ran a large part of the then-known world. Finally, in 538 B. C., he conquered Babylon and became monarch of all that he surveyed.

The point of interest in all this is Cyrus' attitude toward the conquered people. Whereas, the Babylonians had been high-handed and had attempted to establish themselves by crushing the conquered peoples, Cyrus was lenient and attempted to hold them by granting them a large measure of self-government and by furthering their well-being. By these acts of clemency, he aimed—and did in large measure—to secure and to hold their loyalty.

In keeping with this spirit, Cyrus made a decree permitting the Jews who so desired to return to Judah and to rebuild their temple. He also called upon those who did not care to return and who remained within his kingdom to help those who did go. And finally he brought forth the vessels of the temple which had been carried to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar, and gave them to the Jews who were returning.

We need not be so greatly surprised at the fact that many of the Jews did not return to Judah and Jerusalem. They had become settled in Babylon, and it meant a great deal to give up all that most men count dear, and to brave the hardships of the journey; the still greater hardships of residence in Palestine. We might well marvel at the number (about 50,000) who did go back.

When the people, under Jeshua and Zerubbabel, the religious and the civil leaders, respectively, arrived at Jerusalem, they built a temporary altar on the ruins of the old temple. They offered sacrifices and also reinstituted the old feasts. When they started to rebuild the temple, the people living in the land thwarted them by making false charges against them. Later, however, under the inspiration of Haggai and Zechariah, the work was taken up, and in 516 B. C. the temple was rededicated. From this time on, Jerusalem was the rallying place for the Jews, and many Jews who would not otherwise have returned were led to make any sacrifice in order to be near Jehovah's dwelling-place.

I must call attention to one effect of the exile upon the religion of the Jews. It purged from their religious thinking many of the cruder elements that were not in keeping with the real spirit of true religion, and established once and for all for them monotheism—one God over all.

Some Teaching Points.

1. Religion has always found those who would pay the price of loyalty to her.
2. "To appreciate the good in the present has more promise than to bewail the good that is lost."
3. Those who would undertake a worth-while work for God will find opposition.
4. Those who cannot go in person ought to help to support those who do go.
5. It is not the size of the temple, or the splendor of it, that counts; it is the spirit of real worship that it begets and that abides therein.
6. Religion is the starting-point in nation-building.
7. The prophets of God should furnish inspiration for undertaking the program of God.
8. God will always provide a way where man provides a will.
9. Some men see in an event an occasion for joy; other men see in the same event an occasion for sorrow.
10. The promises of God are sure. We may have to wait long, but we shall not wait in vain.
11. It is always an occasion for joy when a work is undertaken for God.
12. He who has a grateful heart will always find something for which to praise God.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

June 15, 1924.

Topic: "Memories: A Blessing or a Curse."
Lesson: Proverbs 10:7; Luke 15:17, 16:25.
Daily Readings: What to forget—Phil. 3:13-14; Selfish memories—Gen. 40:1-23. When memory tempts—Num. 11:4-15. Happy memories—Phil. 1:1-11. Remorseful memories—Gen. 42:1-21. Remember Jesus—Luke 22:14-20.

Memory has a physical basis in the brain. It is made possible because sensations from without and from within make a change in certain parts of the brain and the nervous system. For instance, a Christian Endeavorer looks at a picture. The light waves from that picture strike the eye, and the nerve fibers carry the sensation produced there to the brain, where it is "registered," so to speak. That sensation, however faint, makes some difference in the brain. And if the thing which the Christian Endeavorer saw was very striking, or if it produced a very vivid impression, it will persist as long as life lasts. I recall an experience in my own life which illustrates the point. When I was a boy, I lived just across the street from a large wood-finishing mill. One night my father came into my room and awakened me and told me to get up and dress quickly. A reflection of light on the wall caught my eye, and I looked out the window and saw that mill in full blaze. It is still vivid in my memory, and as I write these notes I can see that fire almost as clearly as I saw it that night. It will always be that way. Those sensations of light and the feeling of fear which that fire begot in my boyish heart made such a deep impression in the "memory center" of my brain that I will never forget it.

Now, in a sense, this is what happens every time we see anything or hear anything or do anything. But of course there is a difference in the intensity of the thing we see or hear or do, and there is a difference in the freshness with which we remember the thing experienced. As a rule, we remember the things that interest us. Interest helps memory. And so does association. For instance, a person will think of something he wants to do. He is afraid he will forget it. He accordingly ties a piece of string around his finger, and then when he sees that string, he will remember what he had to do.

Memory, it can readily be seen, plays a large part in life. A young person would have to start over every day in school if he could not remember what he had learned the day before. It is important that one train his memory, for memory can be trained—he simply improves his methods of memorizing. On the other hand, it is equally as important that we forget things. Suppose a person had to remember everything he had ever seen or heard—a mix-up his mind would be!

Hence, we see that memory can be a blessing or a curse. It is a blessing when it serves us to keep in mind the good things in life, the essential facts of knowledge, the friendships of life, and a hundred and one things that make up a good and efficient life. On the other hand, it becomes a curse when it serves to keep alive the impure things we have seen or heard or done, or the failures we have made, or the grievances we have had. The important fact to be noted here is this: A Christian Endeavorer can govern, in large measure, his memory. He can make it serve him by producing or holding in mind the good things, and by forgetting the bad things.

Some Quotations About Memory.

1. If we were truly wise, we should so live that our lives would contain nothing except that which would give us pleasure to recall.

2. We often forget that day by day we are building up memories. Nothing is ever really forgotten. Some day everything will live in consciousness.

3. Memory is the scourge that God put in our hands to lash ourselves for the wrongs we do. We plait the thong that strikes us.

4. Memory is the storehouse of experience. Without it we should make no progress.

SOME QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION.

1. How can we improve our memory?
2. What relation does health have to memory?
3. What are some of the things we ought to remember?
4. What are some of the things we ought to forget?
5. How can the memory of Jesus help us?
6. What part will memory play in the future life?
7. How is the best way to memorize our C. E. pledge? How will it help us to memorize it?

MOFFITT FAMILY AND SHILOH CHURCH.

The Moffitt name is honorably and favorably known to CHRISTIAN SUN readers. Shiloh Church in Randolph County, N. C., is a Church of honorable name and true to the faith. The following interesting account of this honorable family and good old Church appeared recently in the Asheboro Courier:

Mr. H. T. Bray, who for many years has been living near Shiloh Church, located about twelve miles east of Asheboro, has given the Courier some interesting facts concerning the organization and later history of this famous old Church. For many years, hundreds of people from many countries have attended the memorial services, which are held there on the second Sunday in May every year. Mr. Bray also gives us some history of the Moffitt family, a member of which was the founder of Shiloh Church.

Charles Moffitt and four brothers, natives of Londonderry, Ireland, and ancestors of the Moffitt family in North Carolina, made a settlement in Randolph County, near the Buffalo Ford in pioneer days. This family lived there for many years. Rev. Thomas C. Moffitt, a great-grandson of Charles Moffitt, founded Shiloh Christian Church in December, 1843. The Rev. Mr. Moffitt was a son of Hugh and Margaret Needham Moffitt. He had the following brothers: Eli N., Charles, Hugh, Solomon, William and Benjamin Moffitt. He married Nancy Cox and reared the following children: Rev. Hugh T. Moffitt, Sheriff E. A. Moffitt, Dr. S. J. Moffitt, John T., W. D., Alfred A., Hannah, wife of D. H. Hayworth; Rosanna, wife of Orlando Bray; Emeline, wife of Bunyan Bostick, and Eliza, wife of Sylvanus Hatch.

As stated above, Shiloh Church was organized in 1843, by Rev. Thomas C. Moffitt. It is not known how long he served as pastor. Some time after him came Rev. J. W. Wellons, who is still living at Elon College at the age of 98. Among the pastors that followed were the following: Revs. J. S. Lawrence, 1881; H. T. Moffitt, 1883; W. W. Lawrence, 1884; H. T. Moffitt, 1885; W. W. Hayworth, 1886; J. S. Lawrence, 1887; H. T. Moffitt, 1888; M. S. Elliott, 1889; J. S. Lawrence, 1890; E. H. Jarrell, 1892; W. W. Hayworth, 1894; P. T. Way, 1896; J. R. Comer, 1898; J. W. Parker, 1899; M. E. Hammer, 1901; J. R. Comer, 1903; M. L. Hurley, 1905; H. A. Albright, 1907; R. L. Williamson, 1909; T. E. White, 1911; G. R. Underwood, 1918; A. T. Banks, 1919; G. R. Underwood, 1922.

In 1885, B. S. Moffitt was elected Church secretary, and he has held the office ever since.

The Church is now erecting a nice belfry tower on the house.

The first grave placed in the Shiloh Cemetery was that of little Julia Ann Moffitt, daughter of Rev. Thomas C. Moffitt. She died June 10, 1845. There are now 272 graves in the cemetery.

The Rev. Thomas C. Moffitt was Mr. H. T. Bray's grandfather.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

It is always a source of happiness to us to have our children to excel in their work. In the Orphanage, on the farm or in school. It has been our aim in this work to encourage our children to do their best to stand at the head. We have felt proud, and justly so, of most of our children who have attended the graded school this year. I believe most of our children did their best to stand at the head of their classes, and while all of them did not, we give credit to them for trying. We have a bright crowd of girls and boys, and they are a splendid, happy lot.

Sixteen of our girls had a place in the beautiful operetta given at the close of the school. I take it for granted they were given this preference because they could do this work as well, or better, than others. Several prizes were offered for different things, and our orphanage children won three of them. Frank Collier, one of our larger boys, won the prize for making the most progress in his class. Frank is a most excellent boy, and is very faithful in his work in looking after the cows and the milking. He has been awarded a trip to the army training school during the month of July.

Miss Evie Pearce, who came to us from Suffolk, Va., won the prize for making the most progress in her class. Evie is a strong girl and has stood right at the head of her Latin class all the term. She is very fond of Latin, and we expect some day to see her teach Latin in some big college.

Eugenia Hilliard, the girl who is always happy, won the prize for giving the best recitation.

We are very proud of our little folks, and we know you are always happy to give, that they may have a chance.

Our Easter offering is still climbing toward its goal. We have raised to date (May 29th) $2,932.01. We still lack $567.99. Are you going to push us up to it? It is heart-breaking to fail.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,

THEME FOR JUNE—RECORDS, REPORTS, REGISTRATIONS.

The monthly service program theme for June is "Records, Reports, Registrations."

"Records" refer to data societies are to keep through the year, that full and complete information can be furnished on activities, attainments, etc., at any time. The recording secretary is the custodian of these records, but every member of the executive committee is responsible for assisting in gathering these records.

Every recording secretary should be furnished by the society with a 'secretary's record book," that the permanent records of the society may be up-to-date at all times. (This book should not be used for the monthly executive committee minutes, but only for the annual reports of the society.)

"Reports" refer to the annual report each senior society is expected to make to its State secretary, and each intermediate and junior society is to make to the State superintendent. Forms are sent each society some thirty to sixty days before the State Convention for filling in and returning. It is from the data on these forms the State union awards the State banners and makes its report to the All-South Convention in the contest for the Dixie banners.

Every society owes it to its Church, pastor, State officers, Dixie leaders and to itself to make the very best report possible, and to see that this report is filled out completely and returned promptly, that it may be received back in time to be counted.

"Registrations" refer to your All-South Convention in Richmond, Va., July 10-14, 1924; your 1923-1924 State Christian Endeavor Convention (Ark., La., Miss. and Tenn. will take credit on this M. S. P. report card for their 1922-1923 State Conventions), and your young people's denominational conference.

Every Endeavorer in Dixie should register for the great All-South Convention to be held in Richmond, Va., July 10-14 ($1.00) whether he or she can attend or not, as to do so makes possible a greater Convention for those who can attend. In addition, all who register and do not attend, provided notice is sent Secretary Evans of nonattendance, will receive the official program, badge and printed Convention report, and these items alone are worth more than the cost of registering. Plus all this, every Endeavorer who registers helps his State union in the registration contests between the States. Do your part by registering today, and getting some one else to do so, too, sending registration fees to Secretary Evans, 5 Ferger Building, Chattanooga, Tenn.

JULY THEME.

In July we will emphasize attendance upon Conventions and Conferences. Plan now to have a great delegation from your society in the All-South Convention, Richmond, Va., July 10-14, and in your young people's denominational conference whenever it is held.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

On May 1, 1924, our Heavenly Father, in His infinite love and mercy, removed from our midst one of our oldest and most faithful Sunday School workers, Mr. L. M. Foushee. He was 62 years old in March and had been a member of Shallow Well Church and Sunday School for about forty years. He was always at his post of duty on Sunday morning when it was possible for him to be there.

During these years he had missed only a very few Sundays. He taught a class of young men and boys for a number of years. He was teacher of the Bible class for several years, and had been teaching a class of girls for fourteen years, and when his health failed last July and he was unable to teach any longer, his wife taught the class for him and he still enjoyed being with them as long as he was able to go.

Mr. Foushee was a deacon of the Church, and will be sadly missed by both Sunday School and Church. Only a very few of us can remember going to Church or Sunday School at Shallow Well when Mr. Foushee was not there. It is hard to realize that our dear friend will be with us no more on earth.

Whereas, we, the members of the Church and Sunday School, feel the great loss of this dear member; therefore, be it resolved:

First, That, although our hearts are filled with sorrow at his going, we rejoice in the hope that it is well with him.

Second, That we cherish his memory, his faithfulness to his Church and Sunday School, and extend to his family our love and very deepest sympathy.

Third, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to his family, a copy to The Christian Sun, and one to the county paper.

RAGLAND.

On April 26, 1924, after a lingering illness at her home in Halifax County, Va., the soul of Miss Ellen A. Ragland passed from her earthly life to the heavenly home. She was born August 27, 1849. While a young woman, she gave her heart and life to her God. During the years that followed, she lived a consecrated Christian life and was a blessing and a benefit to her brother and friends and a faithful member of the Church.

Funeral services were held at Pleasant Grove Christian Church by the pastor, Rev. J. E. McCauley, May 27, 1924, and the body placed in the Church cemetery.

Miss Ellen was very modest, never desiring praise; yet her friends and neighbors found in her a faithful and true friend. How can such a life be measured? Quiet, modest, industrious, loyal—what greater virtues could be wished for? Therefore, be it resolved:

First, That Pleasant Grove Church, Va., has sustained a great loss, but we bow in humble submission to God's will.

Second, That we extend to the bereaved relatives our deepest sympathy.

Third, That these resolutions be published in The Christian Sun and a copy be sent to the family.

Done by order of the Church.

MRS. D. J. SIPE, Sec'y.

MR. SAM DAVIS ENGAGED FOR EVANGELISTIC WORK.

The Southern Christian Convention Mission Board has engaged Mr. and Mrs. Sam Davis for work in evangelistic meetings. Engagements and dates will be arranged for them by Dr. G. O. Lankford and Mrs. W. H. Carroll, of Burlington, N. C. All who desire the services of Mr. and Mrs. Davis should correspond with the committee, who will give prompt attention to all inquiries. Address Rev. G. O. To Make Rich Red Blood

Revitalize your worn-out exhausted nerves and increase your strength and endurance

take Organic Iron; not metallic iron which people usually take, but pure organic iron—Nuxated Iron—which is like the iron in your blood and like the iron in spinach, lentils and apples. One dose of Nuxated Iron is estimated to be approximately equivalent (in organic iron content) to eating one-half quart of spinach, one quart of green vegetables or half a dozen apples. It is like taking extract of beef instead of eating pounds of meat. Nuxated iron is partially predigested and ready for almost immediate absorption and assimilation by the blood, while metallic iron is iron just as it comes from the action of strong acids on small pieces of iron filings.

Over 4,000,000 people annually are using Nuxated Iron. It will not injure the teeth nor disturb the stomach. A few doses will often commence to enrich your blood. Your money will be refunded by the manufacturers if you do not obtain satisfactory results.

Beware of substitutes. Always insist on having genuine organic iron—Nuxated Iron. Look for the letters N. I. on every tablet. Sold by all druggists.

NUXATED IRON
For Red Blood, Strength and Endurance

666 quickly relieves Constipation, Biliousness, Headaches, Colds and LaGrippe.

Why Drugs Fail

Many chronic diseases fail to respond to drug treatment, even in the hands of the best physicians, whereas acute diseases usually respond readily. When a disease has become chronic, drugs often seem to do as much harm as they do good, for the system rebels against them. It is just this class of cases which derive the greatest benefit from drinking Shivar, America's best stomach, liver and kidney Water. If you suffer with chronic dyspepsia, indigestion, sick headache, rheumatism, kidney or liver disease, uric poisoning or other curable conditions due to impure blood, do not hesitate to accept the Spring's liberal offer as printed below. Their records show that only two in a hundred, on the average, have reported "no benefit." This is a wonderful record from a truly wonderful Spring. Sign the following letter:

Shivar Springs,
Box 16-H, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if I report no benefit you agree to refund the price of the water in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return within a month.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

One of the greatest and saddest losses that Holy Neck Christian Church ever experienced was on May 4, 1924, when our beloved pastor, Rev. Geo. D. Eastes, was called from earth to his heavenly home. He had only been with us as pastor seven months, but even in so short a time he had won the hearts and love of every one he came in contact with. We all feel that his life was a Christ-like life, and his teachings, his influence, and his great and noble deeds will ever live after him. He entered the ministry at the early age of sixteen, after which he took up the evangelistic work, therefore reaching more people and leading more men, women and children to Christ than the average man at three-score years and ten. Although he left these earthly cares on his thirty-fourth birthday, no death could have been sweeter, no loss to his loved ones could have been greater; yet we feel that God, in His infinite wisdom, love and mercy, makes no mistakes. He gave us his life as an example, and may we try to live up to his highest ideals.

We hereby express our sympathy to the bereaved ones, and our own esteem and loss we cannot find words to express our feelings. Be it, therefore, resolved:

First, That as husband and father, as pastor and leader, as friend and Christian, all the relations he filled, suffer irreparable loss in his departure.

Second, That as pastor, he was willing, self-sacrificing, gentle, modest, pure and ever ready to enter the most humble home to minister to those in trouble and need, his life was a ray of sunshine in every darkened path.

Third, That we offer the sincere condolence of our hearts to the sorely bereaved family and pledge our continued fidelity to the principles and activities that engrossed his life.

Fourth, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy be spread upon the minutes of the Church record, and a copy be sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By Rev. S. M. Lynam.

Christian Endeavor Goes North.—

Portions of the Bible have been translated into the native language of the Eskimo, and some of them have united with the Christian Endeavor Society at Point Barrow, the most northernly settlement of mankind in the world.

The Christian Endeavor Society goes wherever men and women are in North or South, and serves to train men for Christian service. There is a society at Point Barrow in the Far North—is there one in your Church?

According to Jesus.—

From the report of the Presbyterian board of national missions, we learn of the purchase of five acres of land near Rio Piedras, Porto Rico, for the establishing of a union theological seminary. The proposed seminary will be supported jointly by the Presbyterians and Baptists.

Such an interprise is in accord with the teachings of Jesus. Somehow, the foreign field workers have managed to go ahead, and they will lead some time the followers of the same Jesus into oneness with Him.

Mar Timotheos Here.—

Mar Timotheos, the Archbishop of Malabar and metropolitan of India, is in this country. The archbishop has been in England for some time conferring with the Archbishop of Canterbury, who would restore the Anglican mission work to Mesopotamia, which was interrupted by the war. Mar Timotheos is here visiting the Nestorian colonies in this country, the largest of which is in Chicago. The claim of the Malabar Christians to be direct descendents from the converts of St. Thomas forms one of the most romantic chapters in Christian history.

Episcopalians Endorse Prohibition.—

The Episcopalians of the Pennsylvania diocese endorsed the Volstead act, by a vote of 162 to 65, recently. Some of those opposed to the eighteenth amendment attempted to avoid the vote by pleading that the Church should not interfere with affairs of State, but the meeting was in no mood for such dodging, and came out squarely for prohibition and its strict enforcement.

The Pennsylvania Episcopalians have done what all Christians should do, and then they should help to enforce the laws of the land. Where a moral issue is at stake, the Church has a right to speak its mind, and this it should do. Christianity is greater than the State in things of morality, and the Church must direct the thinking of men.

Plan for World Prohibition.—

The World League Against Alcoholism will meet at Winons Lake, Ind., July 18th to 20th of this year, and plans will be definitely laid for a campaign for world prohibition. A permanent headquarters at Cairo, Egypt, under the direction of William E. ("Pussyfoot") Johnson, is being contemplated. From this office, propaganda will be carried on throughout the Moslem world.

Everywhere men and women are waking to the evils of the drink habit, and all over the world it will ultimately be outlawed. It is the only way, and every Christian is under obligation to help in the movement against alcoholism. We must co-operate to win in the fight for right.

Methodists Stand by Missionaries.—

The Southern Methodists had to face allegations of false theology against their missionaries. After some deliberation, the conference voted to stand by the missionaries, and endorsed their theology. The Methodists will spend $3,000,000 on the foreign field next year.

The cause of the charges of theological irregularities on the part of missionaries in many Churches at present is that those at work on the foreign field are too large to deal in the petty differences of denominationalism and are broad-minded enough to adapt the teachings of Jesus to the pressing needs of the hour, which so many in the home-land have been unable to do.

Golden Rule Sunday.—

The International Near East Association, meeting at Geneva, Switzerland, has set aside December 7th as "Golden Rule Sunday." Committees have been appointed to work in all the large European cities, and similar movements will be started in South America, Australia, Asia and Africa. The "Golden Rule Sunday" was observed in this country last year. The association hopes to get most of the needed funds for the support of the Near East relief work from this Sunday. Such international efforts for so Christian a cause draw men together more closely, and cement them into a great world brotherhood, and into such a brotherhood war cannot come. Let us observe with the world this "Golden Rule Sunday" on December 7th.

England Contributes to Peace.—

The English government has recently granted permission to Rev. and Mrs. Paul Sengle and Rev. Adolf Streihesen, German missionaries working under the Basel Missionary Society, to resume their work in the Malabar district in South India. The missionaries will now work under the London Missionary Society. By a number of treaties, and by the Versailles treaty also, German missionaries have been excluded from India. The British government feels now, however, that there will be no political activity on the part of missionaries.

The granting of this permission will contribute to the cause of world peace, since it will bring about a friendlier feeling between England and Germany. Again it is demonstrated that the Christ can bring all men into accord once they are touched by His spirit.

Liberals Increase.—

If the conservatives in the Presbyterian Church persist in forcing the issue of a strict adherence to the West Minster confession as a guarantee of theological soundness, the liberals seem to be girded for the fight. The 150 original signers of the statement of the liberal position have increased to 1,283, among these are seven heads of universities, colleges and schools, with nine professors. Many leading Presbyaterians are signers.

It is hard to understand why brethren cannot dwell together in peace. The Bible is the only rule of faith and practice, and the right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience should be accorded to and ought to be exercised by all. If these two cardinal principles of the Christian Church could prevail, there would be no warring factions in the Church of Christ. All the energy which is now spent in fighting each other could then be turned into kingdom service, and happy would be the world.

Not that Way in U. S.—

The synod of the Dutch Reformed Church of South Africa, according to a Cape Town dispatch of May 18th, condemned prohibition as a wrong method for combatting drunkenness. The synod held that "wine is a gift of God which no one should desecrate." The synod says: "The scriptures allow the individual to abstain, as is seen in the case of the Rechabites in Romans 14 and First Corinthians 8, but never mention prohibition as we now see it." Insofar as local option aims at prohibition, the synod is against it, but declares that it does not fall within the scope of an ecclesiastical meeting to give any further opinion on a measure of a political character.

Prof. Kurjper, who attended the meeting as a delegate of the Reformed Church of the Netherlands, maintained that the prohibition movement originated with the heathen, and that such sects as the agnostics were pronounced prohibitionists.

Unfortunately for the booze interests in the United States, the prohibition movement was fostered and promoted not by the heathen, but by the united evangelical Churches of all denominations.—American Issue.

NOTES-PERSONALS

The people of the United States saved during 1923 more than they earned during 1890.

The college commencement season is now drawing to a close. Students are returning to their homes.

Ten of the eleven State Legislatures meeting this year have passed more than 4,000 new State laws.

Rev. Jno. G. Truitt gives some very interesting and suggestive facts and figures in his Norfolk-Portsmouth letter this week.

The total levies of general property taxes over the United States have increased 160 per cent in the ten-year period extending from 1912 to 1922.

Highest and heartiest congratulations to Rev. R. P. Crumpler and the Rockingham, Va., pastorate in the purchase of a new parsonage at Linville, Va.

The trustees of Bethlehem College have completed arrangements for the next session, and the new faculty will enter upon its duties at once.

We trust SUN readers will go carefully and prayerfully through a close reading of Dr. Denison's article in this issue on "Stewardship and Missions." It was a great address and is weighty with great facts for Christians.

The Georgia and Alabama Sunday School Convention meets at Providence Chapel the fifth Sunday in June and Saturday before. All schools of that Conference should now be planning to send delegates to this important Convention.

Have you paid up your pledge to Men and Millions? The Christian Church is depending on you, and goes forward in its work of winning the world to Christ only as we pay our pledges and help carry out the items of this wonderful program.

We count ourselves most fortunate in securing Miss Madge Moffitt, Ramseur, N. C., to write a "Children's Column" for THE SUN each week. Miss Moffitt is a genius in children's work, and we expect her page to soon prove the most valued and readable page in THE SUN. Grown-ups as well as little folks will be reading what Miss Madge writes.

We congratulate Bethlehem College in securing Rev. S. L. Beougher, Graham, N. C., as its president. Bro. Beougher is a close student, a splendid writer, a clear thinker, a consecrated man, an able preacher of the Word, and we have no doubt will find his way into the hearts of the friends and supporters of Bethlehem and of our fine, good people in Alabama and Georgia.

Rev. G. C. Crutchfield changes his address from Elon College, N. C., to Wakefield, Va. Bro. Crutchfield recently graduated from Elon College and moved, with his family, to Wakefield, where he has served successfully as preacher for the past several months. Bro. Crutchfield is one of our most successful and promising young ministers, and the Wakefield pastorate has done well in securing his services.

The "Village smithy" in Saint Mary Cray, Kent, England, is being demolished to make way for a new broad street. The buildings are five hundred years old.

Mr. P. J. Carlton, accompanied by his wife and sister, Mrs. Parrott, is now traveling in Europe. They are expected to arrive at home in Richmond about the 21st of this month.

The Memorial Association of Providence Church, Graham, N. C., raised an endowment of $1,000, the income from which is to be used for the keeping of the cemetery. Others would do well to adopt a like plan.

The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Western North Carolina Conference will meet at Pleasant Ridge Church June 28-29. Delegates should be chosen at once. A full representation is desired.

Dr. Mitchell Bronk has recently resigned the pastorate of the Baptist Church at Stoneham, Mass., to assume the editorship of the Baptist Sunday School publications. Dr. Bronk succeeds Dr. W. E. Raffety as editor. The new editor has held a number of large pastorates, and has been a frequent contributor to denominational periodicals.

Sam Leonard Davis, the blind and wonderful pianist, and his consecrated wife, with a voice that carries the music of heaven, have been secured by our Mission Board as aids to our pastors and evangelists in holding revivals this summer. If you wish these wonderful helps for a meeting, write Rev. G. O. Lankford, D. D., Burlington, N. C., at once. Bro. Davis and his wife are consecrated workers and are an invaluable asset in any evangelistic meeting.

CHURCHES NEED PASTORS.

The tendency to withdraw from the Churches of Germany for political reasons having disappeared, these organizations are gaining daily in strength and membership. As a result, there is an increasing demand for pastors, and theological students have better prospects of finding employment, on graduation, than the young men who study medicine or the law.

DR. LONG RECEIVES PURSE.

Friends of the Rev. Dr. D. A. Long presented him with a purse and many other useful gifts last Thursday on his eightieth birthday.

In spite of the years which have gone and which with others tell a different story, Dr. Long is active and in perfect health. In addition to fulfilling the duties of minister for several Churches, one of which is in Warren County, he teaches a class in theology at the Christian College here.

Friends are expressing the wish that his health may continue good and that he may be spared for added years of a life which is a benediction to the community in which he lives and an inspiration to those among whom he walks.—Franklinton (N. C.) News.

DANVILLE.

This Church has been praying for a great revival for at least three months. It has prayer meetings Wednesday, Friday and every second and fourth Sunday nights. Preaching every first and fourth Sunday, Morning and evening. This Church has a splendid Sunday School, with Bro. J. E. Jones as superintendent, with a faithful set of teachers and officers. They have a good Woman's Missionary Society and a Woman's Church Aid Society.

This Church now says they want a pastor for all time, and want him to live in their midst, though they have no parsonage; hence I cannot fill the place as a resident pastor. Any minister who may be called will find some very good people here. The congregations are good—much larger than when I took charge. I hope they may realize their desire in securing a resident pastor. and God bless this Church.

MONUMENT FUND.

The Southern Convention at Norfolk, in May, decided to erect monuments at two historic spots, long neglected by us Christians. One is to be at the site of Old Lebanon Church, Surry County, Va., where all party and sectarian names were discarded by our Church ancestors and the name Christian only was adopted.

The other is the last resting-place of Rev. Jas. O'Kelly, near O'Kelly's Chapel, Durham County, N. C.

We should have $2,000 with which to erect suitable marker. What will you give?

Acknowledged in THE SUN last week—W. E. Kitchen, Roanoke, Ala., $5.00.

Who next? Send funds to J. O. Atkinson, treasurer of committee, Elon College, N. C., and same will be properly receipted and acknowledged through THE SUN.

COMMITTEE ON MONUMENT.

(Judge J. F. West, chairman, Waverly, Va.; Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, secretary, Durham, N. C.; W. E. McClenny, Suffolk, Va.; J. O. Atkinson, treasurer, Elon College, N. C.)

SIDES—FARMER.

Mr. Lonnie Ray Sides, a graduate of Elon College and now an instructor at State University, Chapel Hill, N. C., and Miss Elizabeth Florine Farmer, also a graduate from Elon College and the past year a successful teacher in the high schools of Oxford, N. C., were happily married at the home of the bride, Mr. and Mrs. W. O. Farmer, News Ferry, Va., at 8 P. M., Saturday, March 31st.

The Farmer home was beautifully decorated for the occasion, and a happy company of neighbors and friends gathered to add pleasure and enjoyment to the auspicious occasion. The bride was given away by her father, Mr. W. O. Farmer, and Mr. R. L. Sides, brother of the groom, was best man. Miss Louise Tune was maid of honor, and beautiful little Vivian Rhodden was ring-bearer. The bridemaids were Misses Lillie Sides, Sarah Nowe and Esther Farmer. The groomsmen were Mr. Atkinson Farmer, brother of the bride; Mr. J. W. Foster, and Mr. I. H. Butte.

The ring ceremony of the Christian Church was used, and Miss Mabel Farmer, cousin of the bride, after rendering two voice selections, played charmingly the wedding march. It was a brilliant and happy occasion, whose effect was heightened by the full evening dress and rich costumes of the entire bridal party, most tasteful and beautiful floral decorations, an inviting buffet supper, and a coterie of devoted friends and admirers of the happy bridal pair.

The presents to the bride were costly and beautiful. The Farmer home, for the occasion, was indeed a scene of rare loveliness and hospitality. Immediately after the marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Sides left for a Northern tour, and on their return will reside at Chapel Hill, N. C., where Mr. Sides has already won his place as successful teacher and citizen. The writer was the officiating minister. J. O. ATKINSON.

BACKING OUR CHURCH PAPER.

It is admitted everywhere now that one of the best, if not the very best, means of reaching people is through the printed page. There probably never was a time when the daily newspaper was so widely read as it is today. And not only is the daily paper read, but books and other papers by the thousand are taken and read. I ride on the street cars a great deal, and I am often impressed by the number of people on the cars who are reading something. The kind of literature they are reading differs greatly. There are books, papers and magazines, good, bad and indifferent. People read. Then if we wish to reach and influence public opinion today, we must do so through the printed page. Almost every work or vocation has its special paper, and the writing business has come to be a very profitable one. One of the dangers of our time is that people shall be brought under the influence of writers who write for profit instead of service.

It is easy, therefore, to see the need of good religious literature if religion is to be taught in one of the most effective ways. One of the great needs of the Church is to get its people in the habit of reading its literature. There are lots of Church members who would not think of being without their daily paper, that never think of taking nor reading their Church paper. There are many Christians who will unhesitatingly pay ten or twelve dollars a year for a daily paper, but they will tell you that they cannot afford to pay one or two dollars a year for their Church paper.

No denomination, great or small, publishes better papers than the Christian Church does. And I suppose the publications of our Church are supported by as large a percentage of the Church as those of any other denomination. But they are all suffering from lack of proper backing. The Herald of Gospel Liberty, one of the oldest and the best of religious papers, should have at least twice the number of subscribers it has. I don't know where one could find so much good religious reading elsewhere for the price of two dollars. THE CHRISTIAN SUN, our Southern paper, is splendid, and deserves a much better support than it receives. And that is true of all our other publications.

But I should like to call the attention of the people of the Ontario Conference to their especial obligation in backing the Vanguard. According to the number of members of the Ontario Conference and the number of subscriptions we have outside, we ought to have at least three hundred paid subscriptions. This would bring it up to a position near self-support. Yet Bro. Hoover tells me that he has received only about fifty dollars for subscriptions during the past year. We have issued something over three hundred copies, and received pay for a little over fifty of them. It is humiliating to make such a statement as that, but I feel that it should be made public, and that we should be so heartily ashamed of ourselves that we would resolve, right here and now, not to let such a thing occur again. Our next Conference session ought to take some steps to make the Vanguard self-supporting, and the action of Conference ought to receive the full and whole-hearted backing of overy person in every Church. The Vanguard ought to be in every home of the Conference, and every one ought to be willing to pay his share in keeping it there. Friends, let us get behind our Church papers as we should get behind every enterprise of the Church. And let us get so close behind that they can feel us push.—Calvin J. Felton, in Vanguard.

AGRICULTURAL NOTES.

A production of 8,197,000 bushels of wheat is forecasted for Virginia this year by the Virginia Crop Reporting Service, in comparison with 11,145,000 bushels produced in 1923. The forecast is based upon a condition of 82 per cent of normal on May 1st, and the final results may be larger or smaller as weather conditions are better or worse than the average. The acreage in wheat this year is the smallest since 1909. Nearly all farm work in Virginia is backward. Plowing made rapid progress during the latter part of April, but cold weather delayed planting. On May 1st reports indicated that 73 per cent of the spring plowing had been completed, compared with 80 per cent completed on the same date last year. Only 48 per cent of the planting and seeding had been completed on May 1st compared with 51 per cent last year. Usually a large part of Virginia's corn crop is planted during the latter part of April, but this year the weather has been so unseasonably cold that farmers have waited for more favorable conditions. The prospects for hay are very good, clovers and grasses having made a fine start. Stocks of old hay on the farms are smaller than usual, but are sufficient to meet requirements until the new crop is harvested. The outlook for fruit crops is mort promising, but it is yet too early to make any estimates of probable production, as in many sections apples are still in bloom. Heavy rains and swollen streams probably damaged crops during the second week in May, but accurate information on the amount of damage done is not yet available.

The early part of April was cool and wet in North Carolina, but since the fifteenth of that month the weather has been generally favorable for farm work, and farmers are catching up with their seasonal activities. Planting is well advanced in many sections, and crops are growing splendidly, but the general opinion is that farm work averages from ten to fifteen days late. Tobacco farmers are transplanting, and plants are plentiful in the State as a whole, though they are small. Wheat is recovering much of the ground lost as a result of late winter freezes and is now growing fairly well, giving promise of a good crop. Spring oats are in good condition, but fall oats, which suffered from the winter freezes, show poor stands and indicate a short crop. Farmers are still planting corn, but some early plantings are up to good stands. Clover crops average from fair to good. Truck is late, but is growing nicely, conditions in the commercial area being good. Prospects for fruit are considered extra good, and the State is expected to yield the largest crop in many years.

The agricultural statistician of South Carolina reports that crop prospects in that State compare favorably with average conditions on May 1st, although planting of most crops is late. (The same may be said of Georgia and adjoining States.) The percentage of plowing done on May 1st was estimated at 73 per cent, compared with 73 per cent done to the same date last year and 84 per cent the ten-year average, and planting done was estimated at 65 per cent compared with 68 per cent on May 1st last year. The probable wheat yield of South Carolina for this year is estimated at 1,463,000 bushels, compared with 1,925,000 bushels harvested in 1923, the condition of the crop on May 1st being 80 per cent in comparison with 83 per cent a year ago. The condition of the oat crop is only 67 per cent of normal. The commercial potato crop is reported to be poor. The supply of farm labor is estimated at 80 per cent of normal, whereas the demand is 93 per cent of normal.

BUSINESS CONDITIONS.

Factory employment and production of basic commodities declined in April and there was a further recession in wholesale prices. Retail trade was larger than in March, chiefly because of Easter buying, and was at about the level of earlier months of the year. There was a decrease in the volume of borrowing for commercial purposes and further easing of money rates.

Production.

The Federal Reserve Board's index of production in basic industries, adjusted to allow for seasonal variations, declined 2 per cent in April. Declines were particularly large in iron and steel, coal, and woolen industries. Mill consumption of cotton, on the other hand, showed less than the usual seasonal reduction between March and April. Factory employment declined 2 per cent in April, owing chiefly to large reduction of forces at textile and clothing establishments. Contract awards for new buildings reached a higher value than in March, and were also larger than a year ago. The value of building permits granted, however, declined and was smaller than in the corresponding month of 1923. Department of Agriculture estimates on May 1st of the yield of winter wheat and rye are somewhat above the forecasts made in April. The acreage of winter wheat is estimated at 7 per cent less than last year.

Trade.

Railroad shipments, which since the middle of March have been smaller than last year, were 3 per cent less in April than a year ago. Shipments of coal were much below last year, while loadings of merchandise and miscellaneous freight were higher. Wholesale trade in April was in about the same volume as during the preceding month and as in April, 1923. Sales of dry goods and hardware were smaller than a year ago, while sales of drugs and shoes showed some increase. Department store sales were considerably larger in April than in March, partly owing to the unusually late Easter. Total sales for the two months were 2 per cent greater than in the corresponding period of 1923. Merchandise stocks at department stores showed less than the usual seasonal increase in April, but were at a higher level than a year ago.

Prices.

Wholesale prices, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics' index, declined 1 per cent during April and reached the lowest point since May, 1922. Farm products, however, advanced 2 per cent in April. Metals and foods showed substantial reductions. Prices of clothing, fuel and chemicals also declined, while prices of building materials and house furnishings remained unchanged. During the first half of May, quotations on cotton, wheat, flour and hogs increased, while prices of sugar, silk, wool and metals declined.

Bank Credit.

During the five weeks' period ending May 14th, the volume of borrowing for commercial purposes at member banks in leading cities declined somewhat from the high level reached early in April. There were increases, however, in loans on stocks and bonds and in investments in securities, so that the total of all loans and investments at the middle of May was higher than a month previous and in larger volume than at any time in more than three years. The volume of borrowing by member banks at Federal Reserve Banks declined further during the last week of April and first half of May, while holdings of securities bought in the open market increased slightly. Total earning assets declined to $795,000,000 on May 21st, the lowest figure since the autumn of 1917. Further easing of money conditions during the last week of April and the first three weeks of May was reflected in a continued rise of the prices of government securities, in a reduction from 4½ to 4¼ per cent in the rate for prime commercial paper, and a decline in the rate of bankers' acceptances from 4 to 3 per cent. On May 1st, the discount rate of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York was reduced from 4½ to 4 per cent.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE HOLY BIBLE IS SUFFICIENT.

One is in error in saying that the Christian Church is a creedless Church. The Christian Church has its creed. That creed is the Holy Bible. It believes the Book. It believes that man does not have the right nor the insight nor the wisdom to take from or add to that Book. It believes with Paul in his declaration to Timothy (2 Tim. 3:16): "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." It believes with the psalmist who sang in perfect harmony: "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul; the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple." It believes with John the revelator, who declared (Rev. 22:18): "If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this Book; and if any man shall take away from the words of the Book, God shall take away his part out of the book of life and from the things which are written in the Book." The Christian Church believes that God gave by inspiration an all-sufficient creed in His revealed Word, and that no sort of legislation, or decree of court, or wisdom of man, or council of the great can improve upon the Book.

This is why the Christian Church puts it as one of the five fundamental planks of its platform that the Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice. The Christian Church feels that the reason why Christendom is divided today into so many camps, so many branches, so many conflicting and contending schisms and divisions is because wise men (in their own opinion) have tried to improve upon the Book or subtracted from the Book, and thus adopt a man-made creed instead of holding fast to a God-given creed.

The Bible is a broad Book, it is a large Book, it is a liberal Book. So is any book that undertakes to supply the moral and spiritual needs of man, to treat the many sides of complex and mysterious human nature, and to lead from the ways of error and untruth into the paths of peace and truth and to God. The Bible is a large Book; it is the utterance of the voice and will of God through inspired men; it is the great and infinite God speaking in a very special and direct manner to all sorts and all conditions of men. It is the Book on which our civilization is built, and through which the kingdom of our Lord is ever being extended and its power made known to the children of men. Man can never improve on this Book as a rule for his faith, a guide for his conscience, a chart and a compass for his daily pursuits and practices.

If the creed of the Christian Church is too large and liberal, the fault is not our own; we stand for the Word. Hold it aloft and proclaim it to the world, and give to all the right which we, ourselves, claim, namely: to "search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of men." With such a creed as this, with such a document, with such a book in our hands, we should today be proclaiming this salient fact in every land and clime beneath the sun. The world is hungry for the Book, and needs its teachings today as it needs nothing else in all the world and in all the thought of man. Our trouble as a Church has been that we have rejoiced in having the Book, the whole Book, and nothing but the Book, but have not spent ourselves nor our possessions in giving to others that which has been and is our chief blessing and benefit. The greatness of our creed and the glory of our position should have inspired us to run with haste and speed to all the earth; instead, we have, with indifference, allowed them to impede our progress and tie us to communities and localities in which we dwelt. Our glory in this respect has proved our shame, and our greatness has supplied us a seeming contentment and satisfaction to remain where and what we are.

One day this Christian Church of ours will rise with healing in its wings and will speed, as Lord Christ commanded we should, to the uttermost parts of the earth to proclaim this glorious gospel and make known to all men the infinite and imperishable truths which God has given us in His Book, and which we have made our sufficient rule of faith and practice. Oh, brethren and beloved of the Christian Church, how long! again let us say, how long before we shall practice what we preach in making the Bible, the Word of God, a sufficient rule of our faith?

IN GOD'S TOMORROW.

Our Heavenly Father saw from the beginning that it would not be best for us to know all things while here on earth, or even to know the experiences of delight and disappointment, achievement and failure, victory and defeat, through which we were to pass. And in His divine economy He provided for our limitations of prescience. If we knew just what experiences we were to pass through in life, our strength and vitality would all be wasted in worrying over how we would meet the different experiences when they came. It is indeed a divine favor conferred upon mortal man that he does not know ahead the experiences that are crowding to meet him. If we knew the misfortunes that await us from year to year; if we knew the afflictions that we were to have; if we knew the disappointments—it would shut out the sunshine of the present from our lives, and in anticipation of the experiences we would not be able to perform our present tasks or enter into the joys now before us.

Jesus said to Peter on one occasion: "Thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter." He was simply reminding the disciples and all Christian believers that there were spiritual meanings in life too deep for the human mind to fathom on this side the grave, but that some day man would understand all things even as God from the beginning has understood. The apostle Paul gave expression to his conviction on this subject in his classic words, "Now we see in a mirror darkly; but then face to face; now I know in part, but then shall I know fully even as also all along I have been fully known." Such a prospect—the capacity some day to be able to understand all the mysteries of earth and of heaven; some day to be able to answer all the baffling questions of the mind and of the soul—such a prospect is one of the most wonderful heritages of heaven. To be able some day to see all things as God now sees; to be able to love as God now loves; to be able to know all things as God now knows, to understand as God understands—is the Christian's hope, for "we shall be like Him."

Just meditate upon that thought, the thought of heaven affording its citizenship the privilege of supreme knowledge and understanding. Such a hope—yes, such an assurance—ought to be an incentive to every thoughtfful man and woman to make such of heaven.

"Thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter." It was our Lord and Master who spoke the words. He was gathered with His disciples in the upper room. It was a farewell service, the last night Jesus spent with His friends before His departure.

"Thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter." The disciples did not understand the significance of the relation Christ bore to them nor of the object-lesson of brotherly service He sought to give them. The supper was over. Jesus had girded Himself with a towel; had taken a basin of water and began to wash the disciples' feet. They did not understand the meaning of the act. Peter protested because he did not understand the spiritual symbolism of the service. And so in these later days there are large numbers of true disciples of our Lord who have a mistaken interpretation of that act, and instead of realizing that Jesus washed the disciples' feet as an object-lesson of humility in brotherly service, they have thought that He thereby instituted "the ordinance of feet-washing." They look at the physical act itself rather than at the spirit that prompted the act.

The great lesson that Jesus sought to teach by that humble act was that the secret of true greatness is humility and a willingness to respond to every opportunity of service. In that act of humble service to the disciples, God's nature is revealed. Has it ever occurred to you that God is working for us all the time? Has it ever occurred to you that it costs God effort and energy to make provision ever for our material comforts and necessities day by day? Through His own divine effort, He has made provision for us to have air to breathe, water to drink and food to eat. And above all He exercises spiritual concern toward us. And in God's attitude toward mankind is reflected the only true attitude parents should have toward their children. The true parents are more anxious about the moral and spiritual welfare of their children than merely that they should have good clothing and good food. the father or mother who is content merely to know that their boy or girl is well fed and well clothed, and that by reason of proper home training their children have the correct decorum and appear well on all occasions, such parents should be made to realize that it is of infinitely more importance that their children are provided for spiritually, and that their boy or girl should so be trained as to first of all be able to appear well in the sight of God. Our Heavenly Father made provision for both the material and the spiritual needs of His children, and He thereby sets an example for every earthly parent. And the Sunday School is the response of the Church to help the fathers and mothers of the community to meet that need. That is one service the Sunday School seeks to render to the community, to offer opportunity for religious training, to prepare the youth for the emergencies of life.

There are many things in man's today that we cannot understand, and we must wait until "God's tomorrow" for their explanation. In "man's today" we see through a glass darkly; but in "God's tomorrow" we shall see face to face. In "man's today" we only know in part; but in "God's tomorrow" we shall know even as we are known.

REACHING THE INDIVIDUAL.

Progress is made only by improving the individual. This is true in every realm of life. But it is nowhere so evident as in the field of religious endeavor. The only way to improve our Churches is to lead the individual members into a larger Christian experience. The only way to save the world is to save one by one the individuals who make up the world. The world can never be saved en masse. The Church can never be improved en masse. We can advance only as we reach and save or improve the individual.

This is a slow and wearying process. It requires time. It requires no end of patience. And it requires tremendous amount of the hardest kind of work. It is not surprising that the Church has so long held to the effort to reach the masses by mass tactics. It is so fascinating to dream of launching a drive or a movement that will, by the force of its momentum, reach great masses of folks and turn them in the right direction. The recent remarkable denominational movements, campaigns and drives were inspired by the successful mass undertakings of the government. The surprising thing about them is the degree of success they attained. But we are beginning to see that their successful completion depends upon reaching the individuals who have contributed, and maintaining their interest and activity.

Ministers have long since realized that the success of their work depends upon the reaching of the individual. This has to be done mainly through the personal contact. It is no disparagement of the work of preaching to say this. The public message has its place, and it is powerful in its far-reaching effects. But even the sermon has to be followed up with the personal interview and visitation if it is to accomplish its purpose. People become aroused to a sense of duty. Church members realize their duty to render a larger service. Unchurched believers are made to feel that they should be actively identified with the work of the kingdom. The unconverted are made to realize their need of personal salvation. In practically every instance, a personal interview is necessary for the completion of these desirable results. We are realizing as never before that the work of the kingdom depends upon individual work with and for individuals.

Now, who is to do all this individual work? Naturally, the first thought is directed toward the pastor. We are told time and again, in Conferences and Conventions, that the pastor is the key-man in every enterprise of the Church. We are not disputing that fact, but if he is what the term indicates, his duty is to unlock the door of opportunity. The key-man certainly should not be expected to do all the work. In every pastorate, whether it be country or city work, the amount of personal work that demands to be done is simply overwhelming. It is an impossible task for one man to ever hope to accomplish it There are the members of the Church who have grown cold or careless. There are the members who have never seen the possibilities that God has placed in their way. There are the sick folks who ought to be visited. There are the folks who are occasional attendants at your services who should be reached and actively enlisted. When could a preacher ever find time to read a book or prepare a sermon if he were to do it all.

Who is to be the pastor's helper in this task? Many city Churches are turning to paid workers to assist the pastor. But it is a question whether this is practical or even desirable if the Church finances are able to provide for it. Can you pay some one to fulfill your obligations to God and your fellow-men? And if you pay some one to do your work for you, are you not missing the finest and most soul-satisfying experience of your Christian life?

There has been a wonderful development of lay activities in our Churches. Some of our laymen and laywomen are rendering service that is invaluable. It has been my experience that most of our members are perfectly willing to work when a definite work is given them to be done on an occasion. Most of them work willingly and faithfully, and enjoy it. If you are facing an evangelistic campaign, they will do personal work. If you are undertaking a financial task, they will make solicitations. But too many of them regard it as an occasional task, and not as a continuous occupation. They are like the neighbor who comes in to help when a member of your family is sick, or who makes up a purse for you when your house burns. Such service is priceless. But what we need to realize is that our Master is calling us not to occasional deeds of service, but to a life-long service of daily work in his kingdom.

IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE.

On Broadway, New York. are signs 50x54 feet in size, 60x70 feet, 68x80 feet—any size, so it is great and attracts. On one of these signs are letters twenty-five feet high. One industrious firm advertising its make of chewing gum has spent on one sign at Forty-fourth and Broadway $100,000 a year for the past seven years—$700,000 in seven years! There are other signs nearby that cost $60,000 per month; so that, in this vicinity, this manufacturer has paid out $40,000,000 for advertising his make of chewing gum the past seven years.

Other manufacturers are equally industrious and ingenius in keeping their wares before the public eye. Surely the Word is right in declaring, "The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light."

What if the Church were to put one-tenth as much into advertising to the world the worth and value and merits of the saving power of the Gospel as our business concerns put into advertising their wares and products? In such an event, this whole wide world would be won to Christ in this generation.

Are we really seeking to let our lights shine out to all the world, or are we hiding them under a bushel?

THE HOME OF THE SOUL—WHERE?

There are but two homes for the soul—one is heaven, the other hell. Your conscience tells you which would be your home were you to die tonight. There are those, to be sure, who claim that there is no such place as hell. They even laugh at the minister who warns against this terrible place. Their real objection is not to the preacher, but to the Bible. The New Testament tells us there was a man who "lifted up his eyes, being in torment." If eternal punishment is not true, then the Bible is untrue and altogether unworthy of belief. He who rejects the fact of hell must likewise reject the fact of heaven, and to reject these is to discredit Christ and reject the Scriptures. Some time since a scoffer said to me, "In the course of time, the fires of hell would have to burn out." I reminded him that we had positive proof of the fact that Vesuvius had been burning for about 2,000 years, and that the probability was much longer. And just here I offer it as my deliberate opinion that I never knew a man who did not believe in hell, who was not traveling the path that led there. It is more or less natural for one whose life logically leads to eternal punishment to deny eternal punishment.—J. W. Porter, D. D.

MEN AND MILLIONS.

The payments on pledges to Men and Millions in May were encouraging, as the report elsewhere in The Sun shows. All our people need is to keep the movement in mind—what it is doing, and what it will do. If we can't support this movement, we need not talk of our love or loyalty to the Christian Church. The Men and Millions Movement is nothing less than the Christian Church endeavoring to go forward in kingdom service; in doing that more efficiently and successfully which God has committed to us through the Church. If we love our Church, love all it is, stands for, is undertaking to do in the world to save souls, preach the Word and extend the kingdom of our Lord; then we will support Men and Millions, pay up our pledges and help carry forward this holy and heavenly movement.

SWEET THEIR REST.

Sweet is the rest of those who lie
Under the grass and the open sky.
Pain no more shall come to them.
The lips of censure are dumb to them.
Sorrow nor hurt nor shame may touch
The breast of those whom we loved so much;
Age has lost them the same as we,
Always beautiful now they'll be.

Mourn you not for the ones who lie
Under the grass and the open sky.
Never shall sin draw near to them,
Never shall terror bring fear to them;
They have gone home to the God above.
Sheltered now in His boundless love
From all that maketh men's misery—
Always beautiful now they'll be.

Religion is by some supposed to be the most secret thing about a man. It has to do with the relation of a man's soul to God. No man can look down into the soul and see what is there. Yet any boy can tell whether a man's religion is genuine or not. But even suppose his fellowman may for a time be deceived, let him remember that God cannot be deceived. The man who tries to appear religious, when he is not, is insulting God. He seems to take the stand that God does not know what is going on in his heart and life, and that he can do what he chooses without fear of the consequences. Such a man should have before him as his motto text, "Thou God seest me."—Ex.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Gossip is the cheapest product of the tongue-factory. It is manufactured on a very large scale. It is never copyrighted. It is not marketable among the best people. It changes subjects with every new dissatisfaction and disappointment. It circulates very freely, but usually by verbal methods. It rarely gets in print. It has many agents, but very few of them are willing to give the author of the latest, except in rare cases and to confidential listeners. It costs nothing to distribute its messages. Most of it is personal. Its chief topics are social and commercial. It looks after human conduct with microscopic vision, and knows more about the crooked or failing business than any reporter. It is zealous to the point of secret enthusiasm. It is deeply concerned about personal reputation and the interests of business. It usually introduces its topic with "Have you heard?" And then proceeds to relate a confidential report with the parenthesis, "I am very sorry, but they say it is certainly true." Then the story is related.

The State considers its citizens innocent until charges are proved. The court proceeds upon that assumption. The witness in court is sworn to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth." More than that, the witness must be of good character as to statements not only in court, but out of court. This, it seems, is a fair way to deal with all matters that pertain to human conduct and human affairs. Many men have been driven to the wall in business by false reports circulated by loose tongues and careless brains. It is too bad that courts of justice which deal chiefly with crimes and criminals should be better than neighbors in their dealings with one another. Simple justice requires that nothing be believed without proof; and gossip disregards the simplest rules of justice. One other thing might be stated, and that is that there are gossiping ears as well as gossiping tongues. So many people have "itching ears." "Keep thy tongue from evil, and thy lips from speaking guile." Words are among the most powerful things in all the universe. God "spake, and it was done." Jesus said to the afflicted man: "Arise, take up thy bed and go to thy house; and he arose." Again he said to the storm-tossed sea: "Peace, be still; and there was a great calm." The word of God is "quick and powerful, sharper than any two-edged sword"; and human speech, spoken and written, is powerful. Laws are simply words. The Bible is all words. The gospel is in words. The tongue is a dangerous weapon when employed in gossip. The tongue is an unruly member; everything else has been tamed except the tongue.

With the tongue, men praise God and curse God; with the tongue, men bless other men or blight the best they possess. We ought not to listen to gossip. The man who buys intoxicating liquor is as guilty as the man who sells liquor. This has been so decided by judges. We are all guilty. We need to set a new standard for conversation. Society rests on speech. We condemn the man who stabs his brother and then slanders him with his tongue. The majesty of human speech is truth; the poetry of human speech is its Christian spirit that lives in friendships that endure. "Am I my brother's keeper" needs no question mark for Christian men and women.

W. W. STALEY.

ELON LETTER.

I write this on the return trip from Bethlehem College, Wadley, Ala. I have been very much encouraged by what I saw there. The school is one year old now, and it is certainly a lusty and promising youngster.

The original building, a combination dormitory for girls and temporary administration building, is not completed, but has been in use since December 15th last. The contractor was ordered, by the trustees in session, to proceed at once to complete it, and just as soon as funds are available from the Southern Christian Convention's recent action, the administration building will be begun.

President Hook has started the school off well, giving it high standards. He has wisely co-operated with the State and local public school authorities and has their esteem and good will—valuable assets indeed for any college. The high school department is already accredited. The junior college will be standardized as soon as possible.

President Hook and his faculty were given a vote of sincere appreciation for their splendid service during the session of beginnings. The president, in February, announced his intention to resign. That does not mean there is any loss of hope in his mind for Bethlehem. He believes solidly in her future, and is deeply interested in it. In his successor, Dr. S. L. Beougher, the trustees feel they have secured a man who will carry forward President Hook's splendid seed-sowing to a golden harvest of growth and development. President Beougher is urged to assume his duties at once.

Rev. Geo. D. Hunt, the "Dr. W. W. Staley of our Far-Southern work," continues as financial agent of the college, giving even a larger portion of his time to the work. For more than a year now he has pastored five Churches, working for the college meantime, paying his traveling expenses for the most part, and not agreeing to accept a penny for his services. With this Conference year he is to give up all but two Churches and agrees to accept a modest salary beyond his expenses. This splendid man has raised in cash about $3,000, and in subscriptions about $7,000, without appreciable cost to Bethlehem. He is no rich man, just an humble preacher; but he loves Bethlehem and the Christian Church, and recognizes that they must progress or stand still together. His espousal of the college's interests means prestige, and presages success.

The second, or sophomore, year of the college work will be undertaken next year. Fifty-one students enrolled last session. The hope is for one hundred during 1924-'25. President Beougher is a hustler, a good executive, an enthusiast of the first caliber, and an optimist who can extract good even out of a sleepless night. He is new in the field of college administration, but his fine achievements in the pastorate, his practical-mindedness and his versatility, together with his genial disposition, guarantee in the judgment of those who know him best an era of growth and progress at Bethlehem.

Prof. Herbert Scholz, Jr., has made a splendid success of his work this session, and returns to the college next year. So does Mrs. Thyra Swint as teacher in the high school department and as librarian. Prof. Otis Fincher is expected to teach music. Miss Alma Beougher, daughter of the president, is to teach the commercial branches, act as secretary to the president and as college bursar. Mrs. Beougher is to be matron and housekeeper. Other faculty members are Rev. S. M. Lynam, Miss Mary Swanson, and Miss Essie Mae Cotten. With such a facnulty and with the spirit of optimism that radiates from the hearts of our people and friends there, Bethlehem can confidently face the future.

I was glad the trustees voted to ask all Christian Churches in the two Conferences to call in their appointments on the first Sunday in June for the future, the commencement Sunday, so as to permit our ministers and our members generally to attend the commencement. Our people need to visit our college commencements. It will help them. It will also help the colleges.

Why not send Rev. Geo. D. Hunt a gift for Bethlehem? God will bless and prosper you in such generosity.

NORFOLK-PORTSMOUTH CHURCHES.

There are eight Christian Churches in Norfolk and Portsmouth, with a membership of 2,681. This is a greater number than that of the Valley of Virginia, or the Alabama, or the Georgia and Alabama Conference. This number is sufficiently great to make this city by the sea feel the power of the Christian Church. Does it feel that power? Does it know who we are? It certainly does! It should know us even better, and it needs our message of life and love and cheer in a still greater measure.

To that end, the Christian ministers have reorganized. Dr. W. D. Harward, pastor of the Elm Avenue, Portsmouth, Christian Church, is president, and John G. Truitt, pastor of the First Christian Church, Norfolk, is secretary-treasurer. Other members are: Rev. B. F. Black, pastor of Rosemont Christian Church; Rev. W. H. Garman, pastor of Old Zion Christian Church; Rev. O. D. Poythress, pastor of the South Norfolk Christian Church; Dr. L. E. Smith, pastor of the Christian Temple; Chaplain H. E. Rountree, in U. S. Navy; and Rev. W. L. Wells, pastor of First Christian Church, Portsmouth.

Just before Easter, through combined effort, about 190 persons were enlisted in this community to win men to Christ during the pre-Easter week. On and just before Easter over 200 members were received into our Churches. Since Easter the number has gone to 305. The figures are: Christian Temple, 111; South Norfolk, 60; First Christian, Norfolk, 37; Old Zion, 35; Elm Avenue, 23; Rosemont, 19; Ocean View, 15, and First Christian, Portsmouth, 3. Rev. W. H. Garman is preaching evangelistic sermons at Ocean View this week, and will without doubt add others to that roll.

At present we are trying to institute daily vacation Bible schools in all of our Churches. Several of them are already committed to it. It is the hope of this organization that wherever a Christian Church is found in this community, there will be found a wide-awake and up-to-date group of Christian workers. May it come to be said, by all who are posted in this city, that wherever you find the Christian Church you will find a good place to worship God; a people taught by competently trained leaders in Kingdom-building; and a zealous, warm-hearted congregation, ready at all times to be a genuine blessing through united effort and Christian love.

MAKING ATHLETICS CHRISTIAN.

It is a far cry from the days when athletics in colleges was considered a useless waste of time and effort, to the present day. Today the athlete is the hero of the college campus, and both the students and faculty often strain their vocabularies to blazon forth his prowess. But we are wondering if this is right and proper, and if athletics as played in our colleges today is worthy to rest on the pedestal of importance to which it has been raised.

Modern Christianity is invading every walk of life, from the life in the home to the political conduct of the nation. Athletics—that great formative agency in the lives of our young men—must be invaded and permeated by the spirit of Christ.

It is no doubt our duty to encourage wholesome athletics as promotive of the welfare of our bodies, which are the temples of God; but, when athletics in colleges reaches such a degree of contamination as to become detrimental to the building of Christian character in those who participate, it is time to stop and think.

Now, athletics is a Christian conception, and being Christian in conception it is the duty of those who play, those who direct, and those who support athletics to keep it not only Christian in theory, but also to make it Christian in actual practice. It is the spirit of fair play which makes athletics glorious, and when this is violated the game becomes loathsome to those who love clean athletics. The writer has heard players boast that it was their ambition to be "dirty" football players. What kind of attitude should we take toward men of this type? Such men are not fit to wear the colors of the institution they represent, and the game would be a thousand times better off without them. Some of the worst profanity I have ever heard was during a football game. If one belongs to a team where this is allowed, it is in accordance with all rules of life that he will gradually acquire the use of profanity himself. We must see that this situation is remedied and that athletics is made wholesome.

We will all agree that the coach or director is a strategic force in collegiate athletics. The players are in his charge almost body and soul when on the field or court, and it is within his power to influence them for good or evil as no other individual can. The majority of our coaches are good Christian men, and we should make every effort to see that this is true of all. There is no logical reason why the atmosphere on the athletic field should not be as wholesome and as pure as the atmosphere which pervades the students in the class-room in their reverent search for truth. It is the duty of all to create such a sentiment on our campuses as will make athletics Christian.

Athletics that is conducive to the building of Christian character, the fairest flower of civilization, is a blessing to our colleges. Athletics which destroys the fine impulse of fair play and reverence for God are a curse, and should be treated as such.

REV. McD. HOWSARE TO COME TO ELON.

Readers of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, in the Southern Convention, have been intensely interested in the inspiring results of "Kingdom-Enlistment Week" which has been observed in many of our Christian Churches under the direction of Rev. McD. Howsare, of Dayton, Ohio, who is executive secretary of the Board of Evangelism of the Christian Church. At Dover, Del., the only Church within the bounds of the Southern Christian Convention, which has had one of these kingdom enlistment weeks, over one hundred came into the Church following Dr. Howsare's visit to Dover.

Pastors and others of the South will be glad to know that Dr. Howsare has consented to come to the Elon Chautauqua for a class in evangelism and to conduct the closing consecration service of the week on Sunday night. Those who are eager to follow the Master in winning others, will wish to attend Dr. Howsare's class at Elon July 28th to August 3d, and to discuss with him personally the great work of evangelism.

The Chautauqua this year offers an exceptionally fine course to pastors, with Dean Enders, Dr. Howsare, Rev. Harrell, Rev. Hardcastle, Dr. Staley, Dr. Harper, and a host of others who have a real message from study and experience. The pastors will wish to be there from the opening night when Rev. Wade C. Smith, of Greensboro, opens the Chautauqua, through Dr. Howsare's closing consecration service. More than that: every pastor will wish to have there with him Church leaders and young people who will share his vision and go home to help make their own Church program a winning force for Jesus Christ.

OUR MOUNTAIN WORK.

On Sunday, June 1st, a beautiful memorial service was held at Elk Spur Christian Church, Fancy Gap, Va. The following program was rendered:

Several selections of music, led by W. C. Strickland.

Greetings by the pastor, Rev. M. T. Sorrell.

Bibles from the "Win One Bible Class," Winchester, Va., were presented to every member of the Church by W. E. Lindsay, of Mt. Airy, N. C., with impressive and appropriate remarks.

"Why Have Memorial Day?" address by J. W. Hylton, Mt. Airy, N. C.

An address by Judge Bowling, of Hillsville, Va.

The service was then closed with prayer, after which all went to the cemetery and spread flowers on the graves. Miss Laura Clemmer, here, made a short but very interesting talk.

It was an ideal day, the music was splendid, the fellowship warm and cordial, spiritual interest was deep, the congregation very large and orderly.

After enjoying a good dinner and the kind hospitality of Bro. Sorrell and wife, Miss Morey, Mrs. Sorrell, Mrs. Lindsay, Mr. Hylton, Bro. Sorrell and myself went to Rocky Ford for Sunday School and preaching. Here, Mr. Hylton and myself made short talks on the Sunday School.

It was certainly a most delightful day and an inspiring occasion. We wish all Christian Sun readers who, through our Sunday Schools and Churches, have contributed to our mountain work could have been present on this auspicious and wholesome occasion. It was an inspiration to be there.

A COMMUNICATION.

The Christian Church! Oh, the Christian Church! Who does it belong to—God or man? "And they were called Christians at Antioch," and were to be brothers and sisters in Christ's name the world over, preaching and teaching the gospel of truth through love, winning disciples to be followers of Jesus, known and read of all men. And, oh! how they loved one another, and how we ought to love one another as He loved us!

It pains my heart to read such articles as came out in The Christian Sun April 17th, "The Way to Disunion." The Christian Evangelist issue of April 3d, in its department letters to the brotherhood, in an article signed by W. T. Nee, deposes and says the new Christian Temple will be dedicated March 16th, etc.

I love the name Christian Church, and have tried to be loyal and true in helping to keep from bringing reproach upon the cause of Christ and others, saying we are not worthy of the name we bear. We should not condemn others in what we allow in ourselves. "There is so much good in the worst of us. Holy writ says Christians are to shine as lights in the city. We are to be guideposts, doing things Christ-like.

I hope somebody will clarify the "why" of this article through The Sun. To my mind, it is the most heart-rending editorial that has ever passed through our Church papers. Let us unite, and be Jews or Gentiles. I would prefer we be good Samaritans, even though they were called dogs, begging crumbs.

OLD LEBANON CHURCH SITE.

I see in The Sun of May 29th a piece under the above heading. I want to say, "Hurrah!" especially to the last paragraph.

The action now started has been on my heart for two or three years and I have mentioned it to several from time to time at our annual Conferences, but was discouraged, and hence did not bring it before the Conferences. But I am glad the ball has started to roll at last.

Anything I can do or any information wanted by the committee, call on me and I will do all I can to help the plans forward. I know the spot on which the house stood and can show the house, which was moved from there, which sheltered the suggestors and adoption of our present great name—Christian. The Richmond-Norfolk State highway directly crosses it and cuts it almost in half, and the spot on which the house stood is in a few feet of the highway, making it more noticeable to tourists in passing.

The old deed, with John Warren's and Jane Warren's signature is in my possession. I treasure it very highly and often think of the worshipers of one hundred and twenty-five years back. How little did they think such a large Church would grow out of that thin little handful. I am glad a monument is soon to be erected on Old Lebanon Church site.

ROGER W. BABSON.

Roger W. Babson, of Washington, D. C., graduated from the Institute of Technology, in Boston, Mass., and served as statistician for a bonding company in Boston for eight months. Then he accepted a position in the city of New York. For a number of years past, he has been one of the closest and ablest students of religious and moral questions. In concluding a wonderful address a short time ago, he said: "Thus we see that it is not raw materials, available labor, capital, or intelligence which make permanent prosperity. They are but the tools and can be used either to upbuild or tear down. The real thing of worth is the purpose which actuates the use of these tools.

"For permanent prosperity we must all be actuated by those spiritual qualities of thrift, industry, efficiency, integrity, faith, inspiration, service, righteousness—qualities which religion alone can give. The greatest, the most necessary and the most practical force in the upbuilding of a permanent prosperity is, I say, religion—the spirit of Jesus Christ in the soul of man."

Error is not dangerous where truth is free to combat her.

MEN AND MILLIONS AND A CLEAR CONSCIENCE.

A good brother, writing June 3, personally says: "I feel much better about Men and Millions and can talk about the Movement more conscientoously since I have paid up my own pledge. Before I paid it, my conscience would smite me and tell me I ought to practice what I preached. It is my conviction that whenever a man pays up his pledge he is more fully converted to the movement and naturally wants to see others become happy and have a clear conscience like himself. God bless our M. & M. Movement and enable the new subscribers to pay up their pledges. When a pledge is paid, there is such a joy and ease of conscience in the heart as to make one feel like exclaiming, 'I am so glad I gave!' "

Many feel as this good brother. As a rule, the ones who are not enthusiastic over M. & M. are those who did not subscribe at all, or, having subscribed, have not paid their pledges. Every one who has made an honest effort to pay his pledge and realizes what he has accomplished thereby in helping all the interests and enterprises of our Christian Church, is bound to rejoice and feel happy deep down in his heart. There never has been a movement that gives more joy to those who are helping carry it forward, since it is the one movement that all of us are invited into in behalf of the great service it is trying to do to advance the kingdom of our Lord in the world.

STEWARDSHIP AND MISSIONS.

By Rev. W. H. Denison, D. D.

[Reproduced from notes of an address delivered by Dr. Denison before the Southern Christian Convention, at Norfolk, and published by request of the editors.]

When I become a steward, what bearing will that have on my interest in the work for missions? The fundamental principle of Christian stewardship is that God, by creation and redemption, is the actual owner of all natural and spiritual resources; and that as stewards, we are entrusted with life, powers, business ability, property, time, talents, never for selfish use, but ever for service of God and humanity.

The accepted principles of stewardship are (1) that God is the owner of all things; (2) that man is a steward and must give an account of how he has used for God all that has been entrusted to him; (3) that God's ownership and man's stewardship ought to be acknowledged; (4) this acknowledgment requires, in material expression, the setting apart as an act of worship for the extension of the kingdom a separated portion of income. In the Scriptures, the tenth is recognized as such acknowledgment. The proportion should increase as income increases. (5) The separated portion should be systematically administered for the kingdom of God and the balance treated as no less a trust.

When I recoknize that missions is the main business of the Church; that the winning of men and women to Christ is the central purpose of the Church—and then adopt the above stewardship principles, and practice them, something is likely to happen in my life.

What Will Likely Happen?

1. I will consider my family from a different viewpoint. I may have thought of their interests without relation to kingdom extension. Possibly I had only thought of their success in life as being established in a good home, successful business, as living near me. I may have thought of that Sunday School class as a fine lot of young people to be honest and clean, establish themselves in the community, and never have presented to them the need of the world for their lives. As a pastor of my Church, I will make the aims and purposes of my Church not merely to train up a generation of nice people, to establish themselves in my congregation and be simply good people. But when the principle of Christian stewardship gets possession of me as a parent, Sunday School teacher, pastor, I will be laying on the hearts and minds of my children, class, congregation the great call of God for workers, and one result will be more missionaries will go from my home, class, Church. Many homes do not want their children to become missionaries, many teachers have never presented the matter to their classes, many Churches have existed ten, twenty, fifty, one hundred years, and never sent out one pastor or missionary.

(2) There will be a new element in my prayer-life. When in our homes and in our Churches we begin to pray definitely for fields, workers, races, and study them, the stereotyped prayers of years will be changed into living, vital praying. There will be new elements in my prayer-life, new interest in the old prayer meeting, and in the family devotions. There will be more power in our prayers at home and at Church, and more things will happen, because when we prayed we recognized our stewardship of lost humanity.

(3) I am a layman and have been chosen by my Church as one of the every-member canvassers. Heretofore my service has been hesitant along that line; I have called myself a beggar; I have tried to use some plan short of the every-member canvass; I have seen the matter of the canvass only as a matter of making a budget. But when this stewardship message gets hold of me I see it from a new point of view: I feel that I have one of the great chances of my life, and go to men and women, boys and girls gladly and present to them the needs of the kingdom and find it a privilege to show them their privilege. When I recognize my stewardship, I ask to be a canvasser next year too. I become an advocate for the Church and the whole cause.

(4) I will give more money for missions, too. I will recognize my stewardship by starting with the tithe of my income. Last year our people gave on an average for all Christian purposes less than one-fourth of the tithe of their income. Then if my income increases I will be glad to increase my giving over the tithe. There will be more money for the Lord's work.

(5) I am going to study and investigate more about the business I am investing in. I have contributed some when the calls came, but have not really given the matter much thought. Now that I am a steward, I am finding out about that work to which I am giving and seeing where the largest results accrue to the kingdom. I take some definite interest now. I study the places of investment as I would in a secular matter. I am learning something, and enjoy it.

(6) My stewardship acceptance gives me a new and different view of the dollar I have. I see it not as filthy lucre, not as the devil's coin, but as so much of myself, so much stored-up human power. It is a part of myself. How am I willing to spend so much of myself? Surely not foolishly! With it I build Churches, preach the gospel where I may not go, train other workers, teach, heal, save children. Stewardship gives me a new view of money. I put so much of myself into each of these enterprises.

(7) As a Church officer, it changes my view of the work assigned to me. I have considered it as drudgery, have given little time or thought to my work. I have had little system, slighted the work I could. I have skipped the official board meetings when I could, other things have had my attention when they came on the same night as a Church, committee, or board meeting. Now, in the new light, I see that I have a great privilege of service, a place to use my business, legal, financial, clerical, executive ability in the greatest channel of righteousness in the world—

The recognition of my stewardship opens my eyes to at least these seven things; and, do you know, I think it is worth while? I enjoy it at least.

Dayton, Ohio.

FOLKS IS FOLKS.

It has been the writer's privilege during these recent months to be in the homes and Churches of our Christian Church people in various parts of our brotherhood. The experience has been a very valuable one indeed. Churches in the open country, in villages, towns and cities have been visited, and everywhere the finest people imaginable have been met. What ministers and what ministers' wives we have, and what solid, hopeful men and women there are every where! How any one could ever be a pessimist and be out with Church people is beyond knowledge. Everything is not just right in the world, to be sure; but God has many thousands who are clean-living, glad-hearted and forward-looking; and they are, and their children will continue to be, the salt of the earth.

My February field work was done amongst the brethren of the New York Eastern Conference. The snow is deep in this part of New York in February, and so in these days of dependence upon auto transport one cannot get far back from the beaten track, but the Churches visited seemed to unite in creating a vision of a sleeping giant. Splendid work is being done, but the possibilities are so vast that one stands in awe. Church after Church stands alone or practically so in its community, and the religious life of that community depends upon one of our Churches. If these Church buildings are not of today, they are at any rate in a worshipful way maintained. Two things seem to be needed. First, some great, worth-while undertaking to arouse them to the consciousness of their power; and, second, a more widespread use of our literature among the boys and girls. Numbers of the boys and girls seem entirely innocent of any relationship to or loyalty for a definite Church family.

March was spent in sunny North Carolina, but it was not sunny. Out of respect for the northern visitor, it snowed and blew and even made icicles. But the weather had no affect upon the loyal, loving hearts of the people. Hope and expectancy are everywhere here whether around Elon or back in a county where the railway does not penetrate. To the folk-loving visitor there was much to encourage and cheer. Two things seem much to be desired: first, more frequent visits of a pastor (rather than a preacher once or twice a month) to provide religious leadership; and, second, a more adequate equipment for worship among the boys and girls.

Part of April was spent within the bounds of the Eastern Indiana Conference. This is the Conference that has done almost as much as the whole Church to provide missionaries for the foreign field. We visited them in their very busy oat-seeding time, but, with splendid loyalty, numbers of them left their fields to listen to ways and means of more helpfully carrying on the Master's work. If one were to suggest what seems to be the two greatest needs of this fine people in religious education, they would probably be: first, a deepened sense of the value of educational evangelism; and, second, of trained teachers. Four Churches of the Eel River Conference were visited also. Here the people have built more adequate buildings than was usual in the buildings of twenty-five years ago, and their workers are thus more fortunate. If the Sunday School people of these Churches were as forward-looking as their leaders, great things would result. As it is, there seemed much hope.

The last three days of April were spent in delightful fellowship with the Yale colony of Christian Church students and ministers attending the annual lectureship courses at that great seminary.

A little over two weeks of May were spent with the Churches of the Merrimac, Rockingham and Cumberland Conferences of the New England Convention. Everything here was warm and cordial except the weather. But during a pouring rain all day we had one of the best institutes of the series. Some of the schools of these Conferences are doing very fine work, and some are splendidly organized for further advance. Workers are being urged to go to summer schools, and one or two teacher-training classes are at work. There is also one or two buildings quite adequate for resultful work. What strikes the visitor as most interesting, but at the same time as the greatest handicap, is the almost glorying of the age of things. Most of the Churches are well kept, but are old and inadequate, and their veneration almost says "hands off." There seems also to be a tendency to have the Church and Sunday School work done by elderly people, and to neglect to develop the young people. I never met finer people than these New England folk, but in a number of places one's heart would hunger for the enthusiasm of youth.

W. P. Fletcher.

A STEWARD FACES HIS LORD.

In a Church not long since, when the Sunday School offering was being taken, a member of the men's Bible class was seen to fish deep into his pocket, bring out some small change and drop a penny in the plate and return the remainder of his coin to his pocket. This was not unusual with this man—it was his custom to put a penny in the Sunday School offering. Eighteen months from the particular morning referred to, this man was dead, and his estate was appraised at something like $40,000.

One wonders what this man said when appearing in the judgment, his Lord said: "Give an account of thy stewardship." All will one day render an account of how we have managed that which our Lord has entrusted to us during our lifetime.

OUR PLEDGES to Men and Millions are Sacred, Solemn and Binding.

These obligations were made through the Church to the Kingdom of God and to all that pertains to building up that Kingdom in the world, so far as our Christian Church is concerned. As Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has so pertinently pointed out: "A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations--'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42)--but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

Many are making great sacrifices to meet these obligations and pay these pledges. Every one who fails to do so not only produces paralysis in his own moral system, but to that extent paralyses the efforts and sacrifices that the faithful and the loyal make.

BEAR IN MIND MEN AND MILLIONS MEAN AND STAND FOR ALL THAT THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH MEANS AND STANDS FOR.

—REMEMBER—

that the fourth year ends April 30, 1924.

After that, we have only one more year in which to meet these obligations. Unless we put forth a mighty effort to pay some on these pledges during the last quarter of the fourth year, there is great danger that we will fail entirely, because of the bulk of our pledge looming up before us in a one-year period.

Paying something by April 30, 1924, will make it easy to pay ALL by April 30, 1925. Where there is a will there is a way, and God always helps those who try to their capacity to help themselves.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

THE REASONABLENESS OF PRAYER.

We have insisted that prayer is a real and living force as natural as some other things of our being, and a thing to be as much depended upon when we comprehend its operations.

Now, if God exists, there must be prayer, for there must be a relationship between the Creator and thing created, between the father and the child. With our Heavenly Father, that relationship is prayer, and the prayer life of every individual begins with the consciousness of the Sonship; yea, even earlier than that—subconsciously the individual prays before conscious prayer becomes positive.

It is impossible, therefore, to think of God our Father without entering into this prayer-life and without communing with Him. That is what prayer is—a communion between God and man. God speaks to us in revelation, and we speak to God in prayer. The Holy Spirit speaks to us in divine appeal, and our hearts respond in the same language. We commune with our companions during our waking hours. Take the Father into thy soul each day. Thou wilt find it as natural as it is for a child to talk with its parents.

Prayer.—Our Father, cause us to look up this morning and this week, and open wide our eyes, that we may see the great preparation Thou hast made for our living and comfort. Help us to look to Thee, commune with Thee and live forever. Amen.

TUESDAY.

BE TRULY THANKFUL AT YOUR TABLE.

"He that eateth, eateth unto the Lord, for he giveth God thanks."—Rom. 14:6.

"It is sanctified through the word and prayer." —1 Tim. 4:3-5.

Neglect not to give thanks at your table, but after you have done so, live the life, do not complain.

Complain about the food that is provided and the way it is cooked, and the good effect of asking a blessing before a meal is lost.

Thousands do not have the food they need, while others have plenty of food, but on account of certain disorders are unable to eat it, which is a far more serious condition.

You should be truly thankful and appreciative of what you have and the good wife who prepares your food; and if you have healthy, hearty children to eat it, and your own digestive apparatus is right and you do not have to "go on a diet," be doubly thankful.

If you do have digestive troubles, it is often your own fault, your own making, and you pay the penalty of breaking nature's laws.

Emphasize that thought when you feel surly at table and make the family suffer because you cannot eat, and nothing tastes good. Perhaps it is your own fault. (Copyright, 1924, International Feature Service, Inc.)

Prayer.—Our Father, make us truly thankful for what we receive from Thee, and whatever may seem lacking, help us to turn to and do what we can to fulfill our desires. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

A SURE TEST.

"We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren."—1 Jno. 3:14.

There are some things we may not know, but of some of the best things we may have certain knowledge. It is given unto us to know if we have passed from death unto life. There are those who can name the day and the hour when they passed from death unto life. There are others who cannot recall that time, but who may be just as sure that they are the children of God.

For instance, one man knows when he learned to read; another does not know. He knows something better; he knows that he now knows how to read. It is more important to be able to read than to know when we learned the alphabet.

The same is true spiritually. Hardened sinners may tell when they passed from death unto life, but little children may pass into the kingdom so young and so easily that they may not remember it. However, all should have the assurance that they have passed. Let no one despair, or 3—CHRISTIAN SUN— .. .. doubt, if he cannot recall the time. Try the test. Do you love? "Whosoever loveth is born of God."

Prayer.—Our Father, we thank Thee for Thy great love wherewith Thou hast loved us that we may become Thy children. Help us to love Thee and all those whom Thou dost love. In Jesus' name we ask it. Amen.—Rev. T. E. White, Windsor, Va.

THURSDAY.

THE GOD-BLEST MAN.

"Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor siteth in the seat of the scornful." —Psa. 1:1-6.

What a blessing to read this beautiful old psalm in its original language! I opened my Hebrew Bible and translated it, perhaps not correctly, but what a wealth of new wisdom it seemed to contain! For instance, I got a translation of the first verse like this: "Happy is the man who does not live by Godless purposes, who does not remain standing in his sins, who dwelleth not in the abode of mockers."

Not a new translation do we need, but a profounder realization of the hidden riches which lie like nuggets beneath the surface of every verse of the old Bible! Blessed beatitude! "Happy the soul with God's purpose enshrined, ever moving away from his evil and sin, ever abiding among those who, for God and man, have nothing but love!" Indeed, he shall be like a tree planted by rivers of water! And that kind of a man will be religious in the best meaning of the word, delighting in God's law, and in that law meditating day and night.—Rev. Vincent G. Burns.

Prayer.—That every member of the household may learn to love God's Word and to read it as a guide to daily living; also that we may win others to do likewise.

FRIDAY.

PROMISES TO OVERCOMERS.

"Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good."—Rom. 12:21.

"Shall not be hurt of the second death."—Rev. 2:11.

"I will give to eat of the hidden manna, and a white stone, and a new name."—Rev. 2:17.

"Shall be clothed in white raiment, and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life; but I will confess his name before my Father and before His angels."—Rev. 3:5.

"I will make him a pillar in the temple of my God; he shall go no more out, and I will write upon him my new name."—Rev. 5:12.

"I will grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father in His throne."—Rev. 5:21.

"He that overcometh shall inherit all things, and I will be his God and he shall be my Son." —Rev. 21:7.

Prayer.—Our Father, out of the depths of our soul we cry unto Thee, O Lord, help us to be overcomers. When the deceitful and desperately wicked things come upon us, help us to be steadfast. When we are so blinded that we cannot tell where right ends and sin begins, oh, Thou who canst see, purify our vision, sensitize our souls, fill us with light, and cause our every step to be in righteousness and truth. Glorify Jesus in us today. Amen.

SATURDAY.

BUILDING CHARACTER.

"A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth" (Luke 12:15), "but seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you" (Matt. 6:33). "Blessed are those servants whom the Lord, when He cometh, shall find watching."—Luke 12:37.

Character is a harvest of years, the result of amalgamated labors and trials, decisions and choices. A part of us is our body. To eat and drink is good for the body, but it is also necessary that we eat and drink in right proportions, or we shall suffer the consequences, probably sicken and die. It is likewise necessary for the soul to have its food for the development of its character according to its destiny, created in Jesus for good works.

Once I heard a jest. A fellow said, "When that fellow dies, you can inscribe on his tomb, 'Here lies music, for it never came out of him.'" There is a sense in which this is more than a jest, for thousands of souls live and die and never develop into the character they are capable of becoming. A violin is capable of wonderful music, but it needs tuning to harmony, and then the stroke of the master-hand. Every soul is capable of big things. It needs tuning and the stroke of the Heavenly Master's hand. By the reading of God's word, by prayer, and serving, grow into the perfect man.

Prayer.—Dear Father, accept our praise this day for the privilege Thou dost give us to share with Thee in building character, bringing heaven to the world. Each day help us to be still and know that Thou art God, and our only hope. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"THE SABBATH WAS MADE FOR MAN." —Mark 2:27.

The necessity of the Sabbath, in part, lies in the necessity of a certain time given everything for relaxation from the strain of work and for culture unto the end of its mission.

The spirit of man is tidal, and "the soul wins its victories as the sea wins hers." There are "spells" when we have tides of feelings, interest, energy, heightening of ambition, the glow of life around us, birthdays, return of friends, gatherings at special dinners, holidays, etc. All these result in rising tides of feeling and explain the common delight we have in observing them by ceasing from work and celebrating.

The Sabbath has the goal of the highest ambition, the greatest glow of life, the call of the greatest number of friends; it celebrates the soul's birthday, it is the greatest holiday. It is our spiritual jubilee. As a day of rest, it is necessary for the rehabilitation of body and soul. As a day of worship and soul culture, it satisfies the soul's demand for rejuvenation. Properly kept, it breeds into our lives sweet and tender feelings and intensifies and directs the powers and passion of the soul.

Prayer.—Our Father, teach us how our Sabbath returns each week to bring us the culture of heaven. Help us to be the true man and worship. In His name we ask it. Amen.

THIS PAGE IS FOR THE CHILDREN ONLY—BUT

LISTEN, LITTLE FOLKS!

This page is yours, from now on; but it has no name yet. Would you like to name it for me? Yes? Fine! But let's give every one an equal chance. Shall we? Who likes a contest? Then, that's what we will have; and we shall begin at once. Every child under the age of fourteen years is entitled to take part in the contest. We will give a year's subscription to THE CHRISTIAN SUN to the child who sends in the best name for our new page for the children.

Send your name and the name you wish the page to have to Miss Madge Moffitt, Ramseur, N. C.; also your age.

The contest will close July 1, 1924.

Do we all understand? Then, we are ready—go!

WHAT YOU WILL READ EACH WEEK ON YOUR PAGE IN "THE SUN."

A story; maybe two stories, if you wish.

A nature poem, and other poems that make little folks happy.

Any news items, too, from our own children's department will be published.

Any contributions from any one will be appreciated.

We want to make our page interesting, and we want each one to help. Then it will be our own children's page.

JOYFUL JUNE.

O jolly June, chock full of joys,
You seem just like us girls and boys!
I wonder if your school is out,
And you're so glad you want to shout.
I know you're glad, for I can see
You're full of happiness like me.
And sometimes, June, I'm just like you—
So glad I don't know what to do;
Sometimes I don't know what to say,
So then I dance and sing and play
That I am just a budding rose,
And then a little breeze that blows
Across a sleeping baby's lips
And stoops to kiss his finger-tips.
And when I've played I'm everything
I ask my mother if she'll sing,
For, oh! there's something in her tunes
That makes the whole year full of Junes!

MISTRESS MARY'S GARDEN.

Of course, you have heard of Mistress Mary Quite Contrary? But maybe you did not know that Mistress Mary herself lives up in the Northland, where Santa Claus lives.

I want to tell you a little story about this dear little girl. One day, just before Christmas, Mistress Mary was walking out in her garden, watching the little seeds and buds in the flowers, when all at once Santa Claus came out of the house with a pack of toys for his sleigh.

"Oh, Father Santa!" said the little girl; "take me to Earthland with you. I will help you give the dolls and toys to the children."

Santa Claus was surprised, because realy and truly none of his Fairyland children had ever asked to go with him before; but he remembered how lonesome he was last year, and how long the trip seemed, so, laying his finger beside his nose, he said: "Little Mary, you always were quite contrary; perhaps it will make you a better girl to help me make some one happy." Santa knew how it always made him feel to give all the toys away at Christmas. "But," said Santa, "you must give the children of Earthland something of your very own, because it will make you happier, and they will like it better if it is something that belongs to you."

Mistress Mary only had her flowers in her garden, and at this season of the year the beautiful flowers were just tiny seeds. But while she stood there thinking, an idea popped into her charming little head. Going into the house, she found a large sack, almost as large as the one Santa Claus carried in his big sleigh. Now what! Why, the dear little girl, now as happy as could be, went out into her garden and gathered— Flowers? Certainly not! She gathered seeds—little seeds that would begin to grow very soon and make beautiful flowers for happy little folks to enjoy.

That night, Santa Claus, with his sleigh full of toys and Mistress Mary beside him, started off on his long, long journey. As the eight tiny reindeer flew over hill and dale, over city and town, Mistress Mary, now no longer quite contrary, scattered the seeds from the big sack out over the fields and gardens.

That was her gift to the children of Earthland.

Today if you go out into your garden you will see, not the little seeds, but the blossoms grown, sending forth their message of love to all the people of the earth, making every one happy with their beauty and fragrance.

Mistress Mary's flowers are blooming.

WHEN BENNY WAS LOST.

Benny was lost and didn't know it, and that is the funny part of the story. Grandma thought he was lost; mamma was sure he was lost; Nora, the cook, was afraid he was lost, and Susie Yates, Mollie Duke, Tommie Davis, Billie French, Annie Brown, and a lot of other boys and girls who helped to look for him, all thought he was lost. And this is how it happened:

Benny's little baby sister was ill, and the doctor said she must be kept very, very quiet. Grandma said: "Benny, if you will play at the sand pile, so little sister can have her afternoon nap, when I call you to take your bath I will give you a penny, and you can go with Nora to the grocery and get some candy."

Benny loved his little sister, and made up his mind to be very quiet; so he took his tin pail and shovel and Pinky, his little shaggy dog, and went out to play at the sand pile.

He made a big sand man; then he made big mountains and dug tunnels underneath them; also he hollowed out rivers and lakes and made frog houses on his bare feet. He played a long, long time, until he was very warm and very tired and covered with sand from the top of his little white curly head to his little bare toes, and still grandma did not call him. Once or twice he actually nodded while he was listening for her to call.

He felt sure that grandma had forgotten him and couldn't wait for her another minute, so he picked up Pink and left the sand pile.

Pretty soon, grandma went to the back door and called softly: "Come, Benny, take your bath." But Benny didn't come, and then she went out to the sand pile and saw the tin pail and the shovel, but no little boy. She looked under the porch, in the woodshed, and behind the coal-bin, but could not find him. Then she went to the front door and asked Susie Yates, who was passing, if she had seen Benny on the Street. Susie had not seen Benny on the street. Susie had not seen him, but would go around the corner and look for him. On the way, she met Mollie Duke, and the two ran several blocks, and seeing Billie French and Tommie Davis on bicycles, sent them off in another direction as fast as their wheels could carry them to help in the hunt. Soon others came along and joined the searching party, and in less time than it takes to write about it, boys and girls were running here and there, around corners, into stores and shops, asking breathlessly: "Have you seen little Benny Gray? He is lost, and we can't find him anywhere?"

Mamma and Nora had looked through the rooms. Nora was wringing her hands, and mamma was crying, for she just knew somebody had kidnaped her little boy. Just then baby sister awoke and began to cry, and grandma hurried to the cabinet for the medicine which the doctor had left, and just as she pushed open the bathroom door there lay a very sandy little boy, hugging in his arms a very sandy little dog, fast asleep.

The little dog may have been a sleep too, but his shiny black eyes were wide open, for Pinky was not a "sure-enough," but just a stuffed dog.

"Grandma," cried Benny when he opened his eyes; "I waited and waited for you to call me, and you didn't, so I crept up the back stairs as soft as a little mouse and waited for you right by the bathtub. Are you ready to give me my bath and my penny?"

And grandma hugged him tight and said she would give him two pennies—Mrs. W. Thorburn Clark, in Child's Gem.

CHILDREN'S DAY NOTICE.

The Board of Religious Education has recently sent copies of two different kinds of programs for "Children's Day" services, and leaflets with songs, to each Sunday School in the Southern Christian Convention. If you have not received yours, please write us, and we shall be glad to send you other copies, or if you have received them and need other copies. Since the Southern Christian Convention voted that the "Children's Day" offerings should go toward the support of the work of the Board of Religious Education, many of our Sunday Schools have responded, and it is hoped that many more will respond this year.

The board is constantly trying to serve the people throughout the Convention through the Sunday Schools, Christian Endeavor Societies, institutes, the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions, the daily vacation Bible schools and the summer schools at Elon and Bethlehem. Will you help us as we attempt to serve you?

PATTIE COGHILL.

USE OF MITE-BOXES.

Are you using the mite-boxes in your woman's, young people's, cradle roll, or willing workers' Society? They enable one to save the pennies, nickels, and dimes for kingdom use. The mite-boxes should be presented to each member of the society once each year (oftener if thought wise), and at the end of that time a "mite-box opening" service should be held either in a regular society meeting or in Sunday School or a Church service.

Mite-box opening programs may be purchased, which give songs, recitations and other items appropriate for such an occasion. Mite-boxes are furnished free of charge to any woman's, young people's, cradle roll or willing workers' society in the Southern Convention who will write and ask for them.

Subject: "Reforms Under Ezra and Nehemiah."

Golden Text: "Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith Jehovah of Hosts."—Mal. 3:7.

Lesson: Ezra, chs. 7-10; Neh., chs. 5, 8, 13.

Devotional Reading: Hosea 14:1-8.

The Fourth of July will soon be upon us. In many sections it will be a day of flag-waving, parades, spread-eagle oratory, and enthusiasm. And much of this will pass for patriotism. It is well, however, to remind ourselves that patriotism is made of sterner stuff. And high-sounding words and hot enthusiasm can never be acceptable substitutes for patriotism. Patriotism is something so fine and so deep that many people do not know what it really is.

It seems especially fitting to me that, on the eve of the Fourth of July, we are to study about two men who were patriots in a fine sense; two men who embodied patriotism in their lives to a high degree. I refer to Ezra and Nehemiah.

Ezra was a man of deep piety who had an intense desire to return to his own land and to teach his people the law of God. He counted no price too dear to pay for that privilege. Accordingly, he gathered together a company of his fellow-countrymen who shared something of his spirit of patriotism and made the long, dangerous trip back to Jerusalem. He had both a supreme love for his country and a firm faith in God. For on the one hand he was willing to sacrifice all that he had for his country, and on the other hand he was willing to trust wholly in the Lord his God to bring him safely to that country. He who would embody in his life the noble virtue of courage will do well to read the story of this man of courage.

And he was just as courageous when it came to a matter of reform. He loved his country so well that he was willing to denounce his countrymen for the evils that they were doing. He knew that the Jews could never fulfill their mission if they polluted their blood by intermarriage or compromised their religion with heathen elements. He, therefore, denounced foreign marriages on the one hand, and insisted upon devotion to the law on the other hand. He not only ocercome evil, but he overcome evil with good, by far the better way. Ezra had much to do with making Israel the "people of the Book."

Nehemiah was one of the world's great patriots. He had a position of rank and affluence at the court of the king, and he was wealthy in his own right. But he heard of the sad estate of his brethren in the land of his fathers and with the spirit of true patriotism he was moved to give his all in their behalf. He, too, received a decree from the king and made the long journey back to his native land. Once there, he showed the stuff that manhood is made of. He rallied the scattered and discouraged Jews and summoned them to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem. He inspired them by his own example. He thwarted his enemies in their secret plots and repulsed them in their open attacks. He dealt just as sternly with his enemies from within. In spite of the fact that he had been appointed Governor, he bore his own expenses, and also gave liberally of his means to the work to which he had already given his heart. So carefully was the work planned, and so inspiring was his leadership, that the walls were completed within the short time of fifty-two days. When we think of the modern "captains of industry," we will do well to keep in mind Nehemiah. He had a genius for organization and for inspiring leadership that compares favorably with our modern "big men."

But Nehemiah was more than a man with a genius for practical things. He was deeply spiritual. He saw that the hope of his city and his country was not in walls, but in godliness. He saw, too, the forces that were threatening the moral foundations of his people. He accordingly "cleaned house" at the temple, forbade intermarriage, reinstituted the Levites, and arranged for the temple worship, and instituted Sabbath Day reforms.

Here, then, were two men who were patriots in the highest sense. They loved their country dearly, but they loved God more. They were willing to make any sacrifice for their country, but they were never willing to sacrifice their loyalty to God. They were not called upon to die for their country. They would have done it, to be sure—but they did the harder thing. They lived for their country. Let us not forget these men when we call the roll of the world's great patriots.

Teaching Points.

1. He who is a good citizen of the kingdom is a better citizen of his country.

2. Living for one's country is just as much a test of one's patriotism as dying for it.

3. That nation whose people read the Word of God is laying a foundation for real greatness and abiding service.

4. People will listen to the Word of God when it is read right.

5. One of the best ways to forget one's own troubles is to share the troubles of others.

6. No nation can long endure which forgets the Sabbath Day to keep it holy.

7. He who would read the Bible intelligently should get all the "helps" he can.

8. The Bible should always be approached with the spirit of reverence.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

June 22, 1924.

Topic: "Discovering the Christian Endeavor Pledge."

Lesson: Nehemiah 8:1-3, 5, 6, 8.

Daily Readings: Trust—Isa. 26:1-4. Promise—Gen. 28:16-22. Strive—2 Tim. 2:1-7. Whatsoever—Col. 3:17, 23-25. Read—Psa. 1:1-6. Pray—Eph. 6:18-20.

It has been said "to have loved and lost is better than never to have loved at all," and although there is something to be said on the other side, it seems that this is true. To have known love—either to have loved some one else, or to have been loved by some one else—is a great human exprience, and even if one has lost in one way or another his loved one, he is richer because of that experience.

The same thing is true in regard to the Christian Endeavor pledge. It is better to have made the pledge and broken it than never to have made it at all. For after all, it is "not failure, but low aim, that is crime," and he who has assumed the pledge of the Christian Endeavor Society, especially if he did it in all sincerity, is better off, even if he has broken his pledge, than if he had never assumed the pledge at all. And if this is true where one has broken the pledge, it is all the more true where one has made the pledge and kept it, or at least constantly tried to keep it.

Christian Endeavorers should not refuse to sign the pledge because they fear they cannot keep it. If it were something so easy that it could be kept without effort, it would not be worth the signing. On the other hand, they should sign it, not simply because it is difficult to keep, but because it enjoins upon them the things that will help them to become faithful and fruitful Christians. The pledge is designed for just that purpose. The Christian Endeavorers who composed the original committee felt that the things that were embodied in the pledge were just the things that were most needed by young Christians to help them to grow in their Christian life.

And, of course, the heart of the matter is that the Christian Endeavorer does not assume the obligations of the pledge in his own strength. He puts himself on record to the effect that he will "strive to do whatever He would like to have me do, by trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength. That is the glory of the Christian religion—that it helps us to do the thing we ought to do. And it ought to be the ideal of every Christian Endeavorer to be the best possible Christian. We cannot afford to be half-hearted in anything that we do when Christ is concerned.

Just one thing more. One will gradually discover the pledge. A person might sign the pledge and even keep it for some time before its deeper meaning dawns upon him. It is so simple that any boy or girl who is old enough to read or write can understand enough of it to assume it, and yet it is so deep that we must grow into its deeper meaning. We discover it, so to speak.

Suggestions and Questions.

1. Have the individual members of the society tell which part of the pledge is hardest for them to keep.

2. Have several members of the society make a brief talk on the suggested daily readings given above.

3. Have some one tell why he thinks the pledge is a vital factor in the Christian Endeavor work.

4. What part of the pledge is the most vital?

5. How far shall our "striving" go?

6. Why does it help to sign the pledge?

7. What difference would it make in our Christian Endeavor prayer meeting if every one tried to keep the pledge?

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

We still lack $525.00 being to our Easter offering goal. Quite a number of our Churches have not responded to the Easter call yet. I want to insist that all who have not sent in the offering do so at once, as we want to close the campaign in this month. I have too much faith in you to believe you will let me fail to reach this goal—just $525.00.

The weather has cleared up, and our farm work is moving very nicely. It has rained so continuously that the ground has kept too wet to work, so we are very late in getting our corn and beans planted. If we can have ten days of fair weather we can get lots of work done. Our garden is looking fine, and we have had garden peas in abundance. Our cabbage, lettuce and mustard have also been fine. We try to raise all the vegetables we use during the summer, and can lots for the winter. Tomato and potato plants have been scarce this spring on account of the continued cold weather. We are planting our first potato plants this week. We have tried to buy plants, but have failed so far to find any for sale.

We have the best herd of cows we have ever had. At this writing we are able to give the children all the milk they can drink and also have much nice butter. If nothing happens in two more years, the Orphanage will have the nicest herd of dairy cattle, Holstein and Jersey, in this section. Our dairy is a big asset now to the Orphanage. We have two splendid boys at the head of this department—Frank Collier and Joe Jones—and with the other little boys who help them, they are getting splendid results. They take much interest in their work, and feel proud of the success they are making. Wilson Collier and Clarence Fields are the managers of our hogs, and take a great deal of interest in the hogs. They are planning to raise 4,500 pounds of meat this year, and the prospects look good for them to reach their goal. Clarence McKinney is having splendid success in raising chickens this season. When the board of trustees met in their annual meeting on May 27th, Clarence furnished the table with fried chicken of our own raising this spring. White Leghorns are his choice chickens, and he has about 400 in his lot. We are expecting to raise 200 hens for layers this winter, and give the children more eggs to eat, a food they enjoy very much.

Our Orphanage work, with its 105 children, is moving on very nicely, and the children are happy and contented. We lack one thing yet to make our happiness complete—push us up to our Easter offering goal!

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

"A LAYMAN'S CONVICTIONS."

I believe that the Churches should be the most outstanding buildings in every town and city. They should be the most costly and the most beautiful structures of all the buildings in the community. They should be the most adequately furnished and equipped. It does not speak well of any town for it to have finer residences than it has Churches. No true Christian will want to have a finer home of their own to live in than the house of God they worship in. If they like fine homes, they should also like finer Churches. We ought to have beautiful homes; but we ought to have Churches even more beautiful.

The Churches should be equipped to serve all ages. To meet the needs of the growing boys and girls is of far more importance than merely to satisfy the whims of grown men and women.

The average Church of today has at least a hundred men or women—the heads of families as members. It is a reflection on a congregation for them to be satisfied with less for the Church than they have in their own homes. God cannot look with favor upon any Christian that does not have true pride in his Church. What does God think of professing Christians who build elaborate homes for themselves and refuse to have a worthy part in building elaborate Churches that will be an honor to God?

I believe in fine homes, fine schools, fine business buildings, fine government buildings; but I believe the Churches should be the finest of them all. The Churches of the living Christ should be the principal buildings in our Capitol City of Washington. In our own Dover, the capitol city of our beloved Delaware, the Church buildings should be the first to attract the attention of every visitor. Why should it not be so when all things belong to God? All the materials are His. All the builders are His. And we are His.

I believe the Church should come first in everything. It stands for the things of first importance, and should be given first place in our lives and in all our planning. I do not believe we should ever allow our business to interfere with our Church obligations. All our engagements should be made so as not to interfere with the Church services. Sunday invitations should not keep us from attending worship. Company should not keep us away from Church. Worship first and social pleasures second makes the pleasures the more enjoyable.

I believe that every Church member should be a tither, because God plainly teaches in His Word that we should honor Him with a tenth of our income. I believe any man will prosper more by tithing. God asks very little from us in response to all He gives to us. All He asks is one-tenth of our income, and one-tenth of our time in His service. I believe in a religion that touches the heart. But I believe infinitely more in a religion that not only reaches the heart, but which also reaches our pocketbooks. A religion that does not touch the pocketbook is not worth having.

I believe in spending less money for battleships with which to kill men, and in spending more money for building Churches in which to save men. I believe every Church should have everything it needs, and that every Church should do everything it can for its town. I believe that every Church should be interested in and do everything it can for missions. I believe in a religion that is expressed in service.

These are some of the convictions of an humble layman. A LAYMAN.

RICHMOND NOTES.

The First Christian Church of Richmond is organizing and working out its plans for a permanent and progressive program. The following auxiliary organizations are aiding materially in the work: Sunday School, Christian Endeavor, Ladies' Aid, Woman's Missionary Society, Young People's Missionary Society, and the Wellon's Brotherhood Bible Class.

The Ladies' Aid meets monthly for business, with a social hour and refreshments. This organization is paying for the Church furniture. The Young People's Missionary Society holds a similar monthly meeting for the young, in which the discussion of a mission topic is included in the program. This organization also puts on a monthly literary and musical program in the Sunday School room. These are made community evenings. This organization is paying for the piano for the Sunday School room.

The Wellons Brotherhood Bible Class meets monthly in the Sunday School room of the Church. All men in the Church are invited to attend these meetings. The class carries on an active campaign to enlist men in the Sunday School.

The Woman's Missionary Society are interested in their monthly study, as outlined in the mission study book. The Sunday School is giving its offerings. The First Sunday in each month to the Christian Orphanage; the second Sunday to Sunday School expenses; the third and fifth Sundays to missions, to support a student in a Japanese seminary. The Sunday School offering for the fourth Sunday is a contribution to our building fund. Our offerings average approximately $35.00 per month.

We are not making any effort to secure a mushroom, but are striving to lay the foundation for a permanent development. We have recently purchased over one hundred books with which to start our Sunday School library, which will be opened next Sunday.

All members of the Christian Church are invited to worship with us any time they are in Richmond. W. T. WALTERS.

A NEW 50-CENT PIECE.

A new coin, a 50-cent piece, is now ready for distribution. It was struck by the United States Mint in Philadelphia in commemoration of the Huguenot-Walloon Tercentenary. The obverse bears the profiles of Admiral Coligny and William the Silent, two leaders of the Huguenot cause; the reverse pictures the ship "Niew Nederland," in which the Walloon colonists came to America.

The first of the coins was presented to President Coolidge in the presence of a distinguished group, including Ambassador Jusserand, of France; Ambassador de Graeff, of Holland, and Ambassador de Cartier, of Belgium. In acknowledging the gift, President Coolidge declared that the observance of historical anniversaries preserved the spirit of the spiritual pioneers who gave its first character to the spirit of America. He paid special tribute to the settlers from Belgium, France and the Netherlands because of their willingness to suffer for freedom of conscience.

HOUSE PASSES NAVY BILL.

The House, by a vote of 166 to 138, has passed the Butler navy bill, which provides for the expenditure of about $150,000,000 for the construction of eight modern scout cruisers, and six river gunboats and the modernization of six battleships. Experts have asserted such a program was necessary to bring the navy up to the strength authorized in the Washington Conference agreements.

JAPAN PROTESTS EXCLUSION ACT.

The Japanese government has sent a formal note of protest against the Japanese exclusion clause of the new immigration bill, which President Coolidge signed, though he expressed strong disapproval of the exclusion feature. The note declared the exclusion clause was in entire disregard of the spirit and circumstances of the treaty of 1911.

We were reminded by an automobilist that the "right of way" was the chief concern in motoring. Most accidents occur because men will not respect it. It is equally true that most of the trouble in the Church and between Churches results from a refusal to obey the ethics of the "right of way."

An Italian who kept a fruitstand was much annoyed by possible customers who made a practice of handling the fruit and pinching it, thereby leaving it softened and often spoiled. Exasperated beyond endurance, he finally put up a sign which read: "If you must pincha da fruit, pincha da cocoanut!"—"Crow's Nest."

The ancients made much of the beauty of "dying for one's country," and the grim reaper mowed down the noblest spirits of the times. The toll of war has been the fruitful cause of the decay of nations.

The man who does not know his own deficiencies will sometimes find himself in positions that are embarrassing. Sometimes he realizes it and sometimes he don't.

Newer Form of Iron

Gives Strength and Energy to The Weak and Aged

The remarkable discovery of a newer form of iron has proved a blessing to thousands who were feeling the weakening effects of advancing years. To be strong, vigorous and active you must have plenty of good rich red blood of the kind that this newer form of iron helps make. It is like the iron in your blood and like the iron in spinach, lentils and apples. If you want something to quickly help make rich red blood, revitalize worn-out, exhausted nerves and give you new strength and energy, your own druggist will furnish you with a bottle of this newer form of iron, sold under the name of Nuxated Iron, and he will guarantee that if you do not feel stronger and years younger in two weeks time your money will be promptly refunded. For sale by all druggists.

To Make Rich Red Blood

Revitalize your worn-out exhausted nerves and increase your strength and endurance

take Organic Iron; not metallic iron which people usually take, but pure organic iron—Nuxated Iron—which is like the iron in your blood and like the iron in spinach, lentils and apples. One dose of Nuxated Iron is estimated to be approximately equivalent (in organic iron content) to eating one-half quart of spinach, one quart of green vegetables or half a dozen apples. It is like taking extract of beef instead of eating pounds of meat. Nuxated iron is partially predigested and ready for almost immediate absorption and assimilation by the blood, while metallic iron is iron just as it comes from the action of strong acids on small pieces of iron filings

Over 4,000,000 people annually are using Nuxated Iron. It will not injure the teeth nor disturb the stomach. A few doses will often commence to enrich your blood. Your money will be refunded by the manufacturers if you do not obtain satisfactory results.

Beware of substitutes. Always insist on having genuine organic iron—Nuxated Iron. Look for the letters N. I. on every tablet. Sold by all druggists.

Why Drugs Fail

Many chronic diseases fail to respond to drug treatment, even in the hands of the best physicians, whereas acute diseases usually respond readily. When a disease has become chronic, drugs often seem to do as much harm as they do good, for the system rebels against them. It is just this class of cases which derive the greatest benefit from drinking Shivar, America's best stomach, liver and kidney Water. If you suffer with chronic dyspepsia, indigestion, sick headache, rheumatism, kidney or liver disease, uric poisoning or other curable conditions due to impure blood, do not hesitate to accept the Spring's liberal offer as printed below. Their records show that only two in a hundred, on the average, have reported "no benefit." This is a wonderful record from a truly wonderful Spring. Sign the following letter:

Shivar Springs,
Box 16-H, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if I report no benefit you agree to refund the price of the water in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return within a month.

RAILWAY MOTOR CARS.

Gasoline motor-car trains have been placed in service on the Blue Ridge Railway between Belton, Anderson, Seneca and Walhalla, S. C., taking the place of passenger trains propelled by steam locomotives. The train consists of a gasoline motor car with compartments for mail, express and baggage and seats for twelve passengers, and a trailer which has seats for thirty-eight passengers. The equipment for this service was purchased from the Edwards Railway Motor Car Company, of Sanford, N. C., and is believed to be adapted ideally to short-line runs with numerous stops, due to the ease with which train can be stopped and the rapidity with which it can get away from stations. After a careful study, the management of the Blue Ridge is convinced that these trains will be adequate to handle the volume of passengers, mail, express, and baggage moving over its line and that the public will be pleased with the service. There will be no change in schedules, the motor trains simply taking the place of the steam trains now in passenger service.

GERMAN MINISTRY IN DOUBT.

Germany, too, is experiencing difficulty in the organization of a new government following the convening of Reichstag recently elected, for with the multiplicity of parties and factions, no cohesive group of parties possessed a majority. Chancellor Marx, who was commissioned to attempt the formation of a new Cabinet, at first sought a coalition with the Nationalist group, but the price they demanded for their support was more than the Centre parties would concede, so negotiations were dropped. Dr. Marx then turned to the Socialists for the necessary votes.

FORD OFFER REJECTED.

Government ownership and operation of Muscle Shoals were endorsed by the Senate Agriculture Committee, by a vote of 11 to 4, after it had rejected Henry Ford's offer. The committee adopted the Norris government ownership bill as an amendment to the McKenzie bill, authorizing acceptance of the Ford bid, which the House had passed. Supporters of the Ford proposal planned to make a hard fight on the floor for its adoption.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By Rev. S. M. Lynam.

Mormons Invade Washington.—

The latest Church to join the widespread movement to erect great shrines at the national capital is the Mormons. They will build a great edifice at the corner of Sixteenth Street and Columbia Road, the temple will be a mile from the White House, and in the foreign legation quarter.

A College of Bible.—

The Disciples Church is to open a new college of the Bible, in connection with Butler College, Indianapolis, Ind., next September. Dr. Frederick D. Kershner will be president of the new college. The world is coming to see that one of its great needs is a wider and a deeper knowledge of the Word of God, and such new institutions are being founded in response to a popular demand for them.

A Victory for the Drys.—

The dry forces won a signal victory when President Coolidge attached his signature to the bill making lawful the liquor seizure and search out to the twelve-mile limit, as established by a treaty with Great Britain. The new law will make rum-running a much more difficult task. If all the nations would unite for law enforcement prohibition would be very effective, and the bootleggers would travel a rough road.

Coast-to-Coast Air Mail Service.—

Postmaster-General New has announced that, beginning July 1st, daily air mail service will be maintained between New York and San Francisco. Letters mailed in New York will be delivered in San Francisco thirty-five hours later. It is believed that in a few months the transit time will be decreased to twenty-four hours. Train service at the present time requires about eighty-seven hours. Letters sent by this route will have to bear special air-mail stamps, which will be distributed among the principal post-offices of the country. These stamps will be in denominations of 8, 16 and 24 cents.

Now Christians Should Act.—

The fish bill, appropriating ten million dollars for the purchase of food in this country for the starving people of Germany, has passed the House by a vote of 249 to 97. The same bill, which is known in the Senate as the Howell bill, is being held up by the foreign relations committee. Now Christian people should act to create a sentiment so strong that the committee should be forced to report the bill, and the Senate be forced to pass it. They were not idle words of Jesus when He commanded us to feed our enemies, and we should obey. Germany needs our help, and we should not withhold it. It is the Jesus way to minister to those who need, no matter who they be.

Methodists Lift Ban.—

In the quadrennial meeting of the Methodist Church at Springfield, Mass., the ban on amusements was lifted. The Church felt that morality was a matter of the individual conscience, and not a matter for rules and regulations. In lifting the ban, the Church appealed to the individual consciences of its constituency. There are those who feel that the Church has taken an unwise step, but the larger number are willing to desert the past and seek to adjust the Church to modern conditions. The Church will now undertake an educational camapign to educate the conscience of the Church. This sort of a campaign is needed so much everywhere. The whole world needs an educated, enlightened and Christian conscience.

When Women Think.—

On the campus of Vassar College, June 14th to 29th, the women of the country will hold a conference on world relationships in the light of Christian thinking. Membership in the conference will be by invitation. It will be the purpose of this conference to discover the responsibility of women in correcting the existing evils in present world relationships. Women are the world's mothers, and they do not again propose to have their children snatched from their arms to be offered up in blood and fire and for nothing. They have found the right way, too; they have turned to the Man of Galillee for leadership in this great effort for world peace and better racial understanding at home and abroad. When women think, they act; and acting, they achieve mightily for God.

Three Great Gifts.—

The world has recently witnessed three great gifts. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., gave more than a million dollars to Union Theological Seminary, New York, some days ago, and another million for the restoration of the Rheimes Cathedral and palaces at Versailles and Fontainbleu. A part of the sum given to Union Theological Seminary will go into the erection of a home for returned missionaries on furlough, so that they can attend the lectures in the seminary. It is a great experience to those men who for seven years have busied themselvs teaching and preaching to sit at the feet of the world's great thinkers.

Another gift was made by George F. Baker to the Harvard School of Business Administration. These are great gifts, and will make the world a happier world. If those who have money could only learn to use it for a high purpose like this, this would be a glad world.

Immigration Bill Signed.—

President Coolidge has signed the new immigration bill with the Japanese exclusion amendment. He regretted that he could not cut out the amendment, and said so in his report to Congress with the bill. The Japanese exclusion amendment is one of the most unfortunate things which Congress has done. It might have been necessary, but it is, nevertheless, unfortunate. The Japanese government seems unable to understand it, and there is a deep resentment all through the island empire. Ten thousand ex-service men held a demonstration and pledged their support to their country in whatever retaliatory measures the Japanese government might see fit to take. Reservists all over Japan are holding similar demonstrations. There is a feeling among missionaries that the exclusion clause has dealt a severe blow to Christian work in Japan. The whole people are repeating the troubled inquiry of Ambassador Hannihara, "It might have been all right to dissemble your love, but why did you kick me downstairs?" The immigration bill may have more far-reaching effects than we can now know. At best it defers our hope of peace and opens old sores with Japan. It is unfortunate.

The Navy Bill Passes.—

Congress has passed the Butler navy bill, which provides for eight cruisers to cost $11,100,000 each, exclusive of armaments; six river gunboats for use in China, costing $700,000 each, and the bill also appropriated $18,360,000 to recondition six battleships and to turn them into oil-burners. The total appropriations of the Butler bill will probably amount to about $150,000,000. The one hopeful thing about the bill is that it provides that the President of the United States may use any part or all of it, according to his discretion, and the decision of an arms conference, should one be called. The navy of the United States ranks third, England being first and Japan second, according to experts, and the Butler bill was passed to restore the American navy to its former place in the five-five-three agreement.

One hundred and fifty million dollars to be spent on armaments in one department only; all in preparation for the destruction of life. Suppose as much were spent to give life to the babies in the Near East, and to the spreading of the gospel of peace in the world! It would yield far greater results. The creation of war machinery will never bring peace, only the teachings of Jesus lived and taught can do that. It takes money, and a nation which can spend millions for armaments can spend money for peace and the Christian people of the country should see to it that money is spent for peace.

NOTES-PERSONALS

The Sunday School excursion and picnic of the First Christian Church was to Buckroe Beach yesterday, June 18th.

At the First Christian Church, of Richmond, Va., a special Children's Day service was held Sunday, and the offering taken is to go to the work of religious education.

The executive secretary, Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, is again calling Sunday School and Christian Endeavor workers' attention to the Eastern Virginia Convention. Read the article and get ready accordingly.

The comments on the Sunday School Lessons are not printed in THE SUN, as a matter of course. Read the lesson as given in this issue and you will find that it embraces three months' work compressed into a wonderful study.

The great World Sunday School Convention is now in session at Glasgow, Scotland, June 18-26. It will probably have in attendance more than four thousand delegates and visitors from all parts of the world. The Christian Church has representations.

The first editorial that was printed in THE CHRISTIAN SUN appeared February 17, 1844. The writer of the editorial, Daniel Wilson Kerr, was born in Cumberland County, Va., July 10, 1796. Would you like to honor his memory by sending one or more new subscribers?

Rev. Jesse Dollar, pastor, has just closed a very successful and inspiring revival at his Ramseur, N. C., Church. Rev. J. Lee Johnson was with the pastor from Tuesday through Sunday of the meeting, and is reported to have preached very ably and acceptably to the great audiences that flocked to hear him.

Dr. J. U. Newman, beloved professor in Elon College for many years, underwent a rather serious operation at Rainey Hospital, Burlington, N. C., last week, but we are happy to say has thus far stood the ordeal well, and seems to be coming back to his strength successfully and rapidly. His surgeon reports him rapidly recovering.

Sunday, June 8th, was Memorial Day at Shallow Ford Church, Alamance County, N. C. Rev. T. J. Green is the faithful and beloved pastor and is doing good work at this promising and wide-awake Church. There is a Sunday School of nearly two hundred members, and they make an offering once a month to missions and once a month to the Orphanage, and then have money in the treasury. The Church is loyal and active in good works and has a growing membership and congregation. They keep their cemetery in almost perfect condition. It is a joy to worship with our Shallow Ford's faithful in the Lord.

It would be difficult to find a busier man amongst us than Dr. W. W. Staley, pastor-emeritus First Christian Church, Suffolk, Va. Besides visiting in his own beloved congregation, he is pastor-at-large for all the Churches that need supply and help in emergency. Holy Neck is without a pastor, and Dr. Staley finds himself there at the 11 o'clock hour these Sundays. Rev. B. F. Black is unable to fill his engagements, and Dr. Staley finds himself in Bro. Black's pulpit at the appointed hour. He is on various and sundry committees for the Convention, and is kept quite busy attending to the duties thus entailed. Instead of Dr. Staley retiring, he seems to have renewed his activities in behalf of the Church which he has served through the years with such singular efficiency and devotion.

Rev. W. C. Wicker, D. D., delivered the Memorial Day address at Frieden's Lutheran Church, Guilford County, N. C., Sunday, June 1st. This marked the 153d anniversary of the organization or this congregation. The Gibsonville Post says of Dr. Wicker's address:

"Following the opening service, an address of great eloquence was delivered by Dr. Walton C. Wicker, formerly professor in Elon College, now general lecturer for the Masonic fraternity of North Carolina. Dr. Wicker based his address upon Matt. 26:6-12, and traced the history of religions and historic memorials down through the centuries with impressive effect. With apt illustrations, he drew upon the story of man's attempts to commemorate in stone, in story, and in song, the illustrious deeds of the race. He used with much effect the story of the Bible woman who broke the alabaster box of ointment at the Saviour's feet that was to 'be told through all generations as a memorial of the tender service.' It was an address worthy of the hour and the immense audience that listened to it."

THE POWER OF JESUS' NAME.

We often sing the hymn "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name!" and perhaps none is sung with more enthusiasm; yet have we ever quietly considered the power of Jesus over the masses of humanity? It is quite common for the classes to sneer at the masses, the crowd, the mob, the proletariat. Even Christian people have been guilty of this. Old Sir Thomas Browne, the famous author of "Religo Medici" ("The Religion of a Physician"), found it in his heart to contemn and laugh at "the multitude." But Jesus loved them, and they heard Him gladly. The disciples proclaimed Jesus in Samaria, in Ephesus, in Athens, and crowds flocked to hear.

It has been so ever since. It was not merely their eloquence which drew multitudes to listen to Savonarola, Knox, Whitefield, Finney, Moody and Gypsy Smith. These never would have drawn crowds permanently by their personality. Some people claim that Church attendance is waning. Be that as it may, it is an amazing thing, a real miracle, that millions of intelligent people go to Church and listen to sermons every Sunday. They would not if it were not for the name of Jesus. No discussion of politics, or business, or even morality, would hold them. If any project is going to be a success with the multitude, you must, in some way, put Christ into it. If the Church itself has failed it is because it has failed to exalt the name of Jesus. Young people's organizations, lodges, labor unions, societies of all kinds, the League of Nations, will succeed only as they are built upon the name of Jesus.

Many a happening accounted an evil and a misfortune change to blessing under God's merciful providence, but no overruling of results changes the sin of motive. He who plans evil is guilty of the evil he plans.—Selected.

We see people who apparently have everything to make them happy, and yet who are unable to shape happiness out of anything they have. An overabundance of material borders on poverty.—Selected.

POUNDED.

When members of the Ladies' Aid Society of Antioch Church came to the parsonage at Linville on Wednesday afternoon, June 4th, to hold their regular monthly meeting, they did far more than hold their business sessions. They brought to their pastor one of the biggest poundings he has ever received. Their automobiles were loaded to capacity with valuable things for parsonage pantry. Among these were such things as hams, flour, sugar, coffee, lard, cakes, candy, canned fruits, rice, beef, beans, potatoes and several other good things. For all these and the fine spirit manifested, the pastor and his family are profoundly thankful. Our feeling of gratitude cannot be expressed in words.

R. P. CRUMPLER.

A JOURNEY IN THE BIBLE HALL OF FAME.

"I entered at the portico of Genesis and walked down through the Old Testament art gallery, where the portraits of Adam, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, Moses, Joshua, Samuel, David, and Daniel, and many other of its worthies were hanging on the walls. I stepped into the music room of Psalms, where the Spirit swept the keyboard and brought forth the dirge-like wail of the weeping prophet Jeremiah, up to the grand, impassioned strains of Isaiah, until it seemed that every reed and pipe of God's great organ of nature responded to the tuneful harp of David, the sweet singer of Israel.

"I entered the business office of Proverbs, and from there into the chapel of Ecclesiastes, where the voice of the preacher was hard, saying: 'Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter; love God and keep His Commandments, for this is the whole duty of men, for God will bring every work unto judgment with every evil thing whether it be good or whether it be evil.' Then I entered the conservatory of Sharon, where the lily of the valley's sweet-smelling spices filled and perfumed my life.

"Then I entered the observatory of the prophets, where I saw telescopes of various sizes; some pointing to far-off events, but all concentrated on the bright and morning star that was to rise over the moonlit hills of Judea for our salvation.

"'Next I entered the audience room of the King of kings, where I caught a vision of His glory from the standpoint of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John; then in the Acts of the Apostles, where the Holy Spirit was doing His office work in the formation of the infant Church. Next I entered the correspondence room, where Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, Paul, Peter, James, and Jude sat penning their Epistles, not only to the infant Church, but to the Church of all the ages down to the latest period of time.

"Finally I entered the throne room of Revelation, where all towered into glittering peaks, and I got a vision of the King sitting on His throne in all His glory; and I cried, 'All hail the power of Jesus' Name!'

"After the above experience, I am persuaded that the Bible is just what it claims to be. (Read 2 Tom. 3, 16, 17, and 2 Peter, 19-21. Then read the 119th Psalm several times until you are thoroughly familiar with it; or, better still,, commit it to memory, at least the first sixteen verses.)

"This Book contains the mind of God, the state of man, the way of salvation, the doom of sinners, the happiness of believers. Its doctrines are holy, its precepts are binding, its histories are true, and its decisions are immutable. Read it to be wise; believe it to be safe, and practice it to be holy!"—Halsey Lathrope.

BROADCASTING.

We cannot better introduce this little chat than by referring the gentle reader to Isaiah, chapter 55, verse 11, which reads in part as follows: "My word that goes forth out of my mouth shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereunto I (broadcasted) sent it."

The Lord is broadcasting. Let all the earth keep silence before Him. Speak, Lord, for Thy servant heareth. But first of all, that there be no interference, no confusion, no misinterpretation—

"Open my ears, that I may hear
Voices of truth Thou sendest clear;
And while the wave-notes fall on my ear,
Everything false will disappear."

There are many messages being broadcasted by voices harsh and soft, distinct and subdued, slow and rapid, loud and gentle.

Listening eagerly to catch the message of these voices may be preachers, porters and policemen, invalids on hospital beds, shut-ins on Morris chairs, farmers and fishermen, lumberman and lighthouse man, soldiers and servants, a great multitude which no man can number. All intent on the one absorbing thing.

The marvel and the mystery and the wonder of yesterday has become the commonplace of today. Every invention is but a further revelation of God. Humanly speaking, when God lifts the veil and reveals some new wonder, we straightway speak of it as another of the great triumphs that modern science has attained. When the fact of the matter is, the little moment hand on God's great dial of events has simply moved forward to a new mark.

God's radio is always broadcasting to man. The first "sending" and "receiving" apparatus was made when God constructed the human voice and the human ear. While the first official "tryout" is recorded in Gen. 3:9-10.

The radio message does not usually return void. It generally prospers in the thing whereunto it is broadcasted. Thousands receive benefit from the daily programs which are so varied as to appeal to every taste and temperament. I suppose the aged and infirm, the invalids and shut-ins are among the most appreciative in the radio audience.

Then there is another class of people to whom the radio program is a real boon. They are the folks at sea. Especially the crews on smaller seagoing craft, who are deprived, for the most part, of enjoying entertainment ashore. To these it is a welcome innovation. Nor are its superlative merits confined exclusively to entertainment. It reached its highest efficiency and proves its invaluable worth in no better way than when, as a messenger of mercy, invisible as spirit, it makes its flight across the watery waste, bearing the ambulance call of the sea—"S O S." In response to which, other vessels hasten immediately. Thus fulfilled, the scriptural injunction, "We, then, that ar estrong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak." The outcome is that disasters at sea have been reduced to a minimum.

What a toll old Neptune claimed each year prior to the discovery and use of radio! But, thank God, the Scripture is true in its application here, for radio certainly has prospered in the thing whereunto it has been broadcasted.

In this connection, we cannot help thinking of a certain storm-tossed vessel on the Sea of Galilee. The wind was contrary, the tempest was raging, the night was dark, the mariners were terror-stricken. They sent out their cry of distress. The Lord of the wind and the waves hastened in immediate response, saying: "Be of good cheer; got their anger, the winds forgot their fury, and human hearts forgot their terror!

The words that had gone forth out of the Master's mouth had not returned void; they prospered in the thing whereunt othey were spoken.

God is broadcasting. There is no speech nor language where His voice is not heard. There is no dungeon so dark, no spot so lonely, no cave so deep that the voice of God cannot speak to us. The air is vibrating with calls of peace, pardon, invitation, mercy, love. But it often happens that man hears nothing. Why? Simply because his spiritual "set" is disconnected or his prayer-battery "dead."

If our spiritual "set" is working right and the battery charged with sincerity, everything will be all right. "He that hath made the ear, shall he not hear?" shall he not "listen in," shall he not answer our prayer in His own time?

We may rest assured that the prayers that go forth out of our mouth shall not return void, but shall accomplish that which God thinks best for our good, and shall prosper in the things thereunto they were effered.

As soon as Christ came to earth on his mission of mercy and redemption, God broadcasted a brief but bright message to the world. "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased."

At the time of our Lord's birth, the angels sang in the evening sky, the angelic choir broadcasted its most charming anthem, the title of which was "Good Tidings." An angel announced the title, and immediately—

"It came upon the midnight clear,
That glorious song of old,
From angels bending near the earth,
To touch their harps of gold;
Peace to the earth, good will to men,
From heaven's all-gracious King;
The earth in solemn stillness lay,
To hear the angels sing."

May we continually endeavor to tune out the undesirable noises, and buzzing confusion of the world, that we may hear the music of eternity, and get in tune with the choir invisible.—Samuel Blair.

ALL-SOUTH CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CONVENTION.

During the sessions of the All-South Christian Endeavor Convention, in Richmond, Va., July 10-14, three other relative conventions will be held. Virginia and North Carolina delegations will hold sessions in the interest of work in the two States, and a Junior Christian Endeavor Convention also will be held in the interest of work among children.

State convention sessions will be guided by the spirit that will dominate the All-South Convention. Many important matters will be discussed, both in period sessions and also in open conferences, when well-informed religious leaders of the nation will express views on present-day problems for youth.

North Carolina has assured Charles F. Evans, Southern secretary, that about 1,000 delegates from that State will attend the Convention. These will hold a separate convention of their own at a time which has been provided on the general program. Other States will hold group rallies. The Virginia delegation will be about 600 strong. At both conventions, election of officers will take place, and many other matters will be considered.

Estimates at headquarters in Chattanooga, Tenn., place the entire strength of the Convention at several thousand, the largest of any of the preceding gatherings in the South.

Christian Endeavor is represented in eighty-eight religious bodies in the United States, and is established in every country in the world. It was founded in 1881 by Dr. Francis Clark, who will be one of the speakers at the Convention. Other prominent leaders on the program will be William Jennings Bryan, Dr. Daniel A. Poling, of New York; Edward P. Gates, of Boston, Mass.; Dr. Peter Ainslie, of Baltimore.

Percy S. Foster, of Washington, D. C., will direct the singing, and the sessions of the Convention will be under the direction of Charles F. Evans, Southern secretary. He will be assisted by several field secretaries, who have been educating the Southern States to the advantages of the movement.

Featuring the program will be educational conferences, open sessions, open-air meetings, recreational advantages, a mammoth parade, and an after-trip to Boston, Mass., home of the United Society of Christian Endeavor.

BIOGRAPHY IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

In the study of biography, time is required to get a viewpoint. Many years ofttimes may elapse before the true worth or influence of a man may be known, and this fact should be taken into consideration in the study of living persons. With this modification, we can accept the following excellent article from the Christian Herald. And while we would thus qualify living subjects, we would not accept those long since passed into history also without qualification. Yet we are able to warn or caution against errors that we might be led into:

"Looking over the curriculum of the high schools and preparatory schools, one is impressed with the subjects that are still compulsory. In the way of reading of history there is a large quantity of the past required. Pagan writers, military heroes, ancient men of various degrees of greatness or near-greatness are in the regular courses for our boys and girls to study and remember for examinations. Without criticising any of the plans made by professional teachers and educators, might we suggest that a subject too often neglected is the study of living persons —men and women who have added something to the welfare of State or nation?

"Why should not our schools have a regular course in biography? The lives of those who in the present are worthwhile? We would suggest a course in the study of prominent citizens living or recently dead. This course might easily be made up-to-date and very interesting by taking magazine or even daily press notices of the lives of persons who are every week passing on. The students in our public schools might well take an hour every day to the review of lives of American citizens who are doing something for the welfare of the world. And for a more careful and permanent study, a course in the biography of national characters might be inserted into the curriculum of any high school that would be of far greater value than much of the study of pagan writers or military exploiters like Caesar and Alexander the Great.

"Why should the dead past seem so important to many educators? Why not interest our young people in the wonder and glory of the time in which they themselves live? The past has its useful lessons, but the present is even greater in its power to create inspiration for right living, using the examples that actually exist in our own living time. King Tut may be interesting, but he has been dead a long time; and so far as we can discover, he never did anything to make life better or happier."

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE TEST OF FELLOWSHIP.

The fourth plank in the Christians' platform is: Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

Christ came into the world to produce a certain type of character—of manhood and womanhood. He laid down no hard and fixed rules by which this type of character should or could be produced. He was and is dealing with life; and life is more than rules and regulations. He did not tell His followers what they must believe, or not believe about Him; but He did say they must believe in Him. John made this clear: "Whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life." (3:15). And again, "As many as received him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believed on His name." (1:12).

It was not opinions and decisions and beliefs about Him; it was belief in Him that was and is to give power. "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." That was getting at the heart of the whole matter, and Jesus said so. On such a belief and declaration as that, Jesus would build the Church.

When the matter is brought to the test, the very ultimate and final analysis, all Christian peoples of the various denominations believe just what we Christians declare to all the world and believe. Let the reader bring it home to his own heart. One has fellowship with another when one feels that the other is a man or woman of Christian character. When you see one whose daily walk, conversation, life, is hid with Christ in God, you not only have respect for that one; you have fellowship with that one in your heart. Trying yourself to walk in the way, and believing with your whole heart that you are walking in the way, you have fellowship with all others who, you believe, are walking in that way. As an individual, you require Christian character, Christian conduct, Christian deeds, as the test of your fellowship with another.

One knows men and women who do not believe about baptism or communion, or some other ordinance as one believes; yet that one, deep in the heart, has fellowship with the men and women who are walking in the way, and who, believing in Christ, are by His grace Christians in character.

The Christian Church has gone to the foundation of the matter in Church membership and in fellowship. The test of one is Christian character—the test with God and man. The one who believes in Jesus Christ, and walks in the way day by day, is your brother or sister in Christian fellowship, and in Church membership from the highest and holiest point of view, provided you yourself believe in Jesus Christ and walk in the way day by day.

In this the Christian Churches seek to make and to magnify character—to build up in the world and to emphasize through the Church the right sort of character. When this is done, the Church is safe and satisfied, the members are safe and satisfied, and we are persuaded—Jesus Himself is satisfied. "Not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." (Matt. 7:21.)

The Christian Church is safe, sane, sound in making Christian character the test of fellowship and of Church membership.

Why do we as ministers, members, laymen, all not seek to emphasize this fact more, and hold it up before the whole wide world? The Churches, that is to say the denominations, can and will come together and present a solid front to the world against sin and Satan when all who are Christian shall be willing to make Christian character, and not human, man-written creeds the test of fellowship and of Church membership.

THE NAME "CHRISTIAN."

At a meeting in "Old Lebanon Church," in Surry County, Va., on August 4, 1794, Rev. Rice Haggard arose and moved that hereafter the Church be called "Christian," to the exclusion of all party or sectarian names. This suggestion was adopted unanimously, and the Church of which this paper is the "official organ," has been known as the "Christian Church" from that day till this day, and will be so known as long as the Church exists.

The right of one organization to use the name "Christian" to distinguish or differentiate it from other bodies has been questioned by many people. It, therefore, becomes necessary from time to time to give reasons for calling a religious organization, the "Christian Church." The strongest reason is that "the disciples were called Christians first at Antioch." (Acts 11:26.) The Greek word used to express "were called," in the New Testament, carries with it the idea of inspiration, and is used many times by inspired authors. It can be inferred from the meaning of the Greek word that this name is of divine origin, either by direct inspiration or approval.

It is certainly of divine record. It is there in the Scripture as a part of the inspired record. No matter how it originated, it has the sanction of Luke and the testimony of history. It is also of divine significance. It relates believers to Christ. Joseph Parker says: "The one name we ought to have is Christian." Adam Clark admits its divine origin. It signifies relationship to Christ. No other Church name does that. Every where and at all times the name "Christian" tells the story of allegiance to Jesus Christ.

Besides the above, the Church at Antioch was the first Church that really represented the true Church. It was the first Church composed of converts from Jews and Gentiles. It had brought the divided world into one Church. Barnabas had first taken Saul by the hand and secured his recognition as a disciple (Acts 9:27), and now he goes to Tarsus after Saul and brings him to Antioch, where they co-labor in that great city in this Christian Church. All the elements of Christianity co-operate in the Antioch Church.

Apart from divine and historic reasons that justify us calling ourselves the "Christian Church," we have the same moral and legal right to choose and adopt a name for our Church as any other denomination. From what has been written, the following conclusions are derived: The name "Christian" is of divine origin, divine record, and divine significance, and, if it were not, it may be chosen of right as the only name by which the Church may be called. Of all other names worn by Churches, it can be safely written that they are of human origin, human record, and human significance. This is all written in defense of the name "Christian" as used by the denomination represented by this name, and not to boast of anything or to cringe before any critic who undertakes to justify other names by denying the right to use this sweet, significant name to distinguish the Church from all human organizations.

THE ODIUM OF NAMES.

We are the victims of slogans! "Rum, Romanism, and Ruination" once defeated a candidate for the presidency of the United States. Accusing Hughes of being a "knocker," and grooming Wilson with a phrase suggestive of the American innate love of peace, "He kept us out of war," changed a normal Republican country into a Democratic one in 1916. A rose by any other name might smell as sweet, but there is something, nevertheless, both sinister and powerful in a name, a phrase. Its odium is inescapable, its argument unanswerable.

The skillful propagandist knows this. He uses its power with deadly aim in building up sentiment for his cause, and equally in demolishing the foundatons of his opponents. Any candidate who "smells of oil" in the approaching presidential campaign is already elected to private life for four years. The propaganda which convinced the nation that William Jennings Bryan was a dreamer instead of a Christian statesman, three times defeated the peerless orator of our generation in his eloquent effort to reach the goal of his life's aspiration.

The vast majority, fully 90 per cent, of our people do not think. They act from sentiment and impulse. They follow the slogan-maker blandly, not to say blindly. They are the victims of shrewd propaganda. The bad meanings they read (rather which are read for them) into certain words by no reason inhere in those words, but the result is in their case as if they did so inhere. Many thoughtful persons are losing their faith in democracy because of this sinister situation.

It is better, however, to adhere to democracy, with its exaltation of the priceless worth of the individual personality, and to let people suffer for their mistakes. Even the phrase-maker cannot permanently fool all the people. Democracy will eventually purge itself of the poltroons and the political Judases, in spite of all their skillful making of names, phrases, and slogans. This is not sheer optimism. It is Christian faith supported by victories for humanity through nineteen eventful and radiant centuries of progress and achievement.

This does not blind the vision, however, to the fact that we are today suffering from the odium of names, names made odious by intriguing propaganda. To call a man a capitalist or a Socialist is to blast his fortunes in many cases. Capitalism and Socialism are phrases to conjure with in our day. Yet Jesus was both a capitalist and a socialist. He taught the principles of human brotherhood, of social solidarity, which underlie the program and ideal of Socialism, and the tools in His carpenter's shop made Him, for His day, a real capitalist.

To classify a man of the Church today as a fundamentalist or a modernist is to alienate from him the sympathy, and attach to him the suspicion, of a large group of partisans. Yet Jesus was both. He held stoutly to the Ten Commandments, but read into them a large and expansive meaning.

His enemies used against Him the power of names and phrases loaded in the popular mind with a content that inhered not in them. "Wine Bibber," "Friend of Sinners," "Equal with God," "Blasphemer" (an anchient name for Higher Critic), "Destroyer of the Temple," and the like, they styled Him. The odium of this propaganda led Him to Golgotha. He compromised not in the face of the injustice that was done Him. In spite of names, phrases, and slogans, He stood for the right. We must follow in His steps, no matter what the price we must pay. The odium attaching to no name can ever warrant the Christian in swerving a hair's breadth from the path of Christian duty, of Christian service, of willing sacrifice, though he knows that path leads by a winding trail to a cross-crowned hill and an open sepulcher hard by.

THE FAITHFUL INSPIRE US.

The faithful ones in the Churches are they who keep the wheels going and make progress possible. Our collections for Men and Millions in April and May were over $7,000; not what they should be, it is true, but if some readers could know the sacrifices that many are making to pay these pledges and could read many of the letters that come to the mission secretary, they would take heart and thank God. The faithful few are doing it. Many are paying, not out of their abundance or plenty, but out of their wants and needs. They are paying because they made the pledge to pay; they are paying because they love their Church and their God; they are paying because they want to have a hand in helping the Christian Church in the day of its need and great efforts to go forward. If all who subscribe to Men and Millions would make the same effort that the faithful are making, a new day would certainly dawn in our Zion, and the banner of the Christian Church would wave most proudly over God's militant hosts. Out of the sacrifices of these faithful ones will certainly come an enrichment of heart and soul that the world cannot give or take away.

If one loves the Christian Church, all that it is, stands for, and is trying to do, surely one will do one's best for Men and Millions. This is a movement of the whole Church in its effort to save souls, build up the kingdom and carry forward the work of the Lord.

Yes, the faithful few are inspiring us and are leading the Church on to victory in our Master's name. They are accomplishing something worth while in the world.

There are those who oppose Men and Millions. Of course there are! No real great and good movement was ever begun from the day of Christ down to our present time that was not opposed by some. But one wonders what the knockers and those who oppose have done to carry forward the Christian Church, or are doing to carry forward the work of the Church. It is easy to oppose, but it is something else to find a substitute which is better, holier, and more helpful than that which is opposed. The knockers and the opponents do not carry us anywhere. So we will try to follow the faithful few and we will find victory where they lead.

WHY GO TO CHURCH?

In the first place, it must not be forgotten that many persons do not go to Church for the reason that it is their duty to be somewhere else. Not every man or woman can attend public worship every week. For many a person, Church attendance would be a sin. They could not be in the Church without neglecting their duty—something that they owe to God and man. Non-Churchgoers are not necessarily sinners. They must be classified. The sheep must be separated from the goats. Indiscriminate condemnation is not just. Let us think now of the goats.

Many persons who ought to go to Church do not go. They could go, but they do not want to go, and that settles it. There are various reasons why they do not want to go, and until some stronger reasons are presented on the other side, their course of action is not likely to be altered. Most people are reasonable creatures, and they follow what to them seems the stronger reason. Many do not go to Church because they are tired, or half sick, or they need exercise, or they want fresh air, or they are behind with their correspondence or their reading or their mending or their housecleaning, or because they have friends visiting them, or because they are visiting non-Churchgoing friends, or—they simply do not feel like going! They would go if they could find a reason strong enough to counteract the current of that feeling.

Here are two reasons why every one who can go to Church ought to do it. If these reasons seem sufficient, then Churchgoing ought to be put down as one of the established features of one's life. Unless a thing is done regularly, it is not done easily. Desultory Church attendance is hard. One has to fight a battle every Sunday, and no one is strong enough to survive an ordeal like that. A thing which is not done easily is in danger of not being done at all. Let a person once decide that going to Church deserves a fixed place in the schedule of his week's life, and the battle is won. After a short while, going to Church will be as easy as going to business. Churchgoing is really a part of a man's business. If it is regarded as an extra, something added, it becomes a burden, and voluntary burdens are sure to be discarded. A man goes to business every morning, whether he feels like it or not. It is a part of his life, and other things do not keep him away from it. Every morning there are a dozen things which he could do or would like to do, but he brushes them aside because business comes first. His feelings cut no figure at all, because he has given business the right of way. Let a man put Church first on one day of every week, and he will find that obstacles and difficulties will speedily disappear. Even his feelings will give up their opposition and fall in line with his purpose.

Here is reason number one: Every person ought to go to Church to get away from himself. We are too much with ourself. We are poisoned by ourself. We are wearied by ourself. We need some one to pull us out of ourself. It is our monotonous self which we must be delivered from. We need some one to bear us away from our habitual mood. We think along one line for six days, and on the seventh we ought to drop it. Our feelings run in one channel through six days, and the current should be broken. We move for six days in a certain range of ideas and interests and our only safety lies in breaking into a larger world. We travel for a week on a certain level, and there is no relief unless we can rise to a higher level. We use the same cells of our brain for six consecutive days, and we run the risk of wearing a hole in the brain unless once a week we make use of another set of cells. People who are the most tired Sunday morning have the strongest reason for going to Church. It is the way to secure rest. Putting on other clothes rests one. Getting into a different atmosphere soothes the nerves. Switching the train of thought on to another track brings the brain relief. Following the thought of another brain for an hour is a vacation. All fagged people ought to be in Church. They need the music and the high-soaring thoughts of prophets and apostles. All persons who are overworking, and who need fresh air and exercise, ought to give at least an hour every Sunday to public worship. It is better than golf. It is more bracing than a walk through the woods.

Here is reason number two: Every one ought to go to Church in order to get closer to folks. We are crowded together physically through the week, but after all we remain far apart. We touch one another on commercial or professional or social grounds, but not on the ground of our common humanity. On six days of the week we are drawn together by our work or our ambitions or our social obligations and desires. On Sunday we ought to come together solely because we are human beings. In the house of God we are no longer members of a class; we are members of humanity. We forget our position and work. We are just fellow-mortals. We lose sight of our wealth or our poverty, our learning or our ignorance, our rank or our obscurity, our age and our sex, and become simply needy creatures in the presence of the eternal. We think about the things which we have in common. We bow before our Maker. We meditate on his goodness and mercy. That widens the mind. We meditate on our duties and obligations. We think of our fellow-travelers, our companions in the pilgrimage from the cradle to the grave. This gives new breadth to the heart. We are alike in our temptations and hardships, our troubles and disappointments, our joys and our sorrows, our hopes and fears, and yet we are all the time forgetting that we belong to one another. We forget one another, often misunderstand one another, sometimes harbor hard feelings toward one another; but in the house of God, we are reminded of the ties which bind us together, and find ourselves thinking more kindly of one another.

No man or woman, no matter what he thinks, and no matter how he feels, can afford to stay away habitually from the place of praise and prayer. Public worship humanizes us. It mellows us. It quickens the brain. It sweetens the heart. It lightens the load. It smooths the way. It brightens the sky.—C. E. J., in Christian Work.

THE ONLY WAY.

"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." What that may mean of respect for human personality, of thoughtful and patient affection, of quick imaginative sympathy, of sheer common kindliness, men saw embodied in Jesus' own relationships with the people He met. To that way of living, based on self-giving and in complete contrast to all selfish standards and values, He imperatively summoned any who would listen to Him. Many, then and since, have responded to His call. The response is still only local and partial. But it is at least recognized that no other basis and by no other means can be solved the complex and age-long problem of human living together. That problem will only be solved as soon as men, jointly and on a large scale, try the way of Jesus.—Presbyterian Witness.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Virginius Smith Kilby was born in the old Columbian Hotel, Suffolk, Va., in September, 1841, and died in Greensboro, N. C., May 24, 1924, in his eighty-third year. He was the son of Thos. J. Kilby, who was a member of a noted Virginia family. Virginius S. Kilby volunteered for service in the Confederate Army in 1861, served throughout the war, was wounded by stepping in front of an officer to save his superior in rank, and came out of the war with honor and a loyalty that was characteristic of his heroic manhood.

In 1867 he married Ophelia Epps Saunders, daughter of Major James R. Saunders, a prominent citizen of Nansemond County. There were born unto them three children—James T. Kilby, Diana Upshaw Kilby, Virginius Spotswood Kilby. Diana married Dr. John W. Page; Spotswood married and died in official U. S. service in the Philippine Islands; James T. married and resides at Milton, N. C.

Mr. Kilby was a deacon in the Suffolk Christian Church, a life-long member, an extra lecturer in the Sunday School, a college man of fine education, possessed of Southern chivalry, a Virginia gentleman of the old type, a student, a true friend, a loyal citizen, a high-toned Christian.

He was superintendent of public schools of Nansemond County, Va., for years, and always cultivated and maintained a deep interest in education. He was, in fact, a very capable man, a great reader of books and a speaker of ability and interest.

He had been in feeble health for several years, spending much of his time in the home of his son, James T., at Milton, N. C. But last fall he was transferred to the home of his daughter, Mrs. Dr. Page, in DeLand, Fla., where he spent the winter in her care. He longed to return to Virginia, and was on his way with Mrs. Page. They stopped off in Greensboro, N. C., with Kilby Page, was taken worse, and passed over the river "to rest under the shade of the trees." His remains were brought to Suffolk, and funeral services were held on May 25th, in the Christian Church, and then laid to rest by his wife in the family cemetery.

He had a brother, Upshur, who died years ago, and a sister, Mrs James A. Turrentine, of Burlington, N. C., who also passed on before him. He was the last of his father's immediate family. Generations pass off the stage of action and new generations enter the race of life.

The family has lost a shining example, the Church a devoted Christian, the State a true citizen, and the world a true man; but heaven has gained an addition, and loved ones there have welcomed his coming. Earth is richer because he lived, and heaven is richer because he died. The grave is the only door to heaven, and Jesus Christ has "robbed the grave of its victory."

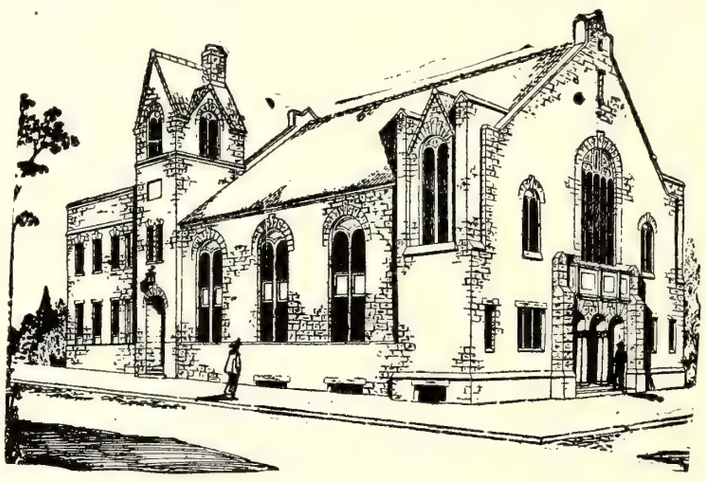
W. W. STALEY.

ELON LETTER.

It was a sultry afternoon the second Sunday in June when the corner-stone of our new Church in Raleigh was laid. Nevertheless, a goodly congregation assembled in the Woman's Club nearby to show their interest in our growing cause in the State's capital city and to enjoy the really uplifting program that had been prepared.

Dr. W. D. Parry, the efficient, popular, progressive pastor, presided, and introduced the speakers. Greetings were brought for the City Ministerial Association by Rev. Henry G. Lane, and for the city of Raleigh by Mayor E. E. Culbreth. Several other ministers were in attendance. The choir, too, rendered beautiful music, as also did Miss Mary Brockwell and Mrs. Fred B. Wheeler in special numbers.

The chief address was delivered by Judge Henry A. Grady, of the North Carolina Superior Court. He took as a text a portion of 1 Thess. 4:13: "I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep." He purposely, he declared, wrenched this text from its original meaning as illustration of how new interpretations must ever arise for Christian truth, which to his mind is a growing concept. Dr. Parry, de declared to be a right worthy exponent of the newest and best in Christian thought; "the smiling parson too busy with doing splendid things for Jesus to be much occupied with attacks on the devil," to borrow the sense of his terse and suggestive characterization of our pastor there.



RALEIGH CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

Judge Grady interpreted his text to be suggestive of the moral somnambulism which he declared to be characteristic of Raleigh in common with all other present-day cities. He said the courts could not cope successfully with violation of the prohibition law and the social code unless the best people would serve on juries and support with their sentiment the condemnation of the evils that afflict our social order like a festering cancer.

Both the Raleigh papers gave liberal space to his speech, and the News and Observer, on Tuesday, carried a long editorial comment, from which we quote: "This plain-spoken indictment by a judicial officer, who has found it very difficult to enforce the law, should arouse the thought and summon to action the good men and women of their city, and should stimulate to diligence every officer of the city and the county. There is other evidence, if any were necessary, to corroborate the indictment of laxity of morals and law enforcement touched upon by Judge Grady. Conditions in Raleigh as to vice are far from what they should be. Except now and then, law-breakers are not caught, and when convicted, the punishment neither fits the crime nor tends to prevent its repetition. In nine cases out of ten, a fine for the drink and immoral crimes amounts to so much license to be paid when caught.

"The challenge to Raleigh people and to Raleigh and Wake officials is one they must meet. If the officers of the law, paid to enforce the law, will do their duty as punctually as they draw their salary, there will not remain a house of ill fame in Raleigh or its environs. If they are vigilant in the apprehension of criminals, and if the courts, juries and judges are faithful in convictions and punishment, the deplorable conditions described by Judge Grady will be greatly reduced. And the challenge is to the people to back up the officials when they do their duty, or to drive them out of office when they fail to enforce the laws faithfully day in and day out.

"Raleigh is a center of public gatherings, the home of schools and colleges, the city set on a hill in this Commonwealth. It shames every citizen that a public official feels called upon to state the deplorable situation that is unworthy of the city. Preachers and teachers and lawyers, and editors, civic and social clubs, men and women in public and private life must be alive and see to it that the conditions exposed are remedied. It is no answer to the indictment that other places may be as bad any more than there are others guilty of as bad practices who have not been apprehended.

"Raleigh must clean up and do it without delay. It cannot be guilty of moral somnambulism."

Following the exercises in the Woman's Club, the audience adjourned to the site of the Church, where the corner-stone was laid by the writer. Dr. Parry had prepared a brief and impressive ritual for the occasion, which was read as follows: "From time immemorial, man has set up altars and erected temples for the worship of Deity. Before the altar, in humility of spirit, he has sought and found the unseen, grown in wisdom and the knowledge of God, received light and inspiration, apprehended the divine will. Endued with power, he has gone forth to reveal to others the glory ineffable. For the glory of God and the service of man, this Church is being erected. Dedicated to truth, and to Him who is the only head of the Church—Jesus Christ—may it be for years to come as a city set upon a hill, whose light cannot be hid. Let us pray.

"In the name of the Eternal God, we lay this corner-stone in the foundation of a house erected to His holy name, where, under the guidance of the Spirit, men may find peace and comfort and come to an understanding of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. Amen."

I suspect that our people generally do not conceive what is being done in Raleigh. I did not fully comprehend the excellency nor the magnitude of their program till I attended this really challenging ceremony. The cut printed herewith is an exact likeness of what is nearing completion in brick and stone. It is a beautiful plant, with every inch of available space utilized. The building is designed to seat a thousand people, and the educational and recreational rooms provide nicely for the graded Sunday School and the week-day activities now so needful in the modern Church. The equipment is of the best. The organ is a Skinner. The completed edifice, furnished and equipped, will represent an outlay of $125,000. You could readily believe it should cost twice that much.

I have not been asked to suggest it, and for that reason I can with all the greater propriety and conscience do so, that our liberal contributors elsewhere have a fine opportunity of service offered them to aid Dr. Parry and his devoted and sacrificing assistants in completing their building. The Raleigh congregation is small and not rich in this world's goods. They have wrought nobly. They have gladly sacrificed. Many have borrowed money and are paying interest on it to put in their beloved Church. I submit that such sacrifice merits recognition, the recognition of assistance and help in the completion of their plant.

I observed this too while in Raleigh, that our minister not only stands well with his ministerial brethren, but that he is impressing himself on the thinking citizens of his city as a modern prophet of the Lord. With such a man in charge and with the splendid plant that is nearing completion, our cause in Raleigh faces the future with radiant and hopeful confidence.

A GREATER BETHLEHEM COLLEGE.

What appears in this article was written on the train "somewhere between Greensboro, N. C., and Gainsville, Ga.," when coming to Bethlehem College, Wadley, Ala. Our colleges are what their constituents and supporters make them, wherever they may be. Bethlehem College will be just the sort of an institution our people of the South demand it shall be—progressive, beautiful, with buildings and equipment needed to render efficient service. "If the hearts of the builders are noble, in one with the duty and need, they build into grandeur, for so it is forever decreed."

Our colleges are fountains of culture flowing through our daily life with clear current of sweetness and life. When Dr. James A. MacDonald, the famous Canadian editor, visited the Highland of Scotland, he came upon a village in the eternal mists, which boasted of two public schools, a high school and a collegiate institute. Besides the scraggy fields and the rock farms, the doctor could not discover any visible means of support for the people of the place. There were no smokestacks and no whirring voice of pulsating machinery. There were no great warehouses or temples of commerce, and the visitor, addressing himself to one of the village schoolmasters, asked him: "We in Canada export chiefly hogs and grain; what do you export from this place?" And the astounding answer came: "Here we make men and send them into the world." What a tribute if such words can be spoken of any institution, be it small or great! For it is not material good or prosperity which stands for the supreme good of mankind. There are other things of much greater concern. The character of the people, their aims, their spirit, their ethical and moral standing, are of infinitely more value than the towering skyscrapers, the spacious parks, the seething streets and crowded stores, although the latter are indeed monuments to courage and determination, the vision and inner power of the citizens and supporters of our educational institutions.

It is in the colleges, in the institutions of learning, that men and women are equipped with the weapons that will make them valiant warriors in the struggle of life. It is in the stillness and quiet of the class-room, away from the hurried turmoil of metropolitan life, that the foundations are laid for future leadership in the professions, in business and finance and the technical vocations. Our colleges are the export houses of men and women. We are too apt to overlook the value of these treasure-houses of human learning, science and character-building. We have in our junior college at Wadley, Ala., a gracious opportunity, a grave responsibility and a stirring challenge to all the people of the South. Bethlehem College did a great work last year under severe handicap, through President Hook and his faithful corps of teachers, but we may see greater results if all really interested will get busy at once and keep busy. We should not forget that we have pledged our heartiest support to our youngest college. Our goal next year should be at least one hundred students, an administration building, and a home for the president. We can do it. Will we do it?

S. L. BEOUGHER,
President Bethlehem College.

HOLLAND.

We do not have any especially startling accomplishments to report from the Holland field. A concrete walk at the parsonage has been added to the physical equipment of the Church property, and the pipe organ was recently repaired and tuned. The Church debt has been reduced to $3,000, and in the fall it and the indebtedness on the parsonage will be paid off. At the last business meeting it was voted unanimously to invite Dr. Howsare, of the Department of Evangelism and Life Recruits, to conduct an enlistment-week campaign. The doctor accepted the invitation and will be with us the week of September 7th to 14th.

Holland and Holy Neck are planning to hold the daily vacation Bible school in August. This will be the third session. The Sunday School voted to adopt "Worship and Song" as its hymnal, and 100 copies will soon be ordered.

Children's Day will be observed the night of the fifth Sunday. The Sunday School, under the leadership of Superintendent I. A. Luke, and the instruction of an especially well-trained faculty, is enjoying the greatest attendance of its history.

At the first of the year we adopted a new morning schedule, carrying the Sunday School on to 11:10 and beginning the Church service at 11:15. There is some dissatisfaction, but the attendance has been better than at any time during the writer's pastorate.

The Christian Endeavor had a fine service last Sunday night. The president, Jack Dalton, Jr., goes to V. P. I. next fall, and he will be greatly missed by his Church. The prayer services are not very largely attended, and the Sunday night congregations are frequently pretty slim.

VALLEY LETTER.

In the early spring I held a revival meeting at Dry Run, resulting in eight conversions, all of whom united with the Church. Rev. J. W. Henderson, of near Shenandoah City, who has recently been licensed to preach, rendered splendid assistance in the meeting. We were very much handicapped by rain, snow, mud, and high water, but are glad to be able to report a good meeting in spite of it all.

I have recently closed a successful meeting at Timber Ridge. Here also we had wet weather, muddy roads, and high water to contend with. And then the farmers were trying their best to plant their crops between showers. Rev. J. F. Morgan, of Winchester, was with me the second week of the meeting, and rendered valuable assistance. Bro. Morgan was with me in a meeting there two years ago, and the people were indeed glad to have him back again. There were fifteen conversions, and the same number of additions to the Church.

Our Sunday School Convention, held at Linville, May 14th to 16th, was, I believe, the best one we have had yet. The attendance was above the average, and the program inspiring and helpful. Bro. Herman Eldredge was present and added greatly to the occasion.

The next important station along our way is our Annual Conference. The Conference will meet this year at Antioch, four miles from Harrisonburg, on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday before the third Sunday in August.

A. W. ANDES.

WINCHESTER.

I want to write a few lines about the doings of our Church here at Winchester. We had our Children's Day services on Sunday, June 8th. Our program was not long, but was interesting, and the splendid audience present enjoyed it very much.

Our Church is honored this year by again having a representative in the graduating class of John Handley High School, in the person of Mr. Paul Hook. Mr. Hook expects to enter Elon this fall.

Our pastor, Rev. J. F. Morgan, is to take a course in the Biblical Seminary, in New York, this summer, and will be away for at least two weeks.

Our Sunday School is co-operating in a union daily vacation Bible school in our city, which will begin in a few days, and we hope a large number of our children will attend, and thus make use of this splendid opportunity.

On the third Sunday afternoon in July our Church will make the every-member canvass for funds for the new Conference year.

Our Conference year closes the first of August, and the annual business meeting of our Church will be held on Wednesday night before the first Sunday in August. We expect to carry a good report to the annual Conference, which meets at Antioch Church on August 13th.

ANNA AMELIA SEABRIGHT.

THE UNBOUGHT GOOD.

What would our land be worth to us,
The land we sell and buy,
And fence about, and call our own,
Without God's open sky
To hold the sunset's rose and gold,
The white clouds floating high?

What would our fields be worth to us
Without the gifts He sends?
Without the sunshine and the rain,
On which our bread depends,
His little brooks to flow for us,
His birds to be our friends?

Oh! as the land without the sky
That ever bends above,
So barren and so desolate
Our lives without His love—
The blessings that no gold can buy
Our greatest riches prove.

PREACH TO THEM.

Preacher, facing needy souls,
Do not dare ignore them,
While God's fateful thunder rolls,
And you preach—before them;
Rather, finding out their need,
Piercing through and through them,
Though they shrink and though they bleed,
Preach your sermons—to them.

It is easy to parade,
Fling your knowledge o'er them,
Preaching sermons study-made
Pompously—before them;
But the sermons that will bless
Through and through and through them,
From your heart to theirs—no less—
Are the ones preached—to them.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

PAID FIRST, LEFT LATER.

The writer has a very refreshing and unusual letter from a captain of Men and Millions in one of our Churches. "I enclose check of $25.00 from Bro. W. for balance of his Men and Millions pledge in full. He has transferred his membership to the Baptist Church, but first paid his obligation in full."

We very often have a letter after this fashion: "Mr. So and So says cancel his Men and Millions pledge. His wife (or mother-in-law) is a member of another denomination, and he has decided to join her Church." Ahem! But does transferring Church membership cancel or annul an obligation previously made?

EASTERN VIRGINIA CONVENTION.

The 1924 session of the Convention of Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference will be held at Bethlehem Christian Church, four miles west of Suffolk, on the Suffolk-Franklin Highway, July 22d and 23d.

Every Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society of the Conference should be represented by a full delegation.

Every Sunday School superintendent and every Christian Endeavor president should plan to be there.

Watch for the program. You will discover that it is not a program of addresses, but a program of education, with opportunities for all to take part.

We call attention to the action of the last Convention in lowering the assessment. The dues this year are 15 cents per Sunday School scholar and senior Endeavor member, 10 cents per intermediate Endeavor member, and 5 cents per junior Endeavor member. According to these requirements, the Convention should receive approximately $1,100.00.

Bethlehem Church has recently been remodeled, and is now a great rural Church, and we are not doing our part unless we give them a great Convention. Will you do your part?

J. H. LIGHTBOURNE,
Executive Secretary.

MISSIONS IN OUR S. S. CONVENTION.

At our Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention which met at Catawba Springs last July, I was made secretary for the department of missions. I have been exceedingly anxious to have all our Sunday Schools study and become interested in missions. If we study we will become interested. Since being made secretary of this department, I have sent out two personal letters to every superintendent in the Convention not now putting on a missionary program, urging that every school have a mission superintendent or secretary whose business it should be to interest the school in missions by putting on a missionary program once per month and have each school take a monthly missionary offering. The schools now taking the offering are as follows: Apple's Chapel, Brown's Chapel, Burlington, Chapel Hill, Damascus, Danville, Durham, Elon College Citizen's School; Fuller's Chapel, Graham, Greensboro Palm Street, Hank's Chapel, Haw River, Henderson, High Point, Hines' Chapel, Ingram, Lebanon, Liberty Vance, Monticello, Morrisville, Mt. Auburn, New Elam, New Lebanon, New Providence, Piney Plains, Pleasant Grove (Va.), Pleasant Hill (A), Pleasant Union (H), Pope's Chapel, Raleigh, Ramseur, Reidsville, Sanford, Shallow Ford, Shallow Well, Turner's Chapel, Union (N. C.), Wake Chapel, Wentworth, Zion.

I am quite anxious for every school to have mission study and take a monthly missionary offering by the time the Convention meets at New Elam July 15-17. I believe, without an exception, the schools that have tried this find it desirable and helpful. We will never be a missionary Church until our people become interested in missions; and the place to interest them is in the Sunday School. Half of the money secured by these offerings goes to keep up our mountain work in Carroll County, Va., where Rev. M. T. Sorrell is giving all of his time to the ministry and teaching; and there are two teachers assisting him. The other half goes to Japan to help in our kindergarten and Sunday School work there.

Bro. Superintendent, let us hear from you!

MRS. W. C. WHITAKER,
Kittrell, N. C. Department Secretary.

POYTHRESS AND SOUTH NORFOLK.

Poythress is a part of South Norfolk, and South Norfolk is a part of him. The two go together like a brook and its laughter, or a bird and its song. Early and late, in season and out, here and there you will find Poythress plying his way deeper and deeper into the hearts of a people in a city by the sea. I do not mean the South Norfolk Christian Church-folk only; I mean the whole town in which he toils.

The little red-haired man of whom I speak came to South Norfolk nine years ago. He did not have much to bring as a minister, because he was only a boy out of college. He had had, however, molded into his life the right, warm friendliness of a North Carolina farm home, but he was a stranger among strangers. He was full of youthful aspirations and ready to work, but so very few were the folks with whom he could undertake the problems of a town.

Like little Moses, he often felt at sea, and almost helpless, but where Moses cried, Poythress laughed. It was not all smooth sailing when Poythress came to South Norfolk. But whether the sailing was smooth or rough, he sang; and when he sang he prayed; and when he prayed, a radiant love and sympathy flooded his soul. With this love and sympathy, he opened door after door; with this love and sympathy he entered heart after heart; and with it he taught the people of South Norfolk they were akin.

Twice has Poythress gone to the hospital and given his own blood for the life of comparative strangers. He has stood hundreds of times among weeping ones of other Churches and sung sweetly and understandingly over the dead bodies of departed loved ones; he has spent many hours on fishing trips listening as a man to a man to the humble confessions of penitent sinners; he has spent days with the boys of the town, playing as a boy with boys, until these boys have learned to pray with him and for him. When called on for help by friend or stranger, his characteristic reply is: "I will be glad to do what I can." With it all, he does not proselyte, and he is a favorite with the other ministers of his town. When the city of South Norfolk needed a chairman for its school board who could bring together in an effective manner teachers and parents and pupils, it selected Poythress, and the service he has rendered has shown them wise.

The above facts, written without Poythress' consent or knowledge, are gathered from the folks. They have come from parents inside and outside his Church. They have been substantiated by ministers and men; little children and mothers, fathers and many sons. I do not mean they have been consciously gathered, for they have not. They are simply patent facts that one sees and hears almost every day. Poythress lost a fine little son last year, but Poythress is rich still.

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.

We began to feel the commencement spirit at Bethlehem Monday evening, May 26th, when the juniors of the academic department entertained the seniors and invited all the faculty. We found the juniors equal to the occasion, and all present seemed to enjoy a pleasant evening. The next event of importance was a farewell party given by class No. 2 of Wadley Christian Sunday School to the Bethlehem teachers and students who were leaving Wadley at the end of the school year. In spite of the sadness that goes with the mention of partings, those present spent a pleasant evening together until they were rushed home by an approaching storm.

On the evening of May 30th, the senior class of Bethlehem Academy met for their annual class social. The members of the faculty were again among those present. At each of these occasions, appropriate and delicious refreshments were served. It might be interesting to note here that these social events were the first held in the new college building at Bethlehem.

The commencement exercises proper began on Saturday, May 1st, at 8 P. M., when the Collerian and Euzelian Literary Societies gave a joint public program. Although these societies had been organized only a short time, they presented a pleasing program composed of declamation, essay, humor and music.

Sunday, June 1st, at 10:30 A. M., people gathered from near and far to hear the commencement sermon delivered by Hermon Eldredge, secretary of administration for the Christian Education Department of the Christian Church. That large audience listened to a great message which was a feast for the mind and soul.

The trustees of Bethlehem College met for their annual session on Monday, June 2d. It was a busy day for them, but a profitable one for the institution. The faculty for the coming year was elected; it was decided to proceed at once with a building program; and a financial campaign was outlined.

The senior class of Bethlehem Academy staged a play, "An Arizona Cowboy," Monday evening. The auditorium was crowded to overflowing with an enthusiastic audience. The gross receipts from the play was $97.00. Dr. W. A. Harper, president of Elon College, and trustee of Bethlehem College gave a short, but impressive, address just preceding the play.

A program composed of graduation and class-day exercises combined, was given Tuesday evening, June 3d. At this time, the following received high school diplomas from Bethlehem Academy: Jim Drake, Talmadge Gay, Staley Hunt, Mary Lou Pearson, Anne Schuessler, Elizabeth Schuessler, Sarah Schuessler, Janie Watson, Pierce Watson and Robinson Young.

All the commencement exercises were held in the fine, new Wadley public school auditorium. This was quite an accommodation to us, and we wish to express our appreciation to the public school authorities.

We feel that the prospect for the coming school year for Bethlehem College and Academy are bright and encouraging.

Wadley, Ala. M. W. Hook.

THE RELATION OF CHURCH AND HOME.

There is no doubt but that you already have a well-formed opinion as to the relation of the Church and home, and it is due primarily to this fact that this theme is worthy of our attention at this time. We have known this relation so long that it has lost its significance and importance for many.

Perhaps the financial relation between the home and Church is the first thought that arises in our minds. While the success of our Church program is largely dependent upon the financial support received from our Christian homes, there is a more important relation which engages our attention, and that is the moral and spiritual relation. There is no agency or institution known to man in which more influence can be brought to bear on the life of children and young people than in the home. In its intimate relations, its constant associations, its co-operation and the self-sacrifice which it inspires, the home life can teach ethics and Christianity with more force than any other institution. Character is determined very largely by the kind of life we live in our homes, and it is upon this early character as a basis that the Church will have to build its structure. Let the foundation in the lives of our young people be strong, so that in later life it will support a magnificent edifice of character.

One of our most urgent present-day needs is a greater development of conscience. Conscience is the knowledge that here is duty, and we certainly need a higher sense of duty both to our fellowman and to ourselves, both with reference to our personal character and our influence upon those about us. Then the home life should produce a highly developed conscience, and should cultivate the moral judgment of our young people, so they will be trained to know not so much how to meet a situation advantageously as how to meet it morally, dutifully.

Psychologists differ as to whether experience is the priamry reality, or the self who experiences. No matter which side we take on this issue, we must recognize the fact that experience has much to do with shaping character. "It is the individual bearer of experience who gives to the experience its character and significance"; but it is all-important what kind of experience one has to mold, interpret, and assimilate so as to become his own. Let us provide a Christian experience to the youth of our land.

Then the home is what I would call the work-shop, or laboratory, of the Church, where the child can put into actual practice the principles and truths learned in the Church and its agencies.

So, in conclusion, we see that the home is related to the Church, in that it should provide good foundations of character upon which the Church can build, and that the home is a laboratory, or work-shop, of the Church. Therefore, we find that the Church and home are mutually supplemental in character-building.

THE RIGHT OF WAY.

Are you willing to be a highway over which Jesus Christ shall come to your town and into the lives of your friends and neighbors? Right of way costs something. When President Garfield was shot he was taken to a quiet, isolated house where he could have absolute quiet and rest in his fight for life, and a special railway was constructed to facilitate the bringing of doctors, nurses and loved ones to his bedside. The engineers laid out the line to cross a farmer's front yard, but he refused to grant the right of way until they explained that it was for the President, when he exclaimed, "That is different. Why, if that railroad is for the President, you can run it right through my house." Are you willing to give Him right of way across your front yard? It may run right through some of your plans, or social engagements, or business appointments; but will you give Him the right of way?—Selected.

OUR PLEDGES to Men and Millions are Sacred, Solemn and Binding.

These obligations were made through the Church to the Kingdom of God and to all that pertains to building up that Kingdom in the world, so far as our Christian Church is concerned. As Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has so pertinently pointed out: "A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations--'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42)--but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

Many are making great sacrifices to meet these obligations and pay these pledges. Every one who fails to do so not only produces paralysis in his own moral system, but to that extent paralyses the efforts and sacrifices that the faithful and the loyal make.

BEAR IN MIND MEN AND MILLIONS MEAN AND STAND FOR ALL THAT THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH MEANS AND STANDS FOR.

—REMEMBER—

that the fourth year ends April 30, 1924.

After that, we have only one more year in which to meet these obligations. Unless we put forth a mighty effort to pay some on these pledges during the last quarter of the fourth year, there is great danger that we will fail entirely, because of the bulk of our pledge looming up before us in a one-year period.

Paying SOMETHING by April 30, 1924, will make it easy to pay ALL by April 30, 1925. Where there is a will there is a way, and God always helps those who try to their capacity to help themselves.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

THE NEED OF PRAYING FOLKS.

"The eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole earth, to show himself strong in behalf of them whose heart is perfect toward Him." —2 Chron. 16:9.

In this text, God declares the necessity of men for his kingdom, and his dependence on them as the channel through which to exert His power to save the world. His Holy Spirit is the only saving power, and it is not through organization, or any other thing we may do, that it flows; but it is through the character of His children. Only Christian character Christianizes and transfigures the individual, and it is through individuals that the nations are saved, and through the nations that the world is redeemed. This is the way of constraining love—Christian character obtained through the lives of others; folks loving one another. It is the way of holiness, of faith, of self-sacrifice and entire consecration.

These things cannot be obtained except by setting the heart perfectly toward Him, except by prayer constantly at the throne of grace and power. The highest type of man is the praying man —the man who takes time to know God. Such folks God is looking for, that He may be strong for them. Into such lives are the profoundest convictions born. Let these prayer moments each day suggest to you and your spirit your hiding in Him.

Prayer.—Dear Father, help us to devoutly begin the day and the week with Thee. Forgive us of our lack of prayer. Make us praying children of Thine, living so close to Thee that each day we may know Thee and may be the channel of blessing for others unto salvation. In Christ's name. Amen.

TUESDAY.

IF YOU WANT YOUR CHILD TO BE TRUTHFUL, BE TRUTHFUL YOURSELF.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."—Prov. 22:6.

"Lying lips are an abomination unto the Lord; but they that deal truly are His delight."—Prov. 12:22.

"I, the Lord thy God, am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children." —Exod. 20:5.

Do your children tell lies?

Most children between certain ages do this, and it is a problem for parents to meet, not shun.

One father adopted a successful method.

He told his little daughter falsehoods would lead little girls into much sorrow and trouble.

Then he told his little girl that the thing which would make him happier than anything else would be to know that his little girl always told the truth.

Frequently he asked the child if she remembered what daddy would like in her better than anything else? And she would repeat his words.

In a few weeks, this lesson went home to her, and the father since has been unable to learn that the child has told a lie.

Parents make a mistake when they tell "white lies" to their children.

There is no difference, so far as the child's understanding is concerned.

If you want your child truthful, you must be truthful yourself.

And there is no excuse for a "white lie," so-called, anyway, for all lies are black. (Copyright, 1924, I. F. S., Inc.)

Prayer.—Our Father, send forth more power of the Holy Spirit upon us parents to save us from mistakes with our children; and may our dealings with them so engage their confidence that what they see in us may be right and in Christ. In His name we ask it. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

HAPPINESS THROUGH HUMILITY.

"Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven."—Matt. 5:3.

Jesus wants us to be happy. The word "blessed" may be translated happy. Happiness does not come from without, outward; but from within, inward. Its source is in the heart. You need not go to this place or yonder city seeking it. You carry it with you wherever you go. It is independent of wealth or outward circumstances. It springs from great principles which have been planted in the heart. It flows all through the life and produces sweet fruits of contentment, wreathing th eface in smiles, and making work a pleasure instead of a burden. It is a seed sown in the heart, and the seed is the Word of God. It is Jesus in the life, for He was and is the Word of God. He came that we might have the more abundant life—the happy life. When Jesus enters a life, there is manifested the greatest humility—and the greatest happiness. He is King, and we are servants. We are happy because we serve. We forget all about ourselves because we have a royal guest in our life, and we love to do the hardest things, the smallest things, the biggest things, anything, everything for Him.

Prayer.—Dear Father, we thank Thee for Jesus, our King. Give us an ear to hear His voice. Show us the humble task that we may do in His name. We love Thee for loving us when we were selfish and sinful, and for showing us the way to Him. Give us the task the others do not care to do. We care not how hard or humble, if Thou wilt help. In His dear name. Amen.—T. E. White.

THURSDAY.

"HE WAS WOUNDED FOR ME!"

"But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed."—Isa. 53:1-6.

The Sunday School Chronicle tells the story of a lady who was visiting in a hospital. She went up to the bed on which lay a wounded soldier and said very gently, "Thank you for being wounded for me!" The man's face brightened at once. That was a new thought to him. It made the pain more bearable to look upon it in that light. It made him feel as though his life had been spent to some purpose at least.

Do you realize that some One was "wounded" for you? For your "transgressions"? And that that some One was no less than the Son of God Himself? You may not be able to understand the meaning of it, but you can understand what Jesus did. Your heart can interpret that! And you can meditate long and profitably upon those great and boundless words of the prophet, "He was wounded . . . bruised, for our transgressions and iniquities."

Have you thanked Him, by word of mouth and serviceful life? Or have you, like so many, "turned" to your own "way"? Nowhere in etymology is it truer than in life that people who think are those who thank! The words are derived from the same root. Thankful people are those who think. If we could get people to think about the loving action of our God, more of them would be led to bless Him for His "wonderful works." Look at the cross of Jesus—and think! For so one may be helped to that thankfulness which shines forth in action—in the confession of Christ, in public identification with His Church, in active recruiting for His kingdom.—Ernest Bourner Allen.

Prayer.—That we may be led to show our gratitude for all the divine kindness we have received, by loving and kindly service for others. "Inasmuch as ye do it to one of the least of these, ye do it unto Me."

FRIDAY.

THE FRUIT OF REPENTANCE.

"Bring forth fruit meet for repentance."—Matt. 3:8.

These words are addressed to the apostles and the Christian following, and now addressed to us.

Repentance is unto the knowledge of truth that we may recover ourselves out of the snare of the devil. (2 Tim. 5:2.)

"Wherefore leaving the doctrine of the first principles of Christ, let us press on unto perfection."—Heb. 6:1.

"These are the things that ye shall do; speak every man the truth with his neighbor; execute the judgment of truth and peace in your gates; and let none of you desire evil against his neighbor . . . (Zech. 8:16, 17) "seeing ye have purified your souls in your obedience to truth . . . love one another from the heart fervently."—1 Peter 1:22.

"He that walketh uprightly and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart . . . shall never be moved."—Ps. 15:2, 5.

"The fruit of the light is on all goodness, righteousness and truth" (Eph. 5:9), such as "love, joy, peace, longsuffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, self-control."—Gal. 5:22, 23.

"Herein is My Father gloried that ye bear much fruit, so shall ye be my disciples."—Jno. 15:8.

Repentance is nothing unless it is to renounce sin and bring forth fruit unto that for which it is made. Jesus came, that no man should live under a cloud, but that all might be profitable, radiating with the above characteristics.

Prayer.—Dear Father, enlighted our minds, that we may understand the truth. Cleanse our hearts from sin and fill us with desire to live unto the complete fullness of repentance and the demands of a righteous life. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THINGS THAT MAKE THE HEART THUMP.

Kicking ghosts at night, only to find that they are spots of moonshine; riding a horse, only to leave him when he turns the corner; reading from the news items of the morning's paper that Mr. B. had a very painful accident yesterday when the can-opener slipped and cut him in the pantry, and that "Mr. D. had the misfortune to fall yesterday and hurt himself on his back porch"; a lane, a lawn, white palings, a cottage and clinging vines and a bonnie lassie thereby; a watermellon discovered in the dewy grass in the fodder field about 10 o'clock in the morning.

Life has a most interesting background, full of pathos and humor, all of which are true to life; but there is one thing that always brings us close to eternal: home, with all its recollections—the old stuffed sofa, over the back of which, as a boy, we used to go fishing; the old rocking-chair with stationary legs; the old trunnel bed; the old table loaded with everything; chairs hanging with odd pieces of clothing; the garden with its old rose-bushes.

Do you like to go back to home, sweet home,

THIS PAGE IS FOR THE CHILDREN ONLY—BUT

LISTEN, LITTLE FOLKS!

This page is yours, from now on; but it has no name yet. Would you like to name it for me? Yes? Fine! But let's give every one an equal chance. Shall we? Who likes a contest? Then, that's what we will have; and we shall begin at once. Every child under the age of fourteen years is entitled to take part in the contest. We will give a year's subscription to THE CHRISTIAN SUN to the child who sends in the best name for our new page for the children.

Send your name and the name you wish the page to have to Miss Madge Moffitt, Ramseur, N. C.; also your age.

The contest will close July 1, 1924.

Do we all understand? Then, we are ready—go!

WHAT YOU WILL READ EACH WEEK ON YOUR PAGE IN "THE SUN."

A story; maybe two stories, if you wish.

A nature poem, and other poems that make little folks happy.

Any news items, too, from our own children's department will be published.

Any contributions from any one will be appreciated.

We want to make our page interesting, and we want each one to help. Then it will be our own children's page.

SUMMER.

Isn't it pleasant, isn't it queer,
Summer feels so new each year?

DEAR LITTLE FOLKS:

How do you like your summer holidays? I hope you won't think your editor wants too much, but here are some things I want to say:

First: Our contest is still on, and I want every one to vote.

Second: Please write in ink if you can. Sometimes only fairy godmothers can read pencil-writing if it is written by tiny fingers. And I want tiny fingers to write it. Get mother to help you vote.

Third: Write on all your letters, "Miss Madge Fleming Moffitt, Ramseur, N. C."

Good-by, dears; try to get your vote to me in a-hurry!

Your page editor,
MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT.

P. S.: This is your little page, and your editor wants to print just what you like best. So please write as a special to your editor, and say what you like best—stories, poems, games for a rainy day, and sometimes a beautiful Bible story.

WHAT TO DO ON A RAINY DAY.

Two Little Games.

On a rainy day, when everything is dull and dreary and there is nothing to do, get a piece of paper, fold in the middle, and then fold again; cut it into blocks, and on each one write something like this: "Help mother," "Make the beds," "Draw," "Read," "Rock little baby sister," "Read to grandfather," etc. Then turn the slips face down and shuffle, draw one and do what it says. Sometimes you will be surprised. This will keep you busy for a long while.—The Delineator.

The Ribbon Game.

Another interesting game for a rainy day: You get some ribbons or cords, all different colors, about a yard and a half long. One person holds in his hands an end of all the ribbons, while the others sit in a row, each holding an end. Then the person that is holding all the ribbons starts to tell a story, when suddenly he stops and pulls at one of the ribbons in his hand. The one whose ribbon is pulled, goes on with the story. Any number of children, from two on up, can play.—The Delineator.

TIP-TOE TALE.

A fish took the notion
To come from his ocean
And take in the sights of the town.
So he bought him a hat
And a coat and cravat
And a one-legg-ed trouser of brown! He did!
A one-legg-ed trouser of brown!

His suit fit so queerly
That every one nearly
Went following out on the street!
But the best of it all
Was how handsome and tall
He could walk when he didn't have feet! He did!
He walked when he didn't have feet!

Now I must confess that
I surely would guess that
A fish trying walking would fail.
But with no one's advice
He walked perfectly nice
On the very tip-toes of his tail. He did!
On the very tip-toes of his tail!

—Child Life.

HOW WE CAME TO HAVE PINK ROSES.

Once upon a time all the Roses in the world were white. There were no Yellow Roses, no Pink Roses, no Red Roses, all the Roses in all the world were solid white.

One morning, down by the garden fence, a little Rosebud peeped out and saw the big, round sun looking down at her. He stared and stared at her so hard that she became frightened; but after awhile she took courage and looked up at him and said bravely, "Mr. Sun, why do you look at me so hard?"

Then the old Sun laughed. He laughed and laughed. Then he said, teasingly, "Because you are so pretty."

Now, then, what do you suppose the little Pink Rosebud did? She blushed! She blushed pink!

And ever since then we have had Pink Roses.

THIS OUR DAY.

The world has had many days, and will have many days. Each year brings 365 days to the world. Many, many years have passed and many more will probably come to the world. We have formed the habit of identifying ourselves with the world and imagining that the world's days are our days. But not so. We have not the permanence of the world; we are among the world's evanescent creatures. We are here today, and know not that we shall be here tomorrow. This is peculiarly our day, and it is fast passing away. We need frequently to remind ourselves of the transitoriness of human life. Our fathers—where are they? They were here as we are, but now the place that knew them knows them no more. It would be vain to struggle against the order of nature to which we are subject, and it is foolish to ignore it and act as though it were otherwise. We should realize that we are passing on.

And when we have come to realize it, it is very important how we react to the realization. We may become pessimistic, hopeless, and make no earnest effort. That would be the deepest depth of unwisdom. We may say, "Let us eat, drink and be merry, for tomorrow we die." That would be extreme folly. The true moral is given by Longfellow in "A Psalm of Life"—

Life is real! Life is earnest!
And the grave is not its goal;
Dust thou art, to dust returnest,
Was not spoken of the soul.

Not enjoyment, and not sorrow,
Is our destined end or way;
But to act that each tomorrow
Find us farther than today.

Let us, then, be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate;
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait.

THE FAMILY ALTAR.

and visit the old spots where you once worked and played and cried? Mother is not there any more, but every spot of the old plantation is very dear. We do not leave until we have walked out in the garden and plucked a rose from the old rosebush she placed there years ago, and shed a tear to her memory. Is she dead? No. She lives. Something here reminds us of eternity. We are inspired to be ashamed of that which is unworthy. "Lord God of Host, be with us yet, lest we forget, lest we forget."

Prayer.—(Pray as you feel this morning, and all joining in the Lord's Prayer.)

SUNDAY.

A BAD BED.

"The Sabbath was made for man."—Mark 2:27.

"I beg and pray of you," said Dolly, "to leave off weaving on Sunday, for it is bad for the soul and body, and the money as comes i' that way 'ull be a bad bed to lie down on at the last."

Our obligation to keep the Sabbath is the necessity of it. Without its uplift, the soul will wither and the body will grow tired and the nerves break. The soul and body thrives in proportion as the Sabbath is observed properly. It is starved in proportion as it is deprived of it.

Some complain, "Why keep it so rigidly?" The Puritan way was tyranny." In some senses, it might seem so. But the Puritan way was better than the many ways in which it is kept at the present time, and certainly better than the abuse of it. Think of one studiously and religiously keeping the Sabbath in recluse, thrown in upon himself, without music except the sacred, without literature except the Bible and the religious, without conversation except that which is edifying and holy; spending the day with his own soul and God's silence. Such an one would possess an heart of iron and a soul like unto God's. The keeping of the Sabbath is a great principle necessary, not because it is commanded, but commanded because it is necessary. It is not based on law, but law is based on it. We may have excuses of charity as a motive for Sunday business and recreation, but "money as comes i' that way 'ull be a bad bed to lie down on at last."

Prayer.—Our Father, the Sabbath returns and brings to us afresh all the beauties and glories of the Lord. Give us Thy grace, that we may be faithful stewards of ourselves and of the day, and of true manhood. Amen.

Review: "Rehoboam to Nehemiah."

Golden Text: "Righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people."—Prov. 14:34.

Devotional Reading: Micah 4:1-5.

Rehoboam to Nehemiah—that is a suggestive way of defining the limits of one of the most significant, if not the most significant, periods of Hebrew history. For there was crowded into the scant five hundred years between the times of these two men an amazing amount of the "stuff" that history is made of—events and movements that had eternal significance, not only for the life of the Hebrew nation, but for the life of the world. And he who reads about these things finds in them confirmation of the striking statement that "history is His story." The footprints of God are to be seen very plainly as He walked among the nations and moved in the events of this stirring age.

The story begins with Rehoboam, the son of Solomon, who inherited from his father his great kingdom, but little if any of his father's wisdom. The story of how the kingdom was rent asunder by his rash policy is too familiar to need repetition here. Suffice it to say that Jereboam, an ambitious and rather able young man, became king over the ten northern tribes, while Rehoboam had the house of Judah and Benjamin. From that time, Jacob was a house divided against itself.

The northern kingdom had a checkered career. It had some able kings, but they were for the most part irreligious and they "caused Israel to sin," as did Jereboam. In practically every instance, they were concerned only with the material splendor of their kingdoms, and the moral and spiritual life of the people suffered a gradual decline. Social injustice, immorality, idolatry and cruelty reigned within, while from without there came aggressions by the powerful nations that made a bid from time to time for world supremacy. Finally, in 722 B. C.—mark that date indelibly in your mind—Israel, or the northern tribes, were carried into captivity by the Assyrians, and thus ended the sorry career of what might have been a great nation.

Judah, however, remained intact for the time being. But Judah did not profit by the lesson which Jehovah had tried to teach her by His dealings with Israel, and she, too, went the way of all the nations that forget God. For her kings became idolatrous, and they formed foreign alliances, and in spite of repeated warnings and pleadings by the prophets, the people forsook Jehovah their God. Accordingly, in 597 B. C. (this was the date of the first deportation), and finally in 586 B. C. (another date to be remembered), Judah was carried into captivity by Babylon. Thus ended the life of Judah as a nation.

But God was not done with His people. And in due season He brought "the remnant" back to their homeland, not as a nation, however, but as a Church. It was from this remnant, purged, disciplined, and purified, that God preserved the seed of Judaism, which later found its flower and fruitage in Jesus Christ. It was through the exile that the Jewish religion was spiritualized and the way prepared for Him who was the Way and the Truth and the Life.

Perhaps it might be interesting and worth-while to mention, in passing, some of the significant events that took place between Rehoboam and Nehemiah. They are as follows:

1. The downfall of both Israel and Judah as nations.
2. The rise and development of prophecy. It was during this period, be it remembered, that the prophets lived and wrought. If the period had done nothing else except produce such men as Elijah, Amos, Hosea, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, it would have been epoch-making.
3. The rise and fall of such world powers as Assyria, Babylon, Media, Peria.
4. The development of the Messianic hope in its highest form.
5. The development of the synagogue.
6. The finding of the book of the law—probably our book of Deuteronomy—and the development of many of the codes in the Pentateuch.
7. The exile.
8. The return and the rebuilding of the temple.
9. The rebuilding of the walls of Jerusalem.
10. The transition whereby the Jews became a "people of the Book."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

June 29, 1924.

Topic: "The Missionary Work of Our Denomination."

Lesson: Nehemiah 3:1, 2, 4:1, 6:3.

Some one has said that three great words in missions are "know" "glow," and "go." We must know something about missions if we are to become enthusiastic about missions, and we must become enthusiastic about missions before we go. Much depends, therefore, upon a knowledge of missions, and it is fitting that the topic for this week's C. E. prayer meeting is "The Missionary Work of Our Denomination," for this will bring to our attention some of the things our own denomination is doing to carry the good news unto the uttermost parts of the world. And perhaps that information will inspire some of our young people so that they will want to go to have a part in this great work.

Our denomination is doing missionary work, both at home and overseas. Our overseas work is confined to Japan and Porto Rico. We have the following missionaries in Japan: Dr. and Mrs. Woodworth, Rev. and Mrs. E. C. Fry, Rev. and Mrs. W. Q. McKnight, Rev. and Mrs. C. P. Garman, Miss Martha Stacey, and Miss Angie Crew. Then there are, of course, a number of native workers, some of them well trained. For instance, there is in Mrs. Fry's school a young woman who was, before her marriage, Miss Toshio Sato, a bright and consecrated girl, who graduated with honors at Elon College. And several of the native pastors have, I think, had training in America. Our missionaries in Japan are doing many kinds of Christian work. Some of them are doing preaching and evangelistic work, sometimes preaching on the streets and out in the outlying districts. In some cases they are teaching. Some very fine kindergarten work is being done by the women. Mr. McKnight is doing evangelistic newspaper work and is getting fine results from his work. Mothers' clubs are formed and taught, and in a hundred and one ways the missionaries are helping to transform the life of Japan.

Our other overseas work is in Porto Rico. Here we have several trained and consecrated workers. Miss Olive Williams, whom some of our Endeavorers have seen, is doing a great work among the children. She is teaching and is training them in industrial work. Her daily vacation Bible school was a great success, and her beautiful Christian character is winning boys and girls to Christ. Mr. and Mrs. Barrett—I saw them only two weeks ago at Elon—are also doing a great work; doing it through the many activities that make up the missionaries' lives. Then there are Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Morton, who have recently gone to Porto Rico. Mr. Morton is going to teach the Porto Ricans how to garden and farm. His specialty is agricultural missions. In addition to these workers, there are a number of native workers who are rendering valuable service. For instance, Mr. Victor Reveria, who is an Elon graduate, is doing Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work among his own people.

Our denominational home mission work is varied and extensive. One of the big things which our Church is doing through its Home Mission Board is to help Churches, either with their building programs, or with the pastor's salary and general expenses. In this way many Churches have been helped to the point where they could assume self-support. Another kind of work is the Americanization work at Haverhill, Mass. Miss Frieda Kirkendall (she was married recently) has been doing a great work among foreign-born or native-born children of immigrants, and among the immigrants themselves. Miss Marguerite Youmans joined her last fall in this great work. These young women, with their ingenuity and consecration, are doing many things that are not only making boys and girls more efficient citizens-to-be, but making them better and more Christian boys and girls.

Then there is the work among the Indians by Miss Elizabeth Howsare. Her articles as they have appeared in the Herald of Gospel Liberty have been full of information and humor and inspiration. Miss Elizabeth is doing a great work among the Indian boys and girls—a work that will pay large dividends in character and service in the days to come.

Rev. W. R. Caldwell is representing our Church in the great lumber camps of the Northwest. He is among red-blooded, out-of-doors, he-men, and he has a man's job, but he is doing a great work for these men who have rugged bodies and hard hands, but warm and very human hearts.

And then there is the work in the mountains which was begun by Miss Hedgepeth and which is being carried on so well by Rev. and Mrs. Sorrel and Miss Morey, together with at least another young woman. Preaching and teaching go hand in hand here, and the people of this rugged section are having the good news applied to their own lives.

This is a brief survey of the work our denomination is doing. We, as Christian Endeavorers, ought to have a part in it. We can give; we can pray; we can go.

"GO" AND "LO."

"Go ye, and lo I am with you alway."—Matt. 28:20.

Query: How can we claim His "lo" if we ignore His "go?"

Came the vision of St. Paul—
Scene within a Roman hall;
Face lit up with holy gladness,
Festus twitted him with madness.
"Noble Festus, nay, not mad,
But a heart supremely glad;
Caesar dared not promise so,
Christ said 'Go,' and also 'Lo!'"

Came the echo down the ages,
Record true of saintly sages;
Came the witness all sublime,
Of those conquerors of time.
Whether living they or dying,
This their shout, all time-defying:
"Men of God! the sequence's so,
Ours that 'Go,' and His that 'Lo!'"

Came the vision of the years
Of the lonely pioneers;
Came their sob of hope forlorn
For the breaking of the morn;
Came the rugged tug of doubt,
Then, anon, the victor's shout,
And the routing of the foe—
To Christ's "Go" preluding "Lo!"

Comes the warning of the Lord
To the readers of His Word,
His appeal of love and yearning,
That we hasten His returning;
Warning us lest we forget
That the Christ must tarry yet,
While His servants are so slow
Forth to "Go" and prove His "Lo."

Comes a message from the throne,
Answering every heathen groan;
Comes a voice from God's right hand,
Word of hope for every land:
"Go ye into all the world,
Let My banner be unfurled,
Widen out your ranks and 'Go,'
And I'll flood them with My 'Lo'!"

—Western Recorder.

I am sure that as we grow better and better Christians, this will become more and more the source and fountain of our strength. We shall come so close up to all the world's wickedness that it cannot strike us. We shall be saved from it by our pity for it. We shall be far from its contagion the closer that we come to its needs. We shall be pure as the angels the more completely we give ourselves up to the ministering angel's work. This is the true positiveness of the Christian's purity, the real safety of the loving and laboring life.—Phillips Brooks.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

We opened up our swimming-pool last week, and the children have had a most delightful time. They had been pleading to us to fill it with water for several weeks, but the weather had been so cool we had refrained, because we knew if we filled it the temperature would be to strong for them to go in and for fear they could not stand the temptation, we waited till the weather was warm enough for them. It is a blessing every child will enjoy, and will bring much happiness to them. It is also a pleasure to those who watch the little fellows as they play in the water and enjoy the fun.

Our Easter offering has crossed the three thouhand dollar mark. We lack, at this writing, $424.75. We want some of our friends who are interested in us to come to our rescue and push us across the mark. Just one more week to reach our goal. Come to our rescue or we fail.

REVIVAL AT RAMSEUR, N. C.

Sunday, June 1st we started a meeting at Ramseur Christian Church. Rev. J. L. Johnson came to us on Tuesday and did the preaching throughout the meeting. His preaching was plain and powerful. He preached the genuine Word of God. His messages were enjoyed by a large congregation each night. We had an afternoon service each day, those mostly in attendance being mothers and children.

The music was in charge of the writer, with some of the best backing any one could have. The choirs from the Methodist and Baptist Churches were a great help to us. Miss Madge Moffitt, our own pianist, played for us. Miss Moffitt is a young woman of great talent and accomplishment. Her playing is a real inspiration to all who hear her.

We are grateful for the splendid co-operation given by the different Churches of the town. The pastors and their membership gave excellent help. The Rev. Mr. Elam, of the Baptist Church, preached for us Sunday night at the beginning of the meeting. His message was one of power and plainness. The Rev. Mr. Scott, of the Methodist Church, preached on Monday night. His message was one of power and full of the Word of God. These men are pastors of the respective Churches in Ramseur. It is a pleasure to work with such men and feel their spirit of fellowship in the great work of the kingdom.

The meeting closed Sunday night, June 8th. It was a great success. Six members were received into the Church, and the entire membership was awakened to see the new vision of the Church's need and the value of soul-winning.

All who attended the services were helped, and the results of the meeting will grow. It is a joy to be called to the service and ministry of the Church, and it was a God-sent blessing to have and to work with Bro. Johnson. We hope to be associated with him much more in the work of the Master. May God's blessings rest upon him as he continues his work.

JESSE H. DOLLAR.

FROM WALTERS.

We had a good day at Mt. Carmel Sunday, June 1st. One hundred and eighty-six were in Sunday School and a large congregation for the preaching service. We ordained two new deacons—Bro. Elisha Ballard and Bro. W. E. Beale. The outlook for a strong Church at Mt. Carmel is good. The Lord is waiting to bless us if we are willing to receive it; let us do our best and trust Him. Our meeting will begin the first Sunday night in September, and the pastor will do the preaching. We are expecting to turn to God in prayer, that we may have a great revival. We had four to join the Church on the fourth Sunday night, making ten this year; others will join soon.

We had a good day at Antioch second Sunday in June. The work looks hopeful at Antioch. We trust it will grow and prosper and continue to stand as a great lighthouse in the community. We will have our meeting at Antioch week after the third Sunday in September. Bro. W. D. Harward, from Elm Avenue, Portsmouth, will help us in this meeting. Let us pray that we may have a great revival at Antioch.

Johnson's Grove work is growing in interest, the congregations are good, and the outlook is hopeful. The revival service will begin there on the first Sunday afternoon in August. The pastor will do the preaching. We are hoping and praying for a real revival.

Walters, Va. ELISHA BRADSHAW.

DR. BUTLER AND PROHIBITION.

The fallacy in Dr. Butler's reasoning that the national prohibition law is not enforced because it cannot be enforced; that the reason it cannot be enforced is because it ought not to have been passed, and that it is a challenge to the ingenuity and sporting instincts of young people—is thus pointed out:

Precisely such an argument may be used to prove the immorality of a protective tariff. . . . Shall we say that because well-to-do people violate this law, and often do so with impunity that the tariff law is not enforced because it cannot be enforced and that it cannot be enforced because it ought not to have been passed? Shall we say that the tariff law is a challenge to the ingenuity and sporting instinct of the young people who land in America after a transatlantic voyage to test "whether or not they can safely violate a law for which they have no respect?"

Shall we say that the criminal classes are right because there are millions of people, young and otherwise, who have no respect for property rights? . . . They accept the present situation as a challenge to their ingenuity and sporting instinct to violate a law for which they have no respect. . . . Is it possible that the bootlegger has converted some of our most respectable people to the criminal's philosophy?

Many of Dr. Butler's supporters would be among the very first to seek his removal if, instead of arguing ardently against the prohibitory law, he argued against the laws maintaining the right of property. What has aroused criticism of Dr. Butler is, not that he opposes prohibition, but that he has seemed to place his opposition on grounds which are destructive of all law.—"The Outlook."

BLOSE.

Mrs. Elizabeth Blose was born April 1, 1844, and died May 11, 1924, aged 80 years, 1 month and 10 days. Sister Blose was a faithful member of the New Hope Christian Church, as was also her husband. She was left a widow about twelve years ago, after which time she lived with her children. The last few years of her life were spent as an invalid in the home of a daughter, Mrs. J. C. Armentrout, near Harrisonburg.

Funeral services were held May 13, 1924, at Keezletown Methodist Church, by the writer, assisted by Rev. C. L. Potter, of the Methodist Church, and the body laid to rest by the side of her husband in the cemetery nearby.

Newer Form of Iron

Gives Strength and Energy to The Weak and Aged

The remarkable discovery of a newer form of iron has proved a blessing to thousands who were feeling the weakening effects of advancing years. To be strong, vigorous and active you must have plenty of good rich red blood of the kind that this newer form of iron helps make. It is like the iron in your blood and like the iron in spinach, lentils and apples. If you want something to quickly help make rich red blood, revitalize worn-out, exhausted nerves and give you new strength and energy, your own druggist will furnish you with a bottle of this newer form of iron, sold under the name of Nuxated Iron, and he will guarantee that if you do not feel stronger and years younger in two weeks time your money will be promptly refunded. For sale by all druggists.

To Make Rich Red Blood

Revitalize your worn-out exhausted nerves and increase your strength and endurance

take Organic Iron; not metallic iron which people usually take, but pure organic iron—Nuxated Iron—which is like the iron in your blood and like the iron in spinach, lentils and apples. One dose of Nuxated Iron is estimated to be approximately equivalent (in organic iron content) to eating one-half quart of spinach, one quart of green vegetables or half a dozen apples. It is like taking extract of beef instead of eating pounds of meat. Nuxated iron is partially predigested and ready for almost immediate absorption and assimilation by the blood, while metallic iron is iron just as it comes from the action of strong acids on small pieces of iron filings

Over 4,000,000 people annually are using Nuxated Iron. It will not injure the teeth nor disturb the stomach. A few doses will often commence to enrich your blood. Your money will be refunded by the manufacturers if you do not obtain satisfactory results.

Beware of substitutes. Always insist on having genuine organic iron—Nuxated Iron. Look for the letters N. I. on every tablet. Sold by all druggists.

NUXATED IRON

For Red Blood, Strength and Endurance

666 quickly relieves Constipation, Biliousness, Headaches, Colds and LaGrippe.

Why Drugs Fail

Many chronic diseases fail to respond to drug treatment, even in the hands of the best physicians, whereas acute diseases usually respond readily. When a disease has become chronic, drugs often seem to do as much harm as they do good, for the system rebels against them. It is just this class of cases which derive the greatest benefit from drinking Shivar, America's best stomach, liver and kidney Water. If you suffer with chronic dyspepsia, indigestion, sick headache, rheumatism, kidney or liver disease, uric poisoning or other curable conditions due to impure blood, do not hesitate to accept the Spring's liberal offer as printed below. Their records show that only two in a hundred, on the average, have reported "no benefit." This is a wonderful record from a truly wonderful Spring. Sign the following letter:

Shivar Springs,
Box 16-H, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if I report no benefit you agree to refund the price of the water in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return within a month.

WICKER.

Mr. J. B. Wicker was called home on May 12th, at the age of 62 years and 6 months. The immediate cause of his death was a stroke of paralysis, though he had been in declining health for some years. He leaves a wife, two sons, Arthur and Frank; three daughters, Mrs. Daisy Utley, Carroll May and Annie Wicker. He is also survived by an aged mother, Mrs. Susan Wicker, besides several brothers and sisters.

Several days before his death he expressed assurance of his readiness to depart and be with the Lord. May the Lord comfort the bereaved.

R. L. WILLIAMSON.

LAWRENCE.

On May 15th, the death angel called at the home of Mr. and Mrs. D. M. Lawrence, of Hickory, N. C., and bore away the spirit of little D. M., Jr., at the age of 8 days. During the few short days that the Lord lent his life to the fond parents, ties were formed that were sweet, and the breaking of which was sad.

The parents have the blessed assurance that their treasure is safe in the tender Shepherd's arms, awaiting their coming. May the Lord sustain them in their grief. Burial was at Shallow Well Church. R. L. WILLIAMSON.

BYRD.

Mrs. E. N. Byrd, of Watson, N. C., was born January 4, 1893, and died May 27, 1924. She was married to E. N. Byrd September 29, 1918. She leaves to mourn their loss a husband, one child and a number of relatives and friends. The funeral was conducted by her pastor in Mt. Zion Christian Church, of which she was a member, and her body was laid to rest in the Church cemetery.

May the Lord bless those left behind and help us all to live close to Him.

CHARACTER-BUILDING.

We are building every day
In a good or evil way,
And the structure, as it grows,
Will our inmost soul disclose.

Till in every arch and line,
All our faults and failings shine;
It may grow a castle grand,
Or a wreck upon the sand.

Do you ask what building this,
That can show both pain and bliss?
That can be both dark and fair?
Lo, its name, character.

Build it well whate'er you do;
Build it clean and high and broad;
Build it straight and strong and true;
Build it for the eye of God.

We must not forget that God is not idle when wicked men are seeking to rob Him of His glory.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By Rev. S. M. Lynam.

Some Wise Advice.—

In his will, Charles H. Baker, Mohegan Lake, N. Y., who died recently, wrote: "It is my wish that my children shall be strong and sturdy and courageous; that my boys strive for honor, fame and reasonabe competency, rather than for great fortune; that they have reverence for women; that my daughters have the ambition to be happy, helpful, true and loving wives, and to take for husbands men of character, thrift and industry rather than men of fortune or title." Mr. Baker's estate is estimated to be over $100,000. He left five thousand dollars to Cornell University.

A Death Ray Discovered.—

Grindell Matthews, an Englishman, has discovered a death ray which would be most valuable in event of a war. He has given the English government ten days in which to purchase the discovery before he offers it elsewhere. The Manchester Guardian, professedly pacifist, proposes that the government buy the discovery so as to prevent its use in war. The discovery has other peaceful values to which it could be turned. Why not use the brain-power of the world for peace instead of war? The souls of men need to be washed white "in the blood of the lamb which taketh away the sins of the world." There is no other road to lasting peace, whatever the methods we use.

The Canadian Policy.—

It is the policy of the Canadian government to select its immigrants at the source from which they come. By thus selecting them at their source, much more desirable citizens are obtained. It is said that in 1923, 72,887 immigrants entered Canada. Most of these were of the hardy, pioneer type, just the type needed for farm colonization. The Dominion of Canada has one-sixteenth of the area of the world, and about half of 1 per cent of the world's population.

The Canadian immigration policy seems a wise one, and it has worked well. It merits the careful study of American statesmen. By its adoption we might avoid such unpleasantnesses as the Japanese exclusion amendment.

A Christian Victory.—

It has frequently been difficult to realize that the missionary efforts in Japan have met with any success. In numbers of converts, they have not so much to show, but the impress that has been made upon the whole country is almost beyond measure. One of the latest indications of Christian influence is the announcement from the school officials of Tokyo that the schools of the Japanese capital will be opened one day each week to Christian teaching. We feel that this announcement is a great Christian victory, and hope that the late developments in regard to Japanese exclusion may not hinder the progress of the gospel in the East. Let every Christian pray earnestly to that end, and strive to re-establish a Christian understanding with Japan.

A Universal Christian Conference.—

A conference of representatives of all Christians is to be held at Stockholm in August, 1925. All the communions of Great Britain, and most of them on the continent and in America have given their official support to the conference. The meeting will deal with great international questions. No barriers of race or creed will be recognized.

It means much to the cause of Christianity when Christians meet together as brethren to discuss the issues of life. We cannot know each other well, and go on hating as we have. As men are brought closer together, they approach nearer the ideal of the Master, who prayed that we all might be one, as He and the Father are one.

Bryan Deserts Politics.—

William Jennings Bryan temporarily deserted politics for religion recently when he attended the one hundred and thirty-sixth general convention of the Presbyterian Church, meeting at Grand Rapids, Mich. Mr. Bryan led the fight for the fundamentalists against the modernists. Harry Emerson Fosdick was the center of attack. By a vote of 504 to 311, the Presbyterians declined to review the case against Dr. Fosdick, however, and the judicial committee only suggested that Mr. Fosdick, who is a Baptist, join the Presbyterian Church if he is to continue work in the New York Church. Other marked men were Henry Van Dyke, former minister to Holland; William P. Merrill, Brick Church, New York; Henry Sloane Coffin, Madison Avenue Church, New York; and L. Mason Clarke, First Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.

President of France Resigns.—

President Alexandre Millerand, of France, presented his resignation to the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate on June 11th. The communication reads: "I have the honor to transmit to you my resignation as President of the republic." President Millerand was forced into retirement by the same forces that defeated former Premier Raymond Poincare. The two had worked together for a drastic Nationalist policy. Millerand was elected September 23, 1920, for a seven-year term. On June 13th, the President of the French Senate, Gaston Doumergue, was elected as his successor. He will serve until September 23, 1927, filling out Millerand's unexpired term. Such radical development in the French republic amounts practically to a bloodless revolution.

How About the Children?—

According to the congressional judicial committee, eleven foreign countries have at least a minimum of fourteen years of age for boys and girls going to work, while the United States has no national law on the subject. Few States prohibit night work for both boys and girls; fourteen foreign countries do prohibit night work. China has an eight-hour day for children under seventeen; India has a six-hour day for children under fifteen, while the United States has no national law. Eleven States permit from a nine to an eleven-hour day for children under sixteen, and one State has no limit at all.

When we think of these facts we are forced to ask, "How about the children of America? Are they getting a square deal?" The children of today are to be the men and women of tomorrow, and they cannot, with childhood destroyed, be the men and women that America is going to need. It is already telling on the race. We need to safeguard the future. Ignorant parents are still too prevalent, and law must intervene. Jesus took a child and set him in the midst of them, and by that act made childhood our central concern.

A Fitting Memorial.—

A school of international relations has been proposed as a memorial to Walter Hines Page. This school would endeavor to train men for the diplomatic service of the United States. America has always been a nation of amateurs. We are now training for the professions, but we still leave citizenship as a game for amateurs. Our diplomats are not fitted for their work. They are selected because of wealth, political prominence, or because it is known that they will accept. The salary is small, entirely inadequate, and there are few, if any, trained men in the service. We have too long regarded diplomacy as a game instead of a profession. The Rogers bill, now pending in Congress, proposes to, in some sort, to remedy this condition by providing for promotion in the consular and diplomatic service, and also to provide a more adequate remuneration.

The proposed school of international relations is a fitting memorial to the greatest American diplomat of modern times. It will render a distinct service to the country and lift the diplomatic service from the status of a game to the plain of the professions. America needs genuine and well-trained men to carry forward her world leadership. Men who can and will guide wisely and rightly.

NOTES-PERSONALS

We are sorry to have to go to press this week without the usual Christian Endeavor study.

Read notices in this issue of the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions, when to go and how to get there.

The program of the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Eastern Virginia Conference appears in this week's issue of THE SUN. The Convention meets at Bethlehem Church, July 22, 23. The program portends a great Convention.

To our thinking, grown folks and little folks and all folks who read THE CHRISTIAN SUN will be enjoying Madge Moffitt's page more than any other part of the paper. Miss Madge is a genius in gripping and delighting children. Her page this week is great.

The catalogue and announcement of Bethlehem College, Wadley, Ala., is just from the press and is ready for distribution. It contains the faculty and courses of study for 1924-25, with full information. Send to the President, Dr. S. L. Beougher, for copy of catalogue.

A gift of $100,000 has just been made to Emory and Henry College of Virginia by former Governor Henry Stuart. The fund thus provided is to endow professorship for instruction in English, and to be known as the "Henry Carter Stuart Chair of English." The income from this fund is expected to supply salary for a head professor and two assistants.

Rev. J. F. Apple changes his address from Mebane, N. C., where he has resided for two years or more, to Elon College, N. C., where he is building a home as a permanent residence. Bro. Apple has a pastorate of several Churches in easy access of the college, and has a large field of usefulness in these Churches. His Churches are progressing under his wise and devoted leadership.

"The Bible is a bridge spanning the deep river of life, built of steel and concrete by inspired workmen. The foaming floods have never shaken its adamantine foundation. It has never needed repair and no one needs doubt its security. On its stone floor, worn smooth by the feet of devout pilgrims, millions have crossed on to glory and by it we must cross over if we would walk with safety."—Dr. Geo. W. McDaniel, in Supernatural Jesus.

It is learned that Rev. W. D. Harward, D. D., has handed in his resignation as pastor of our Elm Avenue Church, Portsmouth, Va., to take effect at the close of the present Conference year. Dr. Harward has done excellent work at Elm Avenue, as he always does in the field of service, and he will find that his resignation, if accepted at all, will be accepted with many and deep regrets on the part of his congregation. Any of our Churches desiring a consecrated, a loyal, and able pastor will do well to write Dr. Harward. His address is 1508 Elm Avenue, Portsmouth, Va. Dr. Harward is president of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, and his powers of scholarship and leadership are widely recognized.

If God is willing to give us great blessings in answer to prayer, we ought to be willing to wait until God is ready to bestow them. An untimely gift often is a curse and not a blessing. There was a time when the Master could not do for Peter what He wanted to do. The full blessing came to Peter when full consecration made it possible.

THE SUN is requested to announce that the pastor of Hines Chapel, Guilford County, N. C., having resigned, to take effect at the coming annual Conference, the Church is now anxious to get in touch with some pastor who will serve acceptably. If any pastor who is interested and available shall see this notice and is moved to do so, he is requested to write Committeeman P. W. Neely, or D. E. Michael, McLeansville, N. C.

"It is the intention of the Young People's Christian Endeavor at Mount Olivet Church to send you a box of cherries about tomorrow or Thursday. These people out here are splendid workers when you lead them out. I do not believe there is a more progressive Sunday School and Christian Endeavor in the Southern Christian Convention. Reports showed that we have the leading S. S. and C. E. at Mt. Olivet, in the Virginia Valley Conference."—A. R. Flowers, Dyke, Va. Thank you, Young People. "Can" them; they will be doubly appreciated.

We congratulate Bethlehem Christian College, Wadley, Ala., on having secured as its president Rev. S. L. Beougher, now pastor at Graham, N. C. By his energy, loyalty, and active service, Bro. Beougher has greatly endeared himself to the people of this vicinity, and we of North Carolina regret to see him leaving our midst. However, we feel that the right man has been secured as president of Bethlehem, and one who will undertake his task with great zeal, wisdom, and enthusiasm. Bro. Beougher has a great field of service, and we wish him and Bethlehem all happiness in this new relationship.

Rev. D. A. Long, D. D., attended the Confederate Soldiers' Reunion at Memphis, Tenn., recently and enjoyed the event immensely. On his return, he stopped at Burlington long enough to visit Dr. J. U. Newman, who is in a hospital there, slowly recovering from a serious surgical operation. In speaking of the visit, Dr. Long says: "At first I was told that I could not see Dr. Newman, as he was too weak. 'Just recovering from one of his sinking spells.' After waiting for a short time, I was admitted, but found him too weak to carry on a part of conversation. As I looked upon the frail body of this hard-worked and poorly paid man of God, I came away with the sade reflection that we have neglected to provide for our ministers and educators as we should. John Urquhart Newman may rally, and live many years longer, but his long, efficient and loyal services ought to entitle him to a living pension for the remainder of his pilgrimage."

Rev. Carl E. Gerringer, writing under date of Brown Summit, N. C., June 14th, says:

Will you kindly state in THE SUN that I have decided to give up my work here at the close of the present Conference year. The Churches composing the pastorate are Apples, Hines and Monticello, which were all served by different pastors until I came here four years ago and got them to form a group, by which arrangement each of the three Churches has two services per month."

Bro. Gerringer has sought to render faithful service and leadership in the Churches of his charge, and many will give him up as pastor with deep regret. Any field needing his services should write him at once. He has inviting offers to the school-room, but prefers active work in the ministry if his services shall be demanded. He is leaving a field of great promise and possibilities, and we trust that a capable and efficient pastor may be secured to take up the work which Bro. Gerringer is to leave. These are some of our best country Churches, and we are sure will not be without a pastor long.

A REMARKABLE EXAMPLE.

Ohio Wesleyan University, at Delaware, Ohio, has the distinction of affording one of the finest examples of consecration to the great work of education seen in modern times. The hero, and he is a hero in the truest sense of the term, is Prof. Hiram Perkins, who taught in that institution for more than fifty years and died not long ago at the age of ninety-one.

He was one of those quiet, unassuming men of whom the world takes little notice. While pupils graduated under his instruction were becoming rich and others were going out, year after year, to attain success and prominence, he plodded on quietly and satisfiedly on his little salary of $1,800. In his classes were dozens of students who wasted more money in a year than he received, and others who could have bought him out a hundred times over. He loved the good things of life as much as others, but he lived frugally, saved his money, practiced thrift, invested his savings carefully and wisely and in this manner accumulated an estate of some $300,000.

This whole sum he has left to carry on the work of enriching human minds. It is to be devoted to the purchase of a great telescope and the equipment of an observatory in connection with it. The equipment will be one of the most useful of its kind connected with any institution of learning. It comes too late to be enjoyed by the good old professor, but it offers a striking example of unselfish consecration to the cause of education and gives him an outstanding place among the unnumbered hosts of others who in the same spirit are toiling as he toiled to make life worth while for others.

THE "LOST CITIES" OF THE PLAIN.

Archeologists have met with a setback in their efforts to explore the borders of the Dead Sea, where are believed to lie the ruins of Sodom and Gomorrah, the destruction of which is narrated in the nineteenth chapter of Genesis. They have skirted the borders of the sea, and dug deeply and widely into the adjacent hills and plains; but while they have made some interesting discoveries, they have utterly failed to locate any remains that could be identified with the "Lost Cities" of the plain. In the centuries that have passed since the destruction of those wicked cities with their princes, rulers and populations, great changes have evidently taken place. The conclusion reached by the explorers is that the sea's bottom has undergone such a transformation as to render the search for the engulfed cities an exceedingly difficult, if not impossible, task. For the present at least, it has been abandoned. So complete has been the destruction that unless some new method is devised, the search will hardly be renewed.

There they lie, buried under that great inland lake which has so encreached upon the former shores as to make even the location of the entombed cities hard to conjecture. They were swallowed up in their sins, their wealth and grandeur with them, leaving not a trace behind!—Selected.

GO TO COLLEGE THIS FALL.

To the Boys and Girls Graduating from High School in the South.

I have been invited to say a few words to you upon your graduation, and it is with great pleasure that I take advantage of the columns of the Progressive Farmer to offer you a few suggestions.

I was born and reared in the South. Consequently, I have a special interest in the young people of my native section, and feel genuine sympathy with their aims and aspirations.

My well-considered advice to you is to go to college this fall. A college education will prove of infinite value to you in the rest of life.

Decide, if possible, what you wish to make of yourself. Then get the catalogs of various institutions, talk with your friends about them, and decide which one, all things considered, will give you the most helpful trainng; then go to that college.

This is an era of keen competition. The valuable prizes in life are always more nearly within the reach of the best-equipped men and women. The equipment which has often sufficed for the less-exacting demands of a previous generation and a less-complex society may now be inadequate to win success.

If every high school graduate in the South these next ten years would take a college course, it would have a profound effect upon the welfare and destiny of that great section of our common country. And if it would mean so much to the South, would not a college course mean as much or more to your success and usefulness as a citizen? I know it would.

My best wishes accompany you as you enter upon the high road of mature effort.—Wm. G. McAdoo, in Progressive Farmer.

MONUMENT FUND.

Previously acknowledged	$5.00
T. J. Holland, Ambrose, Ga.	1.00
Total received	$6.00

The Southern Convention at Norfolk, in May, decided to erect monuments at two historic spots, long neglected by us Christians. One is to be at the site of Old Lebanon Church, Surry County, Va., where all party and sectarian names were discarded by our Church ancestors and the name Christian only was adopted.

The other is the late resting-place of Rev. Jas. O'Kelly, near O'Kelly's Chapel, Durham County, N. C. We should have $2,000 with which to erect suitable markers. What will you give?

COMMITTEE ON MONUMENT.

(Judge J. F. West, chairman, Waverly, Va.; Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, secretary, Durham, N. C.; W. E. McClenny, Suffolk, Va.; J. O. Atkinson, treasurer, Elon College, N. C.)

P. S.: Bro. Holland, in making his remittance, says: "Enclosed you will find $1.00 toward erecting a monument at the grave of Bro. James O'Kelly. I would send more, but I feel that we have over two thousand good loyal Christian brethren that would like to have a part in erecting this monument. Should you fail to get the required amount, I will send you more. This should have been done long before now. A more consecrated man of God never lived. I feel that we at this time should erect a monument that would be a credit to Bro. Kelly. You have my best wishes for great success in this worthy undertaking."

LYNAM—SWANSON.

Wednesday, June 18th, at 10 o'clock A. M., a beautiful wedding was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Swanson, Wilkesboro, N. C., when their daughter, Mary Elizabeth, was married to Rev. Sion M. Lynam, of Elon College, N. C.

The marriage vows were spoken before an improvised altar in the living-room, which was tastefully decorated in green and white. The wedding music was rendered by Mr. J. C. Holbrook, cousin of the bride, and Mrs. R. E. Prevette. Mrs. Holbrook sang sweetly, "Oh! Promise Me," by Nevin, and "The Sweetest Story Ever Told," by Stults. During the ceremony, Mrs. Prevette played "Venetian Love Song," by Nevin.

Rev. Milton McNeil, great-uncle of the bride, performed the marriage service, the ring ceremony being used. The wedding ring has been in the groom's family through four generations, this being the fifth bride to receive it. The flower girls—Beatrice Swanson, sister of the bride, and Virginia Swanson, the bride's niece—were daintily dressed in white organdy and carried baskets of sweet peas. The ringbearer, little Thomas Swanson, brother of the bride, carried the ring on a white-satin pillow. The bride, a beautiful brunette, was lovely in her wedding gown of white duchess satin, with rose point lace trimming and tulle veil, with orange blossoms. Her only ornament was a platinum bar pin, the gift of the groom.

Immediately after the ceremony, a buffet luncheon was served the guests, there being present only members of the immediate families and a few intimate friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Lynam left at noon for Goldston, N. C., where they will spend the summer. After September 15th, they will be at home in Wadley, Ala., where they will both be members of the faculty of Bethlehem College.

Mrs. Lynam, the oldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Swanson, of Wilkesboro, is an A. B. graduate of Elon College, class of '23, and for the past year has been a member of the faculty of the Wilkesboro High School. She is a young woman of unusual intellectual gifts and a most pleasing personality.

Mr. Lynam, son of Mr. and Mrs. G. H. Lynam, of Durham, N. C., is an A. M. graduate of Elon College, an able minister of the Christian denomination, and a gifted writer. At present he is news editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

TURNING DOWN "EASY MONEY."

One of my neighbors came to me the other day and asked my opinion of a financial proposition in which he had been urged to invest. He had a letter and a circular describing the project in glowing terms and promising impossible profits. I told him to pay no attention to it, but he had been much enthused by the eloquent language and was plainly peeved by my decision. For there are many people in this world who when they ask advice really seek approval and resent an adverse opinion.

"Why!" he exclaimed; "how can you talk like that? They promise a 20 per cent return and they wouldn't dare do that if they couldn't make good!"

"Oh, wouldn't they!" I replied; "it is to laugh. Did you ever hear of the man who promised another man a fine puppy dog of a certain breed? A friend who had heard the conversation remonstrated, saying: 'How can you promise that man a pup? You don't own a dog of any kind.' 'Well,' replied the other; 'I might own a dog some day, and it might have pups. Anyhow, it's a poor man who wouldn't promise a friend a pup.'

"And that is the way with a lot of these snide stock operators, particularly of the oil and mining variety. They will promise anything, apparently on the assumption that they might strike a gusher or a bonanza some day, and in that event be forever justified by making good on a promise which they never hoped to be able to fulfill in the first place."

However, he was disappointed with my verdict just the same. He said: "But it might come true. This might be just the one lucky instance."

"All right," I replied. "Have it your own way, but I am surprised at such an attitude on your part. Here you are, a farmer, and a good one, too. You have made and laid away some money. You know good land and all about live stock and you have a marketing system that works out well. Now, just suppose somebody wanted you to invest in a distant piece of land and told you that twice the quantity of crops could be raised on that land than had ever been raised on a similar piece before; would you invest your money in it? You know you would not. Or suppose a smart-aleck salesman came along and offered you a flock of baby chicks and guaranteed that every one of them would lay two eggs a day as soon as it grew up. Would you buy them? You would not.

"Before you bought a farm you would investigate every last acre of it. You would send samples of its soil to the government and ask advice, as you have a right to do, on its producing quality and what sort of crops it would raise best. You would test the fences and make sure that they were hog-tight. You would examine the barn and see if it were proof against storms, and if its general arrangements were good. And, if you were sensible, you would let your wife pass judgment on the house and find out if she thought it could be made into a home. But you would not invest one cent in it at all unless you found the proposition was sound and you were sure of a reasonable return on your investment. And yet you want me to advise you to put your money into a proposition you know nothing about! Don't do it!

"Place your money for investment with some reputable concern whose integrity is of long standing. It is the safest way. Such houses may not promise such big returns, but what they do promise is reasonably sure of fulfillment. For they investigate the ins and outs and the safeguards of the bonds and stock issues offered by them for sale just as you would investigate those of a farm you intended to buy. It is their business to do so and their reputation depends on the accuracy of their judgment."

"Well," he answered reluctantly; "guess you're right. But it is hard to give up a dream of easy money."

"There is no such thing as easy money," I replied. "We surely have to pay in full for everything we get in this world."—Theodore Waters.

The Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions has announced that it closed the year ending April 1, 1924, with total receipts for all purposes of $5,167,780, the largest contributions ever received in its history. It was thus enabled not only to cover all of its running expenses for the year, but to cut an accumulated deficit of $657,187 to 28,-621.

A school of European travel and university study is to be opened for college students in 1924-25 in connection with the main foreign universities and educational centers. Students will travel from one university to another, as did the medieval students, observing and studying at the same time.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE RIGHT OF PRIVATE JUDGMENT.

The fifth plank in the Christian's platform is: "The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all."

Possibly nothing has done so much to create cism and division in the Christian world as the attempt on the part of some to lord it over the consciousness of others. Most are willing to have proper judgment, and all wish the liberty of conscience in need of moral and spiritual decisions. Yet, strange to say, many are not willing to grant this to others. We are too quick to judge what another must believe or must not believe in things that are not actually essential. Paul realized this, and in Romans 14:4 writes: "Who art thou that judgest another man's servant? to his own master he standeth or falleth." The same writer, in Gal. 5:13, again cautioned his readers, saying: "Brethren, ye have been called unto liberty; only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another." It not infrequently happens that love is larger than intellect or reason. When we try to decide for others, we often restrict ourselves and them for the exercise of intellect and without the display of love. I have my judgment and exercise liberty of conscience about baptism or communion or Church government. This is a matter of the intellect or sheer reason or decision. Love leaps over such narrow confines and permits many to enjoy the fellowship and Christian devotion of another whose judgment or reason leads him to a different conclusion as touching these matters.

We are to live in the large sphere and circle of love; we are to labor; we are to direct our energies; we are to give our life to this larger circle that love creates. Our Saviour would have us do this. He is our example. That which concerned Him most was the manifestation, the love power, the saving grace of love.

If one will look at this principle properly, one will discover that it is fundamental. One is only that which one fully appropriates and thoroughly believes and digests. That is to say, one reserves for one's self liberty of conscience. It matters little what the Church to which you belong believes—the question is what does the individual believe and hold to? This is that which tells in one's life. The Christian Church, in this principal, declares that which every individual Christian actually and positively lives by.

I shall exercise my liberty of conscience and the right of private judgment. No human being can take that from me. The same is true of you, and you, and you. We may give some sort of assent to a general creed or polity, but that which is fundamental with every follower of Jesus Christ is the liberty of conscience and the right of private judgment. We just simply and naturally exercise that right whether anybody on earth grants it to us or not. We cannot help it, for it is fundamental to us.

MISSIONS ARE NOT BENEVOLENCES.

Not a few pastors, unnumbered laymen, and very many budget-makers, and about all apportionment committeemen place missions among the Church benevolences. That is enough to make the angels weep. Missionary money, gifts to benevolence? May the dear Lord have mercy on us! Is it benevolent to obey? Is it benevolent to perform a plain and known duty? The most emphatic command, the most vital demand our Saviour made of His followers was the missionary command. Is it benevolent on the part of the child to obey his parents? Is it benevolent on the part of children to meet the demands of their parents and live up to the claims of filial obligations?

I do not believe that missions is a benevolent enterprise of the Church; and the real reason why we have so little for the benevolences is because we make missions only one among other benevolences of the Church. Our Church officials make the fatal blunder of putting the one thing for which the Church exists among the benevolences. "In other words," Bishop Thoburn used to say, "Christians are importuned to be kind enough and good enough to assist Jesus Christ with a passing contribution as He marches on His way to the conquest of the world. This is very dangerous trifling with a very serious matter." This, to obey, is the very life, the very duty, the very soul of filial well-being, happiness and existence.

Now, shall we, as children of our Heavenly Father and His Holy Son, lay aside our solemn duty, our filial relationship, our sacred obligation, and in their place substitute an occasional or incidental act of benevolence, and then think that God will hold us guiltless? I say that this is trifling with a very serious matter, whether we intend it as such or not.

Jesus Christ planted and left His Church in the world for the sole and supreme purpose of completing the work commenced by Himself. He sent His followers—that is to say, His Church—into the world, even as the Father had sent Him. And to accomplish this work, He maintains His Church. And only in proportion as the Church gives itself to this end has it the right to claim or expect His approval, His power, His presence. "To obey is better than sacrifices, and to hearken than the fat of rams." Until the Church obeys the voice of God, it may expect slow growth, little increase, and poverty in all its benevolences.

The Church that disobeys the great commission thwarts our Saviour's purpose and puts itself in a false position before the world.

I look at Calvary on the one hand, the bleeding Christ, with His message, hanging there; and at the countless Christless millions on the other hand scattered out from Him over the broad face of the earth. How is that saving message of His to reach and redeem these countless Christless millions? What medium does He choose through which to get His saving gospel told? He created and He chose for this medium not a body of seraphs, not a bevy of angels, not a host of saints; but the Church! This was the sole agency, the single medium, through which He, the risen Christ, in the realization of all power, was to reach and redeem the countless millions. Why Christ chose a body of believers which we call the Church, instead of a body of seraphs, saints or angels to be His heralds of glad tidings, you and I may never know. It must suffice for us to see and say that He did so. I only wish that we might realize as a part of that body of believers what solemn obligations, what grave responsibilities that places upon us. I do not mean to say that in the great commission, Christ shifted the responsibility of saving the world from His shoulders to ours. But I do mean to say that He, in going away from the world, called His disciples into His fellowship, and made them and us coworkers together with Him, and the success of His cause depends upon the co-operation and obedience of His co-workers. I say, then, that, for us to refuse to hold up Calvary to the whole world, is to make His message of love and of saving power to no effect, so far as the great mass of mankind is concerned. To carry out our Lord's great command to us is not benevolence! It is the fulfilling of a plain duty as an act of obedience; it is sharing His burden, that we may know His blessings and rejoice in His victories.

II. IN GOD'S TOMORROW.

Have you ever experienced some crushing disappointment in life, and you have tried every way in vain to satisfy yourself why you were not permitted to carry out your plans? Your plans were thwarted, your hopes thrown to the ground. And as you brooded over your disappointment, at first a spirit of rebellion against God, against man, and even against your better self began to lay hold of you. You could not reconcile yourself to the situation. But then, perhaps, in the dim light of the afterday, you were able faintly, oh! very faintly, to discern some possible value of the disappointment. And now, as you look back upon the experience through the light of the years that have passed between, you are able perhaps now to see that the disappointment, the trial, the seemingly excruciating experience, was truly a blessing in disguise. And in "God's Tomorrow" you will fully understand.

You wanted your way at the time, but your way was not God's way, and if you had had your way, disaster and even disgrace might have followed. Truly, "there is a divinity that shapes our ends, rough-hew them as we will." "Thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter." We do not understand today, but in "God's Tomorrow" we shall understand the meaning of all our disappointments and all our trials, the meaning of all our miscarried plans.

How comforting those words ought to be to those who are weighed down by the heavy burden of sorrow! When a mother lays the idol of her heart in the grave, and the sky of her whole life has been darkened, to her the world has come to an end, and she asks the question over and over and over again: "Why—why—why?" And the only answer that seems to come is the echo of her cry. Truly, there should be a healing balm and a comforting hope in the response of Jesus to her inquiring mind in the words, "Thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know in 'God's Tomorrow.'"

One of the best examples of the benefit of being able to resign oneself to one's disappointments, and to bear the sorrows of life even with a cheerful heart, is a woman I know who lives in a Western State. In her childhood, the loss of her mother stunned her childish heart, and as a little girl of ten summers left alone in the world without a mother or father, she could not understand why she had to face life alone, and the question why she could not have a mother like other girls had so weighed upon her young mind as for a time to cause her older brothers and sisters serious alarm. But even to her young mind and heart, the promise of the words "Thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter," brought comfort and cheer; and again she faced life with a happy heart, and developed a most charming personality and a winning Christian character.

After finishing school, she became a most successful teacher, married most happily, and as her home was graced with the presence of two fine daughters and a son, it seemed as if her cup of joy was filled. And then the blow came that changed the world for her. The death at six years of her idolized boy, who was the highest joy of her mother-heart, the shrine of her fondest hopes and ambitions, seemed more than she could stand. "It broke her heart, but not her faith."

Her queenly spirit of resignation was magnificent. Her faith in God was her strong support. I asked her one day what brought her the most consolation and comfort in her crushing sorrow. And this was her answer: "Some day I'll understand," and she thought that God had need of sweet children in heaven, as they make His heart glad, and that it would not be heaven without them. And then she said that she didn't want to be selfish; if God needed him, she would be resigned to His will. But that she must live for those God left her, and in loving memory of the one that was gone, she must give her life in the service to others. This was her consolation: "Christ will help me now, and some day I will understand." "Thou knowest not now, thou shalt know hereafter." Her anchor of faith held in the dark storm. How much better than to have let go, and drifted against the rocks of unbelief!

So in every experience in life, it is ours to follow on, no matter how dark the path. The future will explain.

There are many experiences that drive men and women to the wilderness of despondency when the light of faith ceases to shine in their soul. But the words of the text should be a constant challenge to us always to press on. Some time, somewhere in "God's Tomorrow" we shall know the meaning of all that befalls us here.

Persons who have suffered financial reverses may find it difficult to understand the misfortune that befell them. Why could not they have continued to prosper as others do? Such should not forget that prosperity is not always a blessing—it often has proved a curse. Prosperity always is a curse if it causes men and women to forget their God, and to neglect His claims upon their lives. But there are some people whom God cannot trust with prosperity, and there are some whom He has trusted, but they have betrayed His trust. He trusted them with prosperity, thinking that they would honor Him and His kingdom with their prosperity, and they have selfishly failed their God. But let any person who has experienced financial reverses understand that, even though he may have lost all his earthly goods, he can still have God, and in having Him he has all. And the soul is worth more than all the world beside. Moreover, often financial reverses prove in the end to be material as well as spiritual advancement. Many are the families for whom the whole course of life has been changed for all its members by the fact of readjustments that were demanded by reason of loss of property. Boys and girls in such families have often developed into the noblest type of manhood and womanhood because of having been thrown out upon their own resources, whereas otherwise they might have made a shipwreck of life.

Whatever one's misfortune may be, whatever his disappointment, he should not forget that often man's disappointment is God's appointment for something better. We cannot understand it now, but some day we will understand. Is it some sickness, some accident, that has befallen you, some handicap? "Thou knowest not the meaning of it now, but in 'God's Tomorrow' you will understand." The person who has been betrayed by a friend in whom he trusted, in whom he felt he could confide, and who cannot understand why he should suffer such undeserved betrayal, such a person should find consolation in Jesus' promise. Some people have been betrayed by friends, others have been disappointed in love because promises accepted in good faith were not kept, and the words "Thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter" should bring comfort and solace to every betrayed heart, for in "God's Tomorrow," when all things are explained, they will understand that it was better so.

Whatever our sorrows or disappointments may be, we should look for the light beyond the darkness. "Trust thou in God"—only by looking to Him can brightness come and the shadows flee away.

Many of the things we prize the most in life are to us what the toy blocks are to the child. They are the best things for him because they are all he has experienced. Later he will change them for something more useful. Life is but a toy for many people. To them it is simply something to play with, something to enjoy. But the person who looks upon life as an opportunity to honor and glorify God by using it in loving service to humanity, realizes that this life is but the vestibule into the larger life that lies ahead for those who put their trust in Christ. We cling to life because it is the best thing we know; but there is another existence, another life, another world so much better that awaits those who give their lives in the service of God here below that the two existences cannot be compared. Artists have tried to picture the beauties of heaven, poets have sung of its streets of gold, but "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man the things that God hath prepared for them that love Him." But the greatest joy of all will be the capacity to know all things, even as we are known, and to be able to understand even as all along we have been understood. We know not now, but we shall know in "God's Tomorrow."

There are many things that will remain dark to us here below. The world, with its confusions and problems, baffles our hearts, and fills our minds with dismay; but we shall know, and we shall understand in "God's Tomorrow."

ELON COLLEGE AND ALAMANCE COUNTY.

Editor O. F. Crowson, of the Burlington News, likes Elon College, and says so. He lives close enough by, and knows Alamance as few others, so that he knows what he is talking about. Read what he has to say in the News of June 13th:

"There are about four hundred colleges in the United States, and one of them is situated in our county. We are proud of our college, and when a little more than a year ago its main building went up in smoke, our citizens, headed by the late R. L. Holt, proposed to raise $100,000 to put the building back, provided Elon's friends elsewhere would raise $200,000 for additional improvements.

"Our college accepted the challenge and raised far more money than they proposed, and instead of spending $300,000 for buildings, Elon will spend on her five new buildings practically $600,000. We do not hesitate to say that no college anywhere will be better equipped for work than Elon, right at our doors, our own college. No wonder the boys and girls of Alamance are signing up in greater numbers than ever before for Elon! They ought to, and are wise in doing so.

"The five new buildings are the Alamance Administration Building, the Whitley Auditorium (which also houses the School of Music), the Carlton Library, with capacity of nearly 200,000 volumes, the Duke Science Building, and the Christian Education Building, the social and religious center of the campus. These five buildings are rapidly forging toward completion. They with the other buildings not destroyed by the fire, as we have said, fit our college to serve our young people with the best.

"The Elon rebuilding program has been the talk of our county for more than a year. No college ever arose so triumphantly from its ashes as Elon has. There is a reason for it. Elon has served in our midst for thirty-four years. We know the kind of men and women she produces—preachers like Dr. Lankford and Dr. Fleming; farmers like Edgar Long, Ross Walker and Andrew Maynard; lawyers like John Cook, D. R. Fonville, Dolph Long and J. Elmer Long; doctors like Charlie McPherson, J. C. Wilkins, Bob Walker and Charlie Walters; business men like Alf Simpson, Walter Brown, Will May, Claude Fonville, Vitus Holt, Will Graham, Roy Malone and Marvin McPherson; teachers like Dr. Lawrence, M. E. Terrell and Coach Dabbs; college presidents like Dr. Harper, and wives like his and many others we could name.

"These people live right here among us. We know them, and we like them. Elon is popular in Alamance because Alamance knows the Elon product in useful citizenry. "By their fruits ye shall know them," said Jesus. We can judge Elon by her fruits, and that is why Alamance came to Elon's aid when the fire threatened her existence."

HOME-COMING AT DAMASCUS.

On the third Sunday in August, 1924, there will be a home-coming at Damascus Christian Church. This is the first home-coming in the history of the Church. All members, former members, both of our denomination and those who are now members of other Churches, are requested to be present. It is the desire of the Church that all former pastors, as well as those who are and have been members of the Church, be with us.

The program will be announced in THE SUN later. It is the beginning of a series of meetings, however, and we hope as many will plan to stay throughout the week as possibly can. Let us all pray for a great day and revival.

JOSEPH E. MCCAULEY.

A CORRECTION.

In the printed credits for amounts paid on Men and Millions in May, THE SUN gave a $2.00 credit to Cypress Chapel. It should have read $20.00. We regret the error, which occurred in the printing.

Secretary.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Southern Christian Convention, at its last session in Norfolk, Va., elected Revs. Drs. L. E. Smith, J. O. Atkinson and me as fraternal delegates to the Afro-Christian Convention, meeting in Baltimore, Md., June 15-20, 1924. It was a matter for regret to Drs. Smith and Atkinson, to me and both of the Conventions, that they could not attend. This made it all the more necessary for me to go, and I did; and I had a great experience. I went up on the Chesapeake steamer on Monday night, June 16th, and reached Baltimore at 7 A. M.

Mr. B. C. Eley, Jr., wired me before I left Suffolk that he would meet me upon the arrival of the boat. Sure enough, he did, with a big Packard car and an Armenian chauffeur. He carried me out for a big city drive, out to the Baltimore Country Club for breakfast. That Country Club has nearly 3,500 members, with initial fee of seventy-five dollars—quite a quarter of a million. I saw them start a golf game for the first time in my life. From a child I never had any interest in games; and since so many big men have fallen out on the golf links, I have decided not to enter that game. Mr. Eley is a Chuckatuck man, who, with three other brothers, seem to handle, in large part, the immense wholesale dry goods business of Rouse, Hempstone & Co., Inc., in Baltimore. Mr. Eley has been also among the financial friends of Elon College.

I reached the First People's Church at 9 o'clock on Tuesday morning, in time for the interesting devotional services. The Church in which the Convention was held is a splendid building, with Sunday School additions, and will seat more than 500. The pews are cushioned. They have a pipe-organ and piano. Rev. C. Ed Brown, D. D., is the pastor. They served dinner in the basement of the Church, and did not fail to serve it with good colored cooking. There is another colored Christian Church in Baltimore which, I was told, is about as large as this one.

Rev. S. A. Howell, D. D., of Newport News, Va., is the president, and that means good order and fair treatment. This biennial session was well attended, especially by ministers and women. Laymen everywhere need some real training in layman-obligations to Conferences and Conventions. Laymen are generally active in the local Churches, but think they do not have time to go much beyond the home Church.

President Howell introduced me to the Convention, and they received me graciously. I delivered the excuses of Drs. Smith and Atkinson, and the fraternal greetings of the Southern Convention the best I could, all of which was responded to by the Rev. Dr. Watson. By invitation, I delivered a more extensive address on general Church enterprises and topics at a later hour, and listened with great interest to addresses, discussions and spiritual songs as only colored people can sing them. I think the Convention appreciated most of all the kindly and fraternal feeling of the Southern Christian Convention in sending a message to them. When fully understood, the most cordial and Christian relations exist between white and colored members of the Church in all denominations, and I know it is so in the Christian Church.

W. W. STALEY.

ELON LETTER.

Not so long since, THE SUN editorially gave an account of the splendidly successful business career of W. F. Corwith, of Brooklyn, Elon's devoted friend and loyal trustee. The story was there told of his rise from office boy to be the founder of one of the best real estate and insurance firms in Greater New York.

On June 6th he rounded out the fiftieth year of his business, begun under his father's name, because, as a lad, the law did not permit him to do business in his own name. Some days before the golden anniversary celebration, Bro. Corwith slipped and fell, spraining his ankle. He had to attend the celebration held in his honor on crutches, but you may rest assured he never made any reference to their necessity. He is a most inspiring illustration of resignation to God's dispensations I have any knowledge of.

The Brooklyn papers carried nearly a half-page account of the festive event which his employees staged in his honor, and, with the story of the occasion, a large cut of the face of our gentle and genial friend. The banquet was held on June 7th, at the Chamber of Commerce Club, and was presided over by Dr. George D. Hamlin. Many congratulatory speeches were made, the most noteworthy being by George H. Rowe, editor of the Greenpoint Star, a paper the firm had advertised with in every issue for forty-nine years. It is safe to say no statement was ever made in any of these advertisements that did not exactly tally with the truth. Corwith Bros., the firm name, is built on honesty, integrity, and the principle of a legitimate charge for a genuine service rendered. These cardinal business and Christian virtues explain the firm's long and honorable career.

The honoree was presented by his employees with a beautiful gold watch, with suitable inscription. He, in turn, presented each of his long list of employees with a present in memory of the anniversary and in token of apprecation for faithful service rendered.

It was characteristic of the man that, in the moment of his joy, he should thus endeavor to make others glad by giving them unexpected gifts. It was also characteristic of him that he should attribute his firm's success to his brother, who deceased last summer and whom he associated with him as a firm member some years previous. There is no doubt he felt exactly as he spoke relative to the matter, when he said: "It is the cause of the deepest sorrow to me that my brother, L. G. Corwith, did not live to participate in this celebration, as it would also have commemorated the fiftieth anniversary of his connection with me in the various capacities of office boy, clerk, manager, copartner, and vice-president of the corporation. The present successful condition of the corporation was due to his efforts, coupled with the loyal support of present and former employees."

"I never heard any man say a harmful word of W. F. Corwith," said a banker to me some months ago; a banker who had known him for many years. Life is rich in the personal knowledge of and fellowship with such a man. Long may he live to manage his business and exemplify the Christian virtues in noble, yet humble living.

W. A. HARPER.

MUNCIE (IND.) LETTER.

Our people this way who read THE CHRISTIAN SUN are especially delighted with Dr. Harper's article in last issue, replying to Rev. B. A. Abbott, editor of the Christian-Evangelist in his attempted "Correction." To our people in the Middle West, it is peculiarly interesting to hear the editor of the Christian-Evangelist say that his error was due to the fact that many of the Churches of the Disciples of Christ are known as Christian Churches, "especially in the South," when in fact they are appropriating our denominational name vastly more in this section of country than in the South. While this writer was pastor at Newport News, Va., a few years ago, the Disciples of Christ held their national convention at Norfolk, Va., and in their programs, printed in pamphlet form, some of the first pages were devoted to "History," in which they claimed our origin and history, including James O'Kelly. My attention was called to the matter by a Methodist layman during the time of that convention, who gave me a copy of the program, which was sent to the editor of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, the late Dr. Barrett, and the matter was given due attention in the Herald; but if it ever made a slight dent on their course in the matter it was never seen. The reader may possibly understand why I am especially interested, when the following is known:

Just three blocks away from our Church here, the Disciples of Christ have a large and influential Church, with great numbers and prestige in the city, and among them are many very fine Christian men and women. It is known as the Jackson Street Christian Church. Our Churches are numerous throughout the country around Muncie, and great numbers of our young people coming to the city to locate in business or the professions, or to enter school, being strangers and not knowing the difference, are swept into the Disciples Church, thinking that it is our denomination. It is not only true of young people, but of adults and whole families as well. By the time they discover the difference, or their mistake, they have become settled and fitted in some cir- Only last week, while attending the State Conference and made to feel at home, and are lost to us. ence at Winona, a prominent layman of our Church told me that his two daughters had recently come to Muncie and entered the normal college, and that he had just learned that they had been taken into the Disciples Church, thinking it was their own denomination, and he seemed greatly exercised over the matter. The pastor of that Church has always, in my presence, in his public utterances spoken of his Church as Disciples of Christ. But the lay membership of that denomination are taught by their leaders and such literature as the Christian-Evangelist that Christian is their denominational name. The situation does our cause here in this city a very great injustice, and while this particular situation is a local instance, it seems very general in many sections of the country. I am advised that, in pioneer days, great numbers of our Churches about Richmond, Va., were swept by th Diseiples of Christ. If we have a message for the world, our denominational loyalty should prompt us to make some final and effective effort to change the situation. But would it not be very fine if the two bodies could get together as one, and then give the glory to Christ, instead of to either of the bodies?

Muncie, Ind. MURDOCK W. BUTLER.

Jesus climbed many mountains when He was in the flesh, but the greatest height He scaled was when He climbed Calvary's cross and taught men the glory of sacrifice.

REV. JAMES O'KELLY'S GRAVE.

As has been stated in THE SUN, a committee was appointed at the last session of the Convention to establish proper memorials to Old Lebanon Church, Surry County, Va., and to Rev. James O'Kelly, whose remains lie buried in Chatham County, N. C.

On Thursday, June 19th, Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, secretary of the committee; J. O. Atkinson, treasurer of the committee, and, by special invitation, Dr. and Mrs. W. A. Harper and Superintendent C. D. Johnston, Elon College, N. C., went to the grave of O'Kelly, that the situation might be realized as it is, and that a council might be had as to what should be done. We found the grave of O'Kelly, a great founder and leader, in an out-of-way place and very much and very long neglected. He was buried on a farm, which we presume was owned by himself at the time of his death. This farm has long since passed out of the hands of the family and is now owned by a colored man who resides in Durham, N. C., but who rents it out to a colored family who lives in the house right near the cemetery. We found in this cemetery, beside the O'Kelly grave and marker, a stone bearing this inscription, "Aurelia D. Fowler, wife of Eld'r T. J. Fowler, born December 23, 1804; died November 27, 1865." Another stone bore the inscription, "Thomas J. Herndon, born September 21, 1808; died August 27, 1890." "Velina B. Herndon, wife of T. J. Herndon, born September 15, 1811; died May 8, 1885." Another bore the inscription, "Eugenia T. Herndon, born July 17, 1855; died January 10, 1868." Still another, "Mary J. Herndon, wife of Joseph B. Cole, born July 29, 1838; died July 8, 1884."

The granite marker at the head of the O'Kelly grave is about seven feet high and about eighteen inches square at the base. It bears the following inscription: "Erected by his Christian friends to the memory of James O'Kelly, of North Carolina. The Southern champion of Christian freedom." On this stone is no date either of birth or death; only the words given above. There are many unmarked graves in the cemetery, which is surrounded by a dilapidated rock wall originally about two feet high, and enclosing about twenty square yards. Thick beds of ivy, intermixed with other wild vines and shrubbery, obscure most of the graves and give the entire cemetery the appearance of indifference and neglect. On our return trip we visited the nearest living relative of Rev. James O'Kelly, namely, a great-granddaughter, Mrs. Dr. N. B. York, Mebane, N. C., who is a sister of the late lamented Rev. Dr. W. T. Herndon.

The committee and those with whom council in the matter has been had are of the unanimous opinion thatt he remains of O'Kelly, if any can be found, should be exhumed and reinterred in the cemetery at Elon College, and that a suitable bronze tablet, properly worded, should be placed to the memory of O'Kelly in the rotunda of the Administration Building of the college. The committee would be pleased to have suggestions from any of THE SUN readers.

Now, something must be done. The committee feels that the present neglected condition of the O'Kelly burying-ground is a reflection upon the denomination. Here is one out of whose great mind and noble soul sprang the Christian Church in its modern form and polity. Yet the Church has been indifferent to his resting-place in a large measure and very, very few have ever visited or will ever likely visit the out-of-way place at which his remains rest. True his monument is imperishable in the lives and characters of the thousands who cherish his name and are richer and happier because of his great life. This does not justify us in longer neglecting to our shame and humiliation the remains of this great man of God and of the Church.

It will take a good sum—possibly $1,000—to do what should be done in removing the remains and establishing the marker. Let all CHRISTIAN SUN readers who wish to remove this humiliation from our history, send a contribution to the treasurer, and it will be acknowledged in THE SUN. It has been said that no people ever live higher than their esteem and respect for their ancestors. Our Church shall have glory in the future only as it properly honors and respects the good and the great of the past who have made the Church what it is.

WHY THE STRIFE?

There are very clear teachings in the Scriptures concerning the second coming of our Lord. These statements furnish a common ground of belief and basis of agreement between the premillenarian and the postmillenarian. These Scriptures suggest that there should be no strife between parties on this question, inasmuch as these statements go really as far as we are permitted to go, and the premillenarians and the postmillenarians can and do practically agree on these statements.

The effort to specify and relate each individual prophecy to some event connected with our Lord's return, or to enter into elaborate details fixing a time and formulating a schedule, has often resulted in driving many away from belief in this "blessed hope." The premillenarians and the postmillenarians are equally learned and devout men, who greatly love the Word of God and are eager and anxious to discover the truth and to teach what they severally believe to be the mind of the Spirit. The following statements contain the essential teachings of the Scriptures in regard to our Lord's return:

1. Jesus Christ will come a second time to this earth. Both the Old Testament and the New Testament often state this fact. In the New Testament, this coming is promised or referred to either directly or indirectly over 300 times.

2. He will come in the same resurrection body in which He went up into heaven. "This Jesus who was received up from you into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye beheld him going into heaven."—Acts 1:11.

3. He will come for certain purposes—

(a) To raise the righteous dead.—1 Thess. 4:16.

(b) To transfigure the living saints.—1 Thess. 4:17.

(c) To gather the elect Jewish remnant from the ends of the earth.—Rom. 11:26; Old Testament, passim.

(d) To judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he has ordained.—Acts 17:31.

(e) To consume the final anti-Christ.—2 Thes. 2:8.

(f) To bind Satan and cast him into the abyss. —Rev. 20:2-3.

It is evident that these events will consume much time. Latitude should be allowed for difference of view. It is not wise to attempt to arrange the exact order of the details of unfulfilled prophecy. There is an order in which all of these predicted events will occur. We may not understand the schedule of the divine chronology, but all things will be accomplished on time according to the purpose of Almighty God. It is enough for us to know that one jot or one tittlt shall in no wise pass away until all be fulfilled.

NOTE.—On a recent visit to Rev. Dr. A. W. Pitzer, pastor-emeritus of the Central Presbyterian Church, on the occasion of his eighty-ninth birthday, we read together many passages of Scripture and talked about them. This brief statement is the outcome of our comparison of views; and we decided to write it out and submit it as an eirenic offer.—Rev A. W. Pitzer, Rev. Jas. H. Taylor, in Presbyterian Standard.

"One star differeth from another star in glory," says Holy Writ, and certainly one is chief of them all. This is Venus—the brightest star in the heavens, now again our beautiful evening star, shining large and clear in our Western skies as soon as the dusk becomes intense enough to reveal its presence. Venus is a sister planet to our earth, lighted by our sun, and is practically the same size as the earth. It is unique not only for its brilliance, but also because we never see it except either as an evening star within the period of three hours after sunset or as a morning star not more than three hours before sunrise.—Progressive Farmer.

Be not deceived: God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting. And let us not be weary in well doing; for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not.—Gal. 6:7-9.

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

MEN AND MILLIONS.

Chairman J. E. West, of the Mission Board of the Southern Convention, analyzes elsewhere in THE SUN the collections on Men and Millions in April and May. We trust the pastors and the captains will take note of this analysis as made by Lieutenant-Governor West. There is not any trouble in collecting Men and Millions where the people know how much they owe and are kept advised as to the movement and its importance.

We marvel at the indifference of many as touching this great movement, and fail to understand how any one, and most especially any pastor, who even pretends to love the Christian Church could show this indifference to Men and Millions. Men and Millions stands for and undertakes the work of the Christian Church here in the South. It is identified with and stands for all the Christian Church undertakes. When one pays one's pledge to Men and Millions, one is simply praying that the Christian Church may go forward in its work along every line of its divine endeavor.

We wish with all our hearts that pastors and captains could realize this salient truth and understand the importance of it. If we cannot co-operate in Men and Millions, it is difficult to see how we can co-operate in anything. People of the Christian Church wearing the divinely appointed name and having a divinely appointed creed, namely: the Word of God, should of all people, be most loyal to their own and co-operate in every task of kingdom's service. Men and Millions is our movement; it is our cause; it is our Church functioning. If we love the Church, surely we will do our best for Men and Millions. We trust that many laymen will catch the fine spirit of Chairman West, and that all who read THE SUN will this week read what he has to say.

J. O. ATKINSON.

APRIL, 1924.

April collections for Men and Millions amounted to $3,034.12. Some individuals and Churches are determined to pay their obligations, and some cannot pay, and some are indifferent.

Holy Neck, in Eastern Virginia, leads for the month. This is a great Church, with a glorious history. Waverly and Liberty Spring also make a good showing. Wake Chapel leads in North Carolina. It has a good name, and will no doubt pay its apportionment.

Forty-eight Churches in the Southern Convention report collections for April. Did you notice how the Churches in Valley of Virginia and Georgia and Alabama Conferences are reporting? There is interest all through the Convention. Let us pray for a still greater interest.

J. E. WEST, Chairman.

MAY, 1924.

Twenty-eight Churches in Eastern Virginia, 10 in Valley of Virginia, 28 in North Carolina, and 8 in Georgia and Alabama Conferences—a total of 74 Churches in Southern Convention—reported collection for May. This is fine! Let other Churches report from time to time. There is not a Church so poor that some member cannot pay his or her own subscription. I hope there is not a Church so indifferent to the work of the kingdom as not to make a contribution to Men and Millions.

I am glad to see Franklin take a lead in Eastern Virginia, Burlington in North Carolina, Winchester in Valley of Virginia, and Noonday in Georgia and Alabama. I hope that all captains will report all collections for June and let us make a good showing for June. The Church needs your help now.

J. E. WEST, Chairman.

DIRECTOR OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

The official board of the People's Christian Church, of Dover, Del., at a recent meeting, voted unanimously to employ a director of religious education to assist the pastor in the large and growing work of the Church. A committee, consisting of Mr. John B. Hutton, Sunday School superintendent, and Mrs. H. C. Taylor, teacher of a large class of intermediate girls, and Mr. Eugene Raughley, representing the official board, was appointed as a committee to co-operate with the pastor in securing a suitable person for this important position. The committee at once got in touch with Miss Martha Denison, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. W. H. Denison, of Dayton, Ohio. Her qualification in training and character won the unanimous approval of the committee, and a call was extended to her for the position. Miss Denison has accepted the position, to begin September 1st, for a year's time, as she is to take a course of graduate study in religious education at Boston University next year.

Miss Denison graduated from Defiance College this spring, having specialized in the field of religious education, coming to this important position with the highest recommendations.

An interesting item in connection with the creation of this new feature of work in People's Church is the fact that five members of the official board had been thinking along the line of the need of a director of religious education to assist in the progressive program of the Church, and none of the men realized that others were thinking along the same line. When one of the active young laymen of the board presented his convictions on the question at a recent board meeting, he found that it at once struck a responsive cord in the mind of all, four or five of the other members of the board speaking at length on the subject. Miss Denison's work will include such lines of service as conducting teacher-training classes, planning and directing the various Sunday School entertainments, pageants, etc., supervise all young people's activities, conduct daily vacation Bible school, etc.

FIELD NOTES.

I have just returned from a trip of nearly four weeks in the New Jersey and Rays Hill and Southern Pennsylvania Conferences.

Beginning at Carversville, Pa., at the New Jersey Conference, May 16th, I have visited and spoken in the following Churches: Carversville, at the Conference; New Hope, Pa.; Gulph Mills, Pa.; Finesville, N. J.; Milford, N. J.; Vanderveer Park, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Hyde Park, Brooklyn, N. Y.

This completed my work in the New Jersey Conference, and I started on Monday, May 26th, for the Rays Hill and Southern Pennsylvania Conferences. I was met at Everett by Rev. A. W. Sparks and taken by him through the itinerary mapped out by him for that Conference.

He is certainly a hard worker and a loyal upholder of the religion of Jesus Christ. Certainly no one else could have gone through a Conference and done the work he has done as could one who knew the field, because they were "mine own people." They have a saying in that Conference that "Sparks makes the auto fly, and the auto makes the Sparks fly." Certainly he needs to do some flying of some kind to cover the amount of territory he does, and even at that Mr. A. F. Foor says "his wife does not need to get a divorce for desertion; she is a widow already."

During the two weeks I spent in this Conference, I visited the following Churches: Antioch, Jerusalem, Fair View (Memorial Day services at Fair View, at which I was one of the speakers), Mt. Hope, Earlston, County Sunday School Convention at Hyndman, Pleasant Grove Church, Sunday School Convention at Mt. Union. Rev. Henry May had just arrived on the field to take charge of one of the pastorates Mr. Sparks has succeeded in forming.

A splendid forward step taken at this Sunday School Convention was the recognition of Mr. Sparks' work as field secretary and a request that he also assume some of the duties of Sunday School field secretary, in return for which the Sunday School Convention assumed a portion of his salary, the same to be raised by an apportionment from the schools of 10 cents per enrolled member. Prospects looked brighter in this Conference than they have for many years past, and with the influx of new ideas, the coming of the auto and good roads, which makes travel easier, we may hear even greater things in the future of this mountain Conference than we have done in the past.

MRS. F. E. BULLOCK.

FROM SHADY GROVE.

It is encouraging to have Prof. Flowers, pastor of Mt. Olivet Church, and some of his splendid Sunday School workers to fall in on these Sabbath afternoons and help us out in our work. We have some faithful workers at Shady Grove and some faithful attendants, and we feel that we are making splendid progress, but we highly appreciate the interest that the Mt. Olivet people and their good pastor are taking in us and our work. The desire to be of service to others in any good cause is the highest motive by which we can be prompted, and there is a place where we can be of service. You may not be as well fitted for a place as you may think somebody else to be; nevertheless, you have a capacity for helpfulness in some place, and that place you should find. No machine can work smoothly and do satisfactory work until every piece is adjusted to its particular place. The same is true of a Sabbath School. Every person in his place each Sabbath is a guarantee that your Sunday School will be a success.

W. K. GARRIS,
Superintendent.

More copies of the Bible were circulated in China and Japan in 1923 than were distributed in the United States, is the report which comes from the American Bible Society. During the past year 2,868,605 Bibles were sent to these two countries as against 2,395,000 in the United States. In the two countries combined, 770,000 more Bibles were put in circulation in 1923 than in the previous year.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

DANVILLE.

Sunday, the 15th, was a good day for us. We had the pleasure of having our dear Bro. D. P. Barrett, who now is at home from the mission field in Porto Rico for a rest. He preached for us at 11 A. M., and lectured at 3:30 P. M. and again at 8 P. M. In his lectures he told us something of the field, its needs, and the results of our investments in that field. The Sunday School was good; the congregations were good, and was especially large at 8 P. M. We were very glad to have Bro. Barrett with us. His messages did us all good. I hope he may have opportunity of meeting many of our Churches. I think it would be very suitable to give him and family a good pounding, and by this show our appreciation of the service and sacrifice he is making for our Lord's kingdom. Now, if you can't go to him and family, why just send your pounds or purse by express or parcel post. We will start it with a half-barrel of flour. Now, come on. Bro. Barrett is taking his rest at Elon College, N. C.

P. T. KLAPP.

NOTICE.

All delegates and others expecting to attend the Sunday School Convention at New Elam Christian Church by automobile, and all coming by trains will please notify us what day they will arrive. Schedule of trains: "Shufly" leaves Raleigh going South about 8:30 A. M., and arrives Merry Oaks about 9:30 A. M.; No. 11 leaves Raleigh about 4 o'clock P. M., and arrives Merry Oaks about 5 P. M.; "Shufly" going North from Hamlet arrives Merry Oaks about 4 P. M.; train No. 12 going North from Hamlet arrives Merry Oaks 10:17 A. M.

All persons who expect to attend the Convention will please write me a card explaining which day and train they will arrive on.

New Hill, N. C. W. M. GOODWIN,
Chairman of Entertainment Committee.

OUR PLEDGES to Men and Millions are Sacred, Solemn and Binding.

These obligations were made through the Church to the Kingdom of God and to all that pertains to building up that Kingdom in the world, so far as our Christian Church is concerned. As Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has so pertinently pointed out: "A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations--'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42)--but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

Many are making great sacrifices to meet these obligations and pay these pledges. Every one who fails to do so not only produces paralysis in his own moral system, but to that extent paralyses the efforts and sacrifices that the faithful and the loyal make.

BEAR IN MIND MEN AND MILLIONS MEAN AND STAND FOR ALL THAT THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH MEANS AND STANDS FOR.

—REMEMBER—

that the fourth year ends April 30, 1924.

After that, we have only one more year in which to meet these obligations. Unless we put forth a mighty effort to pay some on these pledges during the last quarter of the fourth year, there is great danger that we will fail entirely, because of the bulk of our pledge looming up before us in a one-year period.

Paying SOMETHING by April 30, 1924, will make it easy to pay ALL by April 30, 1925. Where there is a will there is a way, and God always helps those who try to their capacity to help themselves.

Elon College, N. C.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR UNOFFERED PRAYER.

"God forbid that I should sin against the Lord in ceasing to pray."—1 Sam. 12:23.

If praying lays hold of the true fountains of life, it is the touching of divine power; if it dispels doubts and fears, establishes spiritual certainties, an understanding of God and a communion with God; if it stimulates true manhood and inspires true service—what a sin it must be to neglect it! How low we may fall when we fail to pray! To pray unceasingly was one of Christ's chief admonitions. "Whatch and pray, lest ye enter into temptation."

Prayer.—Do Thou, Lord, forgive us of all of our sins, and especially that of the failure to commune with Thee. We have strayed from Thee and Thy way, and followed too much our own devices and the desires of our own hearts. Come Thou now and fill us and make us good stewards of ourselves and help us to be careful every day not to offend against Thee by failing to touch the fountains of blessing with our own heart's petitions. In Christ's name, we ask it. Amen.

TUESDAY.

LOOK ABOUT YOU AND TRY TO DO SOMETHING FOR OTHERS.

"We ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves."—Rom. 15:1.

Have you ever done anything to help a person in hard luck, who was discouraged and needed just the kind of assistance you might give at a little expense of your time? What have you ever done for your associates? Those with whom you come in close contact each day, whose lives merely touch yours socially, but whose work brings them side by side with you, what do you know about the needs of these?

Little favors you may bestow carelessly, and thoughtlessly, but for real helpfulness, you have shunned because any association might demand your time or attention. You have kept away from those who were ill or in trouble, and you have sought the companionship of the light-hearted and happy—you want a good time. Many good turns you might have done, and the fact that you do not know of anything you might have done is only confession that you did not try to find out.

Prayer.—Dear Father, Thou who art the heights, we cry unto Thee to help us to walk with Thee, and to make us conscious that Thou atr walking with us along life's pathway. Turn our thoughts to the good we may do, and help us to do anything that Thou dost need to make us happy. In Christ's name. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

HAPPINESS THROUGH RIGHTEOUSNESS.

"Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled."—Matt. 5:6.

Righteousness not only exalts a nation, but also an individual. It is a principle planted in the heart, and all who possess it have a guarantee that they are born again: for "whosoever doeth righteousness is born of God." Righteousness in the heart produces honesty in our actions and makes a man say: "I would rather be right than be President." With him, honesty is not a policy; it is a living, controlling principle of life. He does not first ask f his actions will pay or be popular; but the first question is: is it right? His heart is open, and there is that hungering and thirsting to know and do what is right. He hears a voice, and at the sound of that voice, there is the sensation of happiness. It is not the voice of the multitude, praising him, which makes him happy (unless the multitude is right), but the silent voice within which has approved his conduct. It is the fulfillment of that Scripture which says: "Happy is he that condemneth not himself in that thing which he alloweth."

Prayer.—Our Father, we thank Thee for Jesus, who taught us how to be happy while we live. Help us to open our hearts to Him, that He may abide with us. We love His voice, and nothing makes us so glad as when He approvingly speaks. We pray for the open ear, and the closed ear—an open ear to Him, and a closed ear to the world. In His name. Amen.—T. E. White.

THURSDAY.

VANITY REBUKED.

"Be not ye called Rabbi."—Matt. 23:8-11.

I see a Jew of dignity walking on the chief street of Jerusalem. Toward him comes another. When they meet they pause, and with smiles and bows, exchange greetings. Smiles of approval and attitude of respect warm their hearts and nurture their pride. A throng is coming. The Rabbis are erect. Their eyes are closed. Their smiles have vanished. They are praying. Their words can be heard. They impress upon the many their piety, their zeal, their religious authority. Their precious labels tinkle. As the throng passes, the Rabbis unbend, how and smile again. Jesus is coming. The oily smiles become derisive. "This is He who forbade us to call ourselves Rabbis, Blasphemer!"

In due, or undue, time, those Rabbis died. Their tombs were inscribed with their titles and their worth. But beyond the tomb went the quiet words, "Be ye not called Rabbi. One is your teacher," piercing through their pretence and humbling their pride. If titles are necessary to give value to truth here, what a pity they cannot help to peace hereafter.—J. H. Mills.

Prayer.—Thou who hast revealed Thyself to the world in our Lord Jesus Christ, grant unto us the purity and glory of His life, that we may live in the cheer, comfort and happiness of the same companionship that Peter, James and John had, who were brethren among themselves and brothers to the world. In His name, we ask it. Amen.

FRIDAY.

DEFACED BODIES AND SOULS.

"Without the shedding of blood, there is no remission of sins."—Heb. 9:22.

Ever since Adam and Eve sinned and sewed fig-leaves for a dress, man has been a prodigal. Adam's and Eve's image was then and there changed, and the human race has ever since borne the defacement. In this first sin, it became necessary for them to provide clothing to hide their wrongdoing, and in the order of divine Providence a goat was killed and the skin of it was used for the clothing. This was the first sacrifice, and was made necessary as a result of their first sin. It was by this sacrifice that their sin was passed over, as we may say, remitted. The blood of the goat became an atonement between the Father and His children, and became a rite which was handed down in the Israelitish Church as a symbol of the atoning power of God.

In the course of time and of human events, the defaced body of the human race must be atoned for, and Christ the Son became the Lamb that was slain. His blood was spilled, and He became a cloak for the sins of the world, and in Him we are clothed for eternity. By this act He was made unto us as righteousness which is unto all men that believe.—Rom. 3:21-22.

Prayer.—Our Father, vouchsafe unto us Thy forgiveness for anything we have done, said or thought. Restore us to Thy grace and fold, readopt us into Thy family as beloved children. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

SATURDAY.

WISE AND FOOLISH FOLKS.
(Read Matt. 25:1-13.)

"And five of them were wise and five were foolish."

Five wise ones got in. Five foolish ones did not. Why? The wise were admitted because they submitted their ideals to the discipline of being prepared. They had accepted the invitation to be at the feast; they had purposed to be there; they had lamps and oil; they were clothed in the proper raiment; and they waited on the alert for the coming of the bridal party, letting nothing divert them, even the desire to sleep.

The five foolish ones had also accepted the invitation, purposed to be there, had lamps, and they must have had some oil also at one time. But as the bridegroom tarried, they grew lax in their ideas of discipline and practices; they yielded overmuch to their desire for pleasures; they loved sleep, and they innocently gave themselves to these things. In so doing, they forfeited the precious privilege. While they had their own indulgences and desires, the bridegroom came and their opportunity passed.

Prayer.—Our Father, sometimes we are in the mountaintop, but often we are in the valleys, and feel the chill of low desire and sinful influences. Cause us to so dedicate our lives to Thee that we may never yield to untoward influences, but may be faithful, live in Thy presence, and at last dwell with Thee forever. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"THE SABBATH WAS MADE FOR MAN."—Mark 2:27.

Why go to Church? Should everybody go to Church? Everybody can't go to Church. Duty keeps many away, and to those it would be sin, for it would be neglecting a duty, which is something they owe God and man. Thus, not all non-Churchgoers are sinners.

Others do not go to Church because they do not want to, and they do not want to because they think they have a very good reason for staying away. They will not change until some reason supercedes to counteract that.

There are hundreds of other reasons why many others do not go to Church, all of whom think their reason is a good one, and all of whom will continue their course until some better reason counteracts it. They will go when that reason comes and changes the current of their feelings about it.

The motive for going to Church, then, lies in the reason as well as in the soul and spirit. Thus it is up to the Church to give to the world that overpowering reason, to change the current of their life. Let us all do our duty today, and not only be sure of our own reason, but do what we can to establish a reason with all others for being a part of the great life of God.

Prayer.—Dear Father, to Thee we turn for help. Shed Thy light into our souls, that we may never be misguided, but may always discharge our stewardship of ourselves and our fellowman according to spiritual duty and responsibility. And whether duty calls us to the Church or elsewhere, may the great spirit of God in the Church be with us and in us. Amen.

THIS PAGE IS FOR THE CHILDREN ONLY—BUT

LISTEN, LITTLE FOLKS!

This page is yours, from now on; but it has no name yet. Would you like to name it for me? Yes? Fine! But let's give every one an equal chance. Shall we? Who likes a contest? Then, that's what we will have; and we shall begin at once. Every child under the age of fourteen years is entitled to take part in the contest. We will give a year's subscription to THE CHRISTIAN SUN to the child who sends in the best name for our new page for the children.

Send your name and the name you wish the page to have to Miss Madge Moffitt, Ramseur, N. C.; also your age.

The contest will close July 1, 1924.

Do we all understand? Then, we are ready—go!

WHAT IS THE NAME OF THIS PAGE?

Dear little Assistant Editors:

Your editor doesn't dare to tell you how proud she is of you, for fear you will get all puffed up with pride. I'm having the best time reading your letters and trying to decide which name, so far, is the best name for our own page! I hope you will send me so many stories and poems and suggestions all the time that I will be almost buried under them, and I hope they will be your OWN work. DON'T COPY. Please remember, for now and always, that your editor wants YOUR OWN WORK.

I can hardly wait to see who wins! Can you? It will be a big surprise! But while we wait, lets see all the names that have been sent in. See if you know one that is better.

YOUR EDITOR.

CONTEST NAMES.

The Children's Sun—By Jack Faust, age 14, Ramseur, N. C.

Sunshine Corner—Conrad Coghill, Henderson, N. C.

WHAT YOU WILL READ EACH WEEK ON YOUR PAGE IN "THE SUN."

A story; maybe two stories, if you wish.

A nature poem, and other poems that make little folks happy.

Any news items, too, from our own children's department will be published.

Any contributions from any one will be appreciated.

We want to make our page interesting, and we want each one to help. Then it will be our own children's page.

A WISE LITTLE FLY.

(Original Work.)

"Sweet creature," said the spider,
"You're witty and you're wise;
How handsome are your gauzy wings!
How brilliant are your eyes!"

"I have a little looking-glass
Upon my parlor shelf;
If you'll step in a moment, dear,
You shall behold yourself."

"I thank you, gentle Sir," she said,
"For what you're pleased to say;
I'm bidding you 'Good morning' now:
I'll call another day."

PETER RABBIT'S EARACHE.

Once upon a time there lived in a little house under the hill Mother Rabbit and her little son, Peter. One morning Mother Rabbit waked up and heard Peter crying. He was saying, "Oh! Mother, my ear aches so bad!" Mother Rabbit dressed quickly. She took her big unbrella and put on her bonnet and her shawl and set off down the road. Where do you suppose she was going? Why, she was going over to The Hollow to gather some flannel leaves to make a poultice for Peter Rabbit.

Now, there were two ways to go to The Hollow. The nearest way was by the brook. The longer way was by the hollow tree. Mother Rabbit chose the shorter way; but do you know, when she got there she couldn't get across, because it had been raining, and the brook was all swollen. Now, what do you suppose she did? She turned right around and ran lickety-split, as fast as she could, up by the hollow tree. When she got there she heard some one say in a croaky voice, "Good morning, Mother Rabbit; where are you going in such a hurry?"

Mother Rabbit looked around and saw Bro. Fox. She said, "Good morning, Bro. Fox; I am just going over to The Hollow to gather some flannel leaves to make a poultice for Peter Rabbit, who has the earache."

"How strange!" said Bro. Fox; "my three little Foxes have the earache this morning."

"Come with me and gather some flannel leaves, and I'll come back and make them some poultices," said Mother Rabbit.

So off down the road they went as fast as they could go. After a while they met Johnny Woodchuck. "Good morning, Mother Rabbit; good morning, Bro. Fox," said Johnny Woodchuck; "where are you both going in such a hurry?"

"Oh! Johnny Woodchuck, my darling little Peter has the earache, and the three little Foxes have the earache, and we are just going over to The Hollow to gather some flannel leaves to make some poultices for their ears," said Mother Rabbit, all in one breath.

"How strange!" said Johnny Woodchuck, scratching his head; "my little Woodchucks have the earache, too, this morning."

"They must have caught it at school yesterday," said Bro. Fox, shaking his head.

"Come with us," said Mother Rabbit, "and gather some flannel leaves, and we will make some poultices for them. They will soon be well."

So they all set off down the road lickety-split.

When they got to The Hollow, Mother Rabbit gathered the flannel leaves and put them in her apron. Bro. Fox gathered flannel leaves and put them in the bag around his neck; Johnny Woodchuck gathered some flannel leaves and put them in the little red cap on top of his head. Then they all started home.

When they got to Johnny Woodchuck's house, Johnny said: "Mother Rabbit, I don't know how to make a flannel-leaf poultice."

"Well," said Mother Rabbit, "just wait till I go home and make one for little Peter Rabbit's ears, and I'll come back and make them for your little Woodchucks."

When they got to Bro. Fox's house, Bro. Fox said: "Mother Rabbit, I don't know how to make a flannel-leaf poultice, either."

"Just wait till I go home and make one for my darling little Peter, and I'll come back and make some for the dear little Foxes," said Mother Rabbit. Then she started home as fast as she could go. When she got there, Peter Rabbit was crying—oh, how he was crying! His ears hurt so bad! Poor little Peter Rabbit!

Mother Rabbit went into the kitchen and got a clean, clean cloth. Then she made a warm, warm poultice and tied it all around little Peter Rabbit's ears. Then she tucked him in his nice warm beddy, and kissed him good-by, and went over to Bro. Fox's house.

Here she made three nice warm, warm poultices for the three little Foxes. And, do you know, they stopped crying right away. Such dear little Foxes! Then Mother Rabbit went over to see the little Woodchucks. Of course, she made the poultices for them, and of course they began to feel better at once. How good and kind of Mother Rabbit to help all her little neighbors! Then she started home. When she got home—little Peter Rabbit was asleep!

And I have heard it said, that if you ever have the earache, if you will just make a flannel-leaf poultice, it will stop right then!

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

LESSON 1—JULY 6.

By H. S. Hardcastle.

Subject: "The Birth of Jesus."

Golden Text: "There is born to you this day, in the city of David, a Saviour, who is Christ the Lord."—Luke 2:11.

Lesson: Luke 2:7-20.

Devotional Reading: Isa. 11:1-5.

Reference Material: Luke 1:5 to 2:39; John 1:1-14.

The account of the birth of Jesus is a beautiful story. Alas, that that story should be made a "theological football" by those with different views as to the manner of the birth. For the Christian world stands divided against itself on this question, and much of the beauty of the story is obscured by the smoke of battle, and much of the appeal of the story is weakened by the spirit of bitterness that has crept in between the two factions; factions that claim to be Christian. What a tragedy that those who are supposed to be followers of the Christ, should show so little of His spirit in discussing the manner of His birth.

For, after all, the matter of supreme importance is not the manner of His birth—it is the fact that He was born! And the claim which Jesus Christ had, and has, upon men does not depend upon a certain theory of His birth, but upon the miracle of His life and His work, His spiritual supremacy. His divine character and authority depend upon His life-giving words, His heroic deeds, His invincible power over the lives of men, and not upon the issue of whether or not He was born of a virgin. They who argue that Jesus Christ was divine, or deity, because He was born of a virgin approach the matter from the wrong point of view. It seems to me that the more logical thing to do is to interpret His birth in the light of His divinity and deity. If Jesus Christ really were God incarnate, it is not so difficult to account for the supernatural element in His birth.

"There is born to you this day in the city of David, a Saviour, who is Christ the Lord." This is the great fact—that Jesus Christ was born. There is no better authenticated fact in history. And there is no more significant fact in history. For history itself is dated in its relation to that fact. Events are dated B. C. or A. D., according to their relation to the year when Christ came. Strange wonder, then, if there had not been signs and wonders at the advent of One who would so profoundly affect the world's calendar, as well as transform the world's life. He who accepts the miracle of Christ Himself need have no trouble with any other miracle connected with His life.

The setting of the birth of Christ was very simple. His parents were humble folk—peasants of very ordinary circumstances—but with royal blood in their veins. They had gone to their ancestral home to be enrolled in a census instituted by Quirinius. It was at Bethlehem, then, in Judea, that the babe was born. And so crowded was the village that it was in a shelter for dumb beasts that the Christ-child came, and into a manger that He was first laid. When we consider these facts and think that it was as a helpless babe that the Lord of all came, we see that "God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things that are mighty." The sign that the shepherds were to have, the sign that there was born unto them a Saviour, who was Christ the Lord, was to be a babe wrapped in swaddling clothes and laid in a manger. God moves in wondrous ways His wonders to perform.

The story of the annunciation to the shepherds, and their visit to Bethlehem, is too familiar to need repetition. But it is a kind of familiarity that breeds respect and adoration, and not contempt. How much poorer the world's greatest literature would be without that story.

Teaching Points.

1. Divinity and humanity are not foreign to each other.

2. One need not be hostile to Christ; he need only be absorbed in other things to "have no room for Him in the inn."

3. God reveals His wonderful secrets to those who are humble in heart.

4. Some of heaven's most glorious revelations come while performing the common-place tasks of life.

5. God became man, that He might make men godlike.

6. Christ must be more than Saviour; He must be Lord.

7. The gospel of Jesus Christ is "good news."

8. This "good news" is to be to all people.

9. When the spirit of the Christ-child rules the hearts of men there will be "peace on earth."

10. The message of the gospel is "fear not."

11. Earth is alive with heavenly messengers for those whose eyes are open and whose ears are listening.

12. Like the shepherds of old, we must "go to Bethlehem" to learn most of what is best in life.

13. Those who obey God's challenges, find God's rewards.

14. A critical mind is not necessary to an appreciation of Christ.

15. Mothers ponder many things in their hearts concerning their children.

EASTERN VIRGINIA CONVENTION.

The 1924 session of the Convention of Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference will be held at Bethlehem Christian Church, four miles west of Suffolk, on the Suffolk-Franklin Highway, July 22d and 23d.

Every Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society of the Conference should be represented by a full delegation.

Every Sunday School superintendent and every Christian Endeavor president should plan to be there.

Watch for the program. You will discover that it is not a program of addresses, but a program of education, with opportunities for all to take part.

We call attention to the action of the last Convention in lowering the assessment. The dues this year are 15 cents per Sunday School scholar and senior Endeavor member, 10 cents per intermediate Endeavor member, and 5 cents per junior Endeavor member. According to these requirements, the Convention should receive approximately $1,100.00.

Bethlehem Church has recently been remodeled, and is now a great rural Church, and we are not doing our part unless we give them a great Convention. Will you do your part?

J. H. Lightbourne,
Executive Secretary.

BETHLEHEM FACULTY SELECTED.

The following is the faculty of Bethlehem College, of the Christian Church, located at Wadley, recently chosen to serve the ensuing session: Dr. S. L. Beougher, of Graham, N. C., president; Mr. Herbert Scholz, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. S. M. Lynam, Miss Essie Mae Cotton, Mrs. Thyra Swint, Mr. O. C. Fincher. All are new members of the faculty except Mr. Scholz and Mrs. Swint, and all are from North Carolina except the latter and Mr. Fincher. Miss Alma Beougher will be instructor in commercial branches.

Chattanooga, Tenn., has been selected by a committee of the college of bishops for the special meeting of the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, on July 2d, to consider the plan for uniting with the Northern branch of the Church. Ratification by the Southern leaders of the Church is predicted. Some opposition to the plan has been expressed among a few of the Southern bishops, but it is indicated that the great majority will be heartily in favor of unification, which has already been indorsed by the Northern body.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

The children at the Orphanage had a real treat last week, which they enjoyed very much indeed, and, while it was a great pleasure, it was instructive, too. The Swathmore Chautauqua gave their annual week of entertainments in the city of Burlington. Mr. Erwin A. Holt and Mr. J. H. Holt, of Burlington, gave the Orphanage family twenty season tickets—ten adult and ten junior tickets —which admitted the children to two entertainments each day for six days. Mr. Erwin Holt and Mr. J. H. Holt have been very warm friends to the Orphanage children, and each year tickets are donated for the use of the children here to attend the Chautauqua. We divided the children in groups of twenty and let a group go at one time, so all could be benefited and receive some of the enjoyment. The superintendent had the problem of getting twenty children there each day, five miles away, but that was easily solved. Mrs. W. A. Harper came to our rescue with her machine, and took a great deal of delight in carrying some of the girls each day. Mr. Wagoner, our farmer, donated the use of his machine, Rev. Mr. Wright came to our rescue with his ford that never fails to run, Mr. Lewallen, one of our merchants, donated his machine each evening for our use, so it worked out nicely all the week, and our children were happy to get this splendid opportunity to attend the entertainments and splendid addresses each day. It was not only a joy to those who were so faithful to help in carrying the children there, but it was a great pleasure to the Messrs. Holt to give the children the tickets so that they might have an opportunity to attend.

We do not have words to fully express to the noble friends our thanks for the splendid kindness rendered, and all the children join with me in expressing thanks. CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

WHAT IS IN A NAME?

The English language is made up from a large collection of words; and many of them possessing small value, excepting as links in a chain for expressing a fact, or an important idea; while others have an acquired dignity, which sets them high on the standard of secular education. And ambitious and brainy men have spent their lives elucidating a truth, of which previously they had only a dim vision. And the most marvelous stories of scientific discoveries have been built up on one such little word. It has been the keystone of human investigation, which has brought to the surface much interesting and useful knowledge about the information of the earth; or other facts in various branches of science.

A careful study of geology has unveiled in a measure the perplexing obscurity to thinking minds, as to the probable cause of the frequent convulsions that shake the earth; and it has also opened up the gateway for utilizing the stores from the vast resources lying deep beneath our feet. Hence that little word of four syllables has become prominent in importance in the category of a multiplicity of words to a curious-minded world. And so it is with a great number of specializing terms, which have been clothed in fascinating garb through the divine intuitions bestowed on mankind by their Creator. Yet they are all of the earth and earthly; and they sink into an insignificant value, when compared with revealing humanity's spiritual nature—their relation with the Father and Divine Son.

Much is being written and preached in these controversial days about the Church and the kingdom; and opinions seem to differ as to their respective claims upon professing Christians. But Christ has made the subject plain to His disciples, when He taught them that the kingdom was the spirit of truth and holiness in the heart; and made manifest in outward deeds of love for God and their fellow-men. And if true in purpose, they are surely as inseparable on their mission, as are our souls and bodies while here upon the earth. And the Church with Christ as the Head and chief corner-stone, was for the centralization of effort of its members, in bringing others to accept the gospel terms of salvation. It was to be an accumulative process; and they also were instructed to grow in grace and knowledge after the pattern of their Master, who is the embodiment of all truth and wisdom. And an admonition to observe the beatitudes is impressively set forth in that wonderful Sermon on the Mount—with all the attached blessings mentioned in Matthew 5th chapter.

And the unerring wisdom of the Saviour was manifested when He instituted that beautiful brotherhood association for carrying forward the gospel message to a sin-ridden world. And because the Church was founded on that Rock, it cannot become extinct or of none-effect. As it has been said on Bible authority that the "gates of hell shall not prevail against it." What a marvelous story of self-sacrificing love the early followers of Christ have given to the world. Yet without the cruel treatment they received, they were increased in numbers and faith. And Paul and the brethren who suffered persecution and imprisonment were deemed worthy of that new name, prophesied by Isaiah, in chapter 62, second verse, the disciples were first called Christians at Antioch.

It is a beautiful and appropriate name, with all the infinite possibilities for human character to portray a likeness to the divine Leader. As Christ's name is above every other name, in honor and significance, the Christian world should prefer it to all others.

Christian, in its secular meaning, combines that of disciple (learner), believers, followers or brethren, complete in one graceful term. Then it has no locked doors, nor human passports for entrance, but all are welcome to enjoy its privileges who came in in the spirit of true worship of Him who has given us the Bible, which is our only rule of faith and practice. It is a safe guide for all who are seeking salvation in Christ's own appointed way—the prayerful way, that will always give them an uplift on the heavenly road.

All human creeds are liable to give faulty interpretations, which could not be generally accepted if unthinking people were not so easily coerced by biased minds.

"On Christ the solid rock I stand,
All other ground is sinking sand" is a grand motto.

John the Revelator has given us a beautiful picture in the 21st and 22d chapters of that book, of the glorious triumph of the faithful servants of Christ, over the power of Satan, and the evils that sin has brought upon the world. If we expect to be among the victorious host, we must be loyal to our convictions of duty to Him, who has given us this outward tabernacle wherein we show forth by our activities that measure of the kingdom that is within us.—E. E. Percy.

ELM AVENUE, PORTSMOUTH.

Our work here has not been characterized by anything out of the ordinary during this year, but it has been moving steadily on. We have not been able to report as large an ingathering as was the case in the earlier stages of the work, but we have been having helpful meetings and have received some good members.

We have recently held a two weeks' meeting, with Rev. W. H. Garman, of Lambert's Point, doing the preaching. There were a goodly number of professions of faith and reconsecrations during the meeting, and the Church seemed to be much revived. Bro. Garman won a warm place in the hearts of the people by his earnest preaching. Nineteen members have been received since the meeting began, making twenty-three during the Conference year.

We began a teacher-training class several weeks ago of fifteen members, and we have had some faithful students. Our book of study has been "Preparation for Teaching," by Chas. Oliver.

The membership of the Church, for the most part, has been loyal in supporting the Church, and all bills have been promptly met.

We have two organizations of Christian Endeavor—the intermediate and junior. We have a very devout and consecrated young girl, sixteen years old, in second-year high school, who has declared her purpose to give her life fully to Christian service.

Our attendance at Sunday School and Church is good and shows some increase over last year.

FARMER.

At her home, in Roanoke, Va., Nannie Doak Wilson Farmer died on May 15, 1924. Her grief-stricken husband, Dr. Frank A. Farmer, had her body shipped to News Ferry, Va., where, with sad but sweet services, it was interred in the family burying-plot in the Church-yard of Pleasant Grove Christian Church. Mrs. Farmer was born of Dr. and Mrs. George W. Wilson, late of Yanceyville, N. C. She married Dr. Frank A. Farmer September 11, 1917. It is known and cherished by a vast host of friends that she was a loving, devout, and faithful wife, entering largely into the success which her husband has achieved in Roanoke.

It seems a sad providence that called such a young and lovely spirit from her husband and her people. His heart and theirs have the consolation of Christ because she was a most affable Christian, loving home and Church with such a devotion as kept her life ever pure and sweet. May the Heavenly Father bless our earth with many more of her kind. Her pastor, Rev. J. E. McCauley, was indisposed at the time of her interment, and the writer had charge of the services.

Newer Form of Iron

Gives Strength and Energy to The Weak and Aged

The remarkable discovery of a newer form of iron has proved a blessing to thousands who were feeling the weakening effects of advancing years. To be strong, vigorous and active you must have plenty of good rich red blood of the kind that this newer form of iron helps make. It is like the iron in your blood and like the iron in spinach, lentils and apples. If you want something to quickly help make rich red blood, revitalize worn-out, exhausted nerves and give you new strength and energy, your own druggist will furnish you with a bottle of this newer form of iron, sold under the name of Nuxated Iron, and he will guarantee that if you do not feel stronger and years younger in two weeks time your money will be promptly refunded. For sale by all druggists.

To Make Rich Red Blood

Revitalize your worn-out exhausted nerves and increase your strength and endurance

take Organic Iron; not metallic iron which people usually take, but pure organic iron—Nuxated Iron—which is like the iron in your blood and like the iron in spinach, lentils and apples. One dose of Nuxated Iron is estimated to be approximately equivalent (in organic iron content) to eating one-half quart of spinach, one quart of green vegetables or half a dozen apples. It is like taking extract of beef instead of eating pounds of meat. Nuxated iron is partially predigested and ready for almost immediate absorption and assimilation by the blood, while metallic iron is iron just as it comes from the action of strong acids on small pieces of iron filings.

Over 4,000,000 people annually are using Nuxated Iron. It will not injure the teeth nor disturb the stomach. A few doses will often commence to enrich your blood. Your money will be refunded by the manufacturers if you do not obtain satisfactory results.

Beware of substitutes. Always insist on having genuine organic iron—Nuxated Iron. Look for the letters N. I. on every tablet. Sold by all druggists.

Why Drugs Fail

Many chronic diseases fail to respond to drug treatment, even in the hands of the best physicians, whereas acute diseases usually respond readily. When a disease has become chronic, drugs often seem to do as much harm as they do good, for the system rebels against them. It is just this class of cases which derive the greatest benefit from drinking Shivar, America's best stomach, liver and kidney Water. If you suffer with chronic dyspepsia, indigestion, sick headache, rheumatism, kidney or liver disease, uric poisoning or other curable conditions due to impure blood, do not hesitate to accept the Spring's liberal offer as printed below. Their records show that only two in a hundred, on the average, have reported "no benefit." This is a wonderful record from a truly wonderful Spring. Sign the following letter:

Shivar Springs,
Box 16-H, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if I report no benefit you agree to refund the price of the water in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return within a month.

NEW JOURNAL TO TELL ONLY THE CLEAN AND NECESSARY TRUTH.

The plans made in New York by Jason Rogers, one-time proprietor of the New York Globe, are receiving much comment in educational circles in the capital city. The publisher has two million dollars with which to start a national newspaper, which will appear about the first of the year and which will have as its ideals the truth and nothing but the truth, but not necessarily all the truth, since crime, vice and "trivialities" are to be omitted from its columns.

According to Mr. Rogers, "The paper's sole aim will be to promote the greatest good to the greatest number. It will be allied with no political party and will adhere to no sect. It will be committed to no special causes, but will stand for common sense, for the right, for justice, and above all—truth.

"The paper will be printed in New York, but we plan to make it something more than a local New York daily. We shall try to work out the idea of covering the whole nation's news, thereby making our journal interesting, attractive, and valuable to the entire country. In respect to style, we shall follow the make-up and news style of the best New York dailies, but we shall not confine our editorial emphasis to purely local concerns."

The control of the new paper will be vested in a self-perpetuating board of trustees, composed of men of prestige and importance. They will have full authority to see that the avowed aims of the paper are carried out.

NOT IN A CLASS BY HIMSELF.

It was his first visit to the city. As he stood on the sidewalk shaking with laughter, he was asked: "What's the fun, sir?"

"Fun! Can't you see it? Just look how that thing (pointing to a street sprinkler that was passing) leaks. Why, the idiot won't have a drop left when he gets home."

NAETHING!

A Scotch farmer, being elected to the school board, visited the village school and tested the intelligence of the class by the question:

"Now, boys, can any of you tell me what naething is?"

After a moment's silence a small boy in a back seat rose.

"It's what ye gi'ed me the other day for holding yer horse."—Everybody's.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By Rev. S. M. Lynam.

Dr. Stewart Resigns.—

The twenty-five years of distinguished service for Auburn Seminary on the part of Dr. George Black Stewart closed last month when he handed in his resignation as president of that institution. He has done much to make Auburn a leading seminary of the Presbyterian Church. He has given a modern approach to the Bible which has fitted its outgoing students for a work of construction instead of destruction. Under his leadership, a lay school adapted to a fearless facing of the problems of the future has been established in connection with the seminary.

More Justice Done.—

The Department of Justice has just released the last of the prisoners convicted under the war laws. President Coolidge released the last of these men last Christmas, but somehow Nicholas Zogg, who had particularly vexed the court during his trial, was overlooked. Now Zogg has been freed. This is just a little more justice done. America cannot be the land of the free so long as we have political prisoners languishing in our prisons. Because a man happens to think differently from the rest of his fellows is no excuse for imprisoning him. There would be other releases if California did the justice which is due in that State.

Francois-Marsal.—

Francois-Marsal has accepted the position as Premier of France. He did so only that a political deadlock might be broken. He follows M. Poincare as Premier, and will present the address of President Millerand to the deputies, and the chamber will then decide for or against the policies of the President. The position which France takes at the present time means much in world affairs. In fact, in reference to her attitude toward Germany, the position of France is strategic, since so much international harmony depends on it. What the world needs in international affairs is a larger measure of devotion to the social ideal and teachings of Jesus. Christianity has never had a fair trial in the settlement of world issues, and to give the principles of Jesus a chance to demonstrate their efficacy in human relations should become some time the dominant ideal of a people. That will be a great nation which dares to lead in such a movement.

Federal Taxes Increase 127 Per Cent.—

In the last five years, State and Federal taxes have increased 127 per cent. Such an increase has not been effected with difficulty, and many question its wisdom. However, the present system of roads and other public utilities would demonstrate that while all the tax money may not have been spent wisely, much of it has been. It is our belief that taxes may go too high, but that time has not been reached as yet. A more careful expenditure of the money paid into government treasuries, however, should be vigorously insisted upon. No effort should be spared to see that this is done, and every citizen is personally responsible for that part of the government.

This is the year of elections, and those who are handling the ballot should handle it only after a careful study of policies and principles, as well as the records of candidates. This applies to all the elective officers from the humblest to the presidency of the United States.

Sixty-Eighth Congress Closes.—

On June 7th, the Sixty-eighth Congress came to a close. It has passed about three hundred general laws, fifteen or twenty of them important. Senators introduced 3,485 bills and 146 resolutions. House members offered 9,762 bills and 674 resolutions. Among the many bills signed by President Coolidge was one providing for the construction of the San Carlos irrigation dam in Arizona, which will provide water and livelihood for many Pima Indians. Many of these Indians are members of the Christian Endeavor, and this bill means much to them. The President also signed a bill creating a commission to select a site for the establishment of a national penal institution for women. This is the first nstitution of the kind ever authorized by Congress. Congress has wasted a great deal of time, but it has done a few things really worth while. We became impatient sometimes, but there are in this land of ours one hundred and ten millions of people all with varied opinions of what Congress should do, and it cannot hope to please us all.

Dawes to Make Run.—

Following his own nomination for President on the Republican ticket, President Coolidge insisted that the convention should choose its own candidate for Vice-President. This the convention actually did, despite the work of William M. Butler on the convention floor. Ex-Governor Frank A. Lowden, of Illinois, was nominated, but very promptly refused the honor. In evening session, the convention then named General Charles Gates Dawes as running-mate of President Coolidge. General Dawes was born in Marietta, Ohio, 1865, worked his way through Marietta College, and his long association with public utilities and as a banker has given him admirable fitness for the high position for which he has been selected. He served during the war as purchasing agent for the United States government, and under President Harding acted for one year as the first director of the budget. General Dawes has recently become internationally known as the author of the Dawes plan for putting Germany on her feet financially. He has served as head of the Dawes commission.

Many Women There.—

This year, 465 women are attending the Democratic National Convention in New York City in an official capacity as delegates or alternates. Four years ago there were only 86 women delegates and 202 alternates at the San Francisco convention. This year there are 143 women delegates-at-large, 34 district delegates, 78 alternates and 210 district alternates. The line-up of the State delegations shows that New York, with 48 women, is sending the largest. Missouri includes 30 women in its delegation, and Massachusetts 28. The three States of Louisiana, Florida and South Dakota failed to name a woman delegate. The Southern States are sending some of the most interesting delegates. For example, from Georgia comes Mrs. Mary Harris Armor, who has thrilled thousands of men and women throughout the country by her appeals for prohibition and dry law enforcement. From Kentucky comes Mrs. Cromwell, sacretary of State in that Commonwealth, and said to be one of the leading women parliamentarians in the country.

Public Approves Coolidge.—

The congressmen attending the Republican Convention at Cleveland, Ohio, know now that the public approves of President Coolidge, and as heartily disapproves of the lack of support which the Republicans in Congress have given him. The keynote address of the convention was delivered by Senator Theodore E. Burton. In his address, he scored Congress repeatedly for the way in which they have failed to stand behind the President. He declared that the Republican party looked to President Coolidge for leadership, and not to Congress. He also favored entrance into the world court by the United States, as suggested by President Harding and Secretary of State Charles E. Hughes. President Coolidge supported the Mellon tax bill, which was defeated. He vetoed the soldiers' bonus bill, which was passed over his veto, and in other instances he has not had the support of his party in Congress, but the demonstrations of the eight thousand people crowding the convention hall proves conclusively that Calvin Coolidge is the leader of his party, if not of Congress.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Dr. J. U. Newman, who recently underwent a serious surgical operation, is expected home this week, much improved and on the road to complete recovery.

It will be gratifying to his numerous friends to learn that Rev. B. F. Black, pastor of Rosemont and Berea (Norfolk) is much improved in health and hopes to resume his pastoral duties at an early date.

The wonderful new pipe organ is being installed in the Whitley Memorial Building and music hall at Elon College. Judging from the volume of the melody poured out on the evening air from this building, future audiences at Elon are to be highly favored with the noblest and best of pipe organs.

The following has been received: "Dr. and Mrs. Walton Crump Wicker announce the marriage of their daughter, Ruth, to Mr. Horace Greeley Rogers, on the evening of Tuesday, the 17th of June, 1924, Elon College, N. C." We wish for this newly married pair all happiness and joy throughout their wedded life.

On a recent Sunday, Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, pastor, received thirty-two members into the Suffolk Christian Church. This, we understand, was the result of personal effort and contact, there being no open evangelistic services to bring it to pass. Such personal contacts in soul-winning tell mightily for the upbuilding of the kingdom.

Bro. Hermon Eldredge, who is attending the World's Sunday School Convention and touring Europe, wrote June 15th: "Landing today at Liverpool. A stormy passage, but was not seasick, and I enjoyed it greatly." The first installment of Bro. Eldredge's travels will appeal in THE SUN next week. SUN readers have a treat in store.

This is Sunday School Convention season. Every Sunday School should seek to be represented in its respective Convention. Many suggestions are made, and much work done at these Conventions which proves invaluable to the local schools. Let every school elect delegates to the Sunday School Convention, and then see to it that those delegates attend.

Mr. Simeon Lane Atkinson, formerly of Elon College, N. C., now of North Wilkesboro, and Miss Annie Belle Cardwell, of North Wilkesboro, were united in marriage Tuesday, June 24th, in the First Methodist Church of North Wilkesboro. These both were former Elon students and have many acquaintances and friends among SUN readers who will join in wishing them a long and happy married life.

Prof. Walter Greenwood, who was in charge of the voice department at Elon College the past year, has accepted a position as director and leader of the choir in Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va. Prof. Greenwood is a genius in chorus work and voice culture, and Dr. Smith and his congregation are to be highly felicitated in securing his services. It means that there will be a great choir and drawing music at Christian Temple, Norfolk.

Rev. S. A. Howell, D. D., Newport News, Va., writing of the Afro-Christian Convention under date of June 23d, says: "Our Convention, which held its session with the People's Church at Baltimore, closed Saturday, June 21st. We had a splendid session, and a goodly number of delegates were present. Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., of Suffolk, Va., was with us; also Rev. J. F. Burnett, D. D., of Dayton, Ohio. Both of them rendered valuable service."

Our heartiest congratulations to Rev. J. G. Truitt, pastor First Christian Church, Berkley, Va. Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, Suffolk, Va., performed the ceremony. The following announcement is received: "Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Wintrey Pierce announce the marriage of their daughter, Edna, to the Rev. John Galloway Truitt, on Wednesday, June 18, 1924, Norfolk, Va. At home after July 1st, 129 Hardy Avenue." All happiness and long life to bride and groom.

Rev. Sion M. Lynam, news editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, was happily wedded to Miss Mary Swanson at her home at Wilkesboro, Wednesday, June 10th. I am sure hundreds of CHRISTIAN SUN readers, whom Bro. Lynam has already reached through his splendid work in THE SUN, will join in wishing him and his bride a long and happy life. Bro. Lynam and his wife have been elected teachers in Bethlehem College, Wadley, Ala., and will begin work there at the opening of next session. These are both Elon College graduates who ranked very high indeed in scholarship and class-work at Elon.

THE REV. JAMES O'KELLY MEMORIAL.

Members of the Old Lebanon and Rev. James O'Kelly Memorial Committee recently visited Mrs. L. E. York, Mebane, N. C., relative to her wishes with regard to the memorial. In response to this visit, the following is received:

"I feel very much gratified at the action taken by the Southern Christian Convention in session at Norfolk, Va., with regard to memorializing the name and last resting-place of my great-grandfather, Rev. James O'Kelly. I think that this memorial should be placed at Elon College. To this end, I willingly give my consent to the removal of his and his wife's remains to Elon College. I am his great-granddaughter and his nearest living kin. I wish you success in this undertaking and hope to have some share in financing it.—Mrs. L. E. York, Mebane, N. C."

COMMITTEE MEETING.

The Committee on Education of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference will meet on July 22, 1924, at Bethlehem Church, near Suffolk, during the Sunday School Convention. All candidates for the ministry and licentiates who have any business with the committee will please meet us at that time or write the chairman of the committee what their plans are for the future.

W. W. STALEY (Chairman).
I. W. JOHNSON.
J. L. FOSTER.

NOTICE.

Notice is hereby given that, pursuant to the action taken by the North Carolina Christian Conference in its recent session at Wake Chapel, the executive committee of the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference will, at the approaching session of the North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at New Elam Church, July 15th to 17th, call together the delegates from the respective Churches of said Conference and reorganize the Sunday School Convention of the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference, electing officers, appointing committees, and making necessary arrangements for time and place of meeting of the Convention in 1925. All actions taken in the proposed meeting at New Elam will be referred to the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference at its next session for ratification and approval.

WHERE DO ELEPHANTS DIE?

One of the great mysteries of the natural history world is where elephants go when they die. Curiously enough, the body of an elephant that has died from natural causes has never been discovered either in India or Africa. Among native races, there is a widespread belief that, when the great beasts feel the end approaching, they make their way to some secret hiding-place in which to die. The whole question is just as big a mystery as ever, in spite of the fact that many attempts have been made to solve the problem. The districts where elephants occur in a wild state have been scoured in all directions in the hope of discovering the last resting-place of the huge animals, but without any result. Quite recently another determined attempt has been made to penetrate the mystery, but, up to the present, nothing of any value has been discovered. As a matter of fact, the problem has more than a scientific interest to it. Any individual who is so fortunate as to find the elephants' graveyard will certainly have made a fortune. On this spot there must be a huge accumulation of ivory, a commodity which is continually increasing in value.—Scientific American.

WORLD PEACE TO THE FORE.

One of the questions most discussed by the Presbyterian Assembly was that of world peace and the methods by which the Churches may most effectively exert their tremendous influence to bring it nearer. The theme was dominant in the opening address of Dr. Charles F. Wishart, the retiring moderator, who demanded that the Church take a determined stand toward abolishing war, and the reports of several committees dealt with the subject of peace.

SEND YOUR PASTOR.

The average pastor has but little time or money to take in the things that would give him a larger vision and aid him in his work. The program of the Chautauqua and School of Methods, Elon College, has been planned to meet the problems with which your pastor has to deal regularly. The place was changed to the college for the convenience of our people. It may be that your pastor would like to go too, but feels that he cannot afford the expense.

The writer was elected a delegate to the American Christian Convention at Huntington, Ind. I was on a small salary and could not afford the trip, but my good friend, Rev. A. W. Andes, got twenty-three men to give one dollar each to pay my railroad expenses, and I went. The expenses of registration and board at the Chautauqua are only $8.50. Twenty to twenty-five dollars would cover all the cost to most any minister in North Carolina or Virginia. I believe there are that many people in every pastorate who would be glad to make the dollar contribution if some one would take hold of it.

Give your pastor a week off, send him to the Chautauqua, and he will more than repay you in renewed inspiration and larger vision. Send him, and insist on his going.

MONUMENT FUND.

Previously acknowledged	$5.00
T. J. Holland, Ambrose, Ga.	1.00
Total received	$6.00

The Southern Convention at Norfolk, in May, decided to erect monuments at two historic spots, long neglected by us Christians. One is to be at the site of Old Lebanon Church, Surry County, Va., where all party and sectarian names were discarded by our Church ancestors and the name Christian only was adopted.

The other is the late resting-place of Rev. Jas. O'Kelly, near O'Kelly's Chapel, Durham County, N. C. We should have $2,000 with which to erect suitable markers. What will you give?

COMMITTEE ON MONUMENT.

(Judge J. F. West, chairman, Waverly, Va.; Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, secretary, Durham, N. C.; W. E. McClenny, Suffolk, Va.; J. O. Atkinson, treasurer, Elon College, N. C.)

P. S.: Bro. Holland, in making his remittance, says: "Enclosed you will find $1.00 toward erecting a monument at the grave of Bro. James O'Kelly. I would send more, but I feel that we have over two thousand good loyal Christian brethren that would like to have a part in erecting this monument. Should you fail to get the required amount, I will send you more. This should have been done long before now. A more consecrated man of God never lived. I feel that we at this time should erect a monument that would be a credit to Bro. Kelly. You have my best wishes for great success in this worthy undertaking."

HOW THE PRAYER MEETING WAS SAVED.

Centenary Church has always had a good prayer meeting on Wednesday nights. Perhaps there is no Church in the denomination where the prayer service has been more successful. However, it was very evident that the old-time meeting was losing its power and influence in the Church, in that it did not reach and influence effectively the crowds of young men and women who were members of the Church. To meet for song and prayer, for Bible readings and testimony, was not sufficient to satisfy the spiritual needs of the people and develop them for leadership and service. This is the reason for the change in program.

After careful study, I came to the conclusion that we needed a broader and more comprehensive program—one that would bring in new interests and utilize the latent talents of the people. Our Church is a down-town institution, situated in the heart of the business district of the city. Little opportunity is offered to the members for social fellowship on account of the fact that they live in all parts of the city. We built a program therefore which has undertaken to provide four things which may be indicated by four words—fellowship, education, worship, plans.

Promptly at 6 o'clock dinner is served at a price which all can afford. The members come to the Church from work and have opportunity before and after the dinner for fellowship and better acquaintance. This feature has been most delightful and helpful. This closer contact lays the foundation for a keener interest and co-operation in the work of the Church as a whole. Frequently we have had music or readings during the dinner hour which adds interest and atmosphere to this feature of the evening's program.

At 7 o'clock, for the first two years, we had a lecture, by some man or woman of recognized ability, who had achieved distinction in some particular field of endeavor. We had judges of courts to tell us of their work and how the Church might co-operate with the officers and courts in making a cleaner and better city. We had educators tell us of the schools; leaders from the social agencies of the city, bankers, lawyers, ministers, in short, business and professional men from every department of the city's life. Our aim was to acquaint the Church with all the affairs of the city that its members individually and the Church collectively might take a greater interest in everything that affects the life of the city. We had at this same hour story-telling for children. Many families attend these meetings, and we have provided a program for the little ones by securing trained story-tellers.

The young people of senior age were provided for with special programs suitable for their age and needs.

We had business meetings of all the organizations of the Church on this night and at this hour, such as teachers' council, organized classes, missionary societies, training classes, etc.

At 8 o'clock all rooms were closed and all meetings adjourned to assemble for worship, which closed at 9 o'clock. They remained for worship with but few exceptions.

Two years ago, we made a little change in the order of the program which is our present order. Worship is at 7 o'clock, and group meetings are at 8. This works better. The people have had relaxation from the day's work, are refreshed in mind, and are prepared for worship. The group meetings sometimes dull the mind somewhat for the best appreciation of worship.

The plans and programs of the Church, as a whole, are projected at these meetings. They are discussed in all the group meetings, the Church is thoroughly informed as to what comes next, and all the forces are made ready for action. This is a general outline of our program, which of course, does not include many things of a special nature which are done through the course of the year.

It has worked wonderful results, and has become a permanent institution of the Church. It has multiplied the attendance by four. It has deepened the interest and widened it. It has developed a spiritual dynamic we did not have. It has very greatly increased the interest of the members in the community and has enabled us to use the latent energies and talents of the Church. For the last few years we have received an average of 500 new members into the Church annually, until we now have more than 3,000. This order for Wednesday night grew out of the conviction that the Church must broaden its program if it is to be a real constructive force in the community and command the co-operation of thoughtful men and women.—Selected.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

OUR COLLEGE.

After all has been said and done, one wonders if CHRISTIAN SUN readers have taken full stock of Elon College. We Christians do not yet know Elon, as much as we have heard of it and have seen it. We cannot know it until we have taken upon our hearts the burdens, the motives, the desires and the aspirations of those who have built it, and are building it. For the real Elon is not in its brick and steel structures, its ample lecture halls and laboratories. The real Elon College is in the hearts of the people of the Southern Christian Convention and their friends and benefactors. They have made it what it is. It may not be the best college they could have built, but it is the best college, the only A-grade college, they have built. They may do better some time, but it is the best they have done so far.

Now, for these people—for our people—it is the best college on earth; best because it is ours! It stands before the world as our contribution, our effort, our offering to the field of higher education in the name and for the sake of our Church. Elon College is the voice of our Church crying out to the educational world, "Here is the Christians' mile-stone on the highway that leads to the education of their youth." And by this the world of education and of intelligence will judge us—individually and collectively. The institutions and enterprises of the Church are the expressions of the Church-life, the character and conduct of Church-life. Elon College is today the expression of our Church-life in the realm and sphere of higher education. We will be, we can be judged, measured, weighed by none other. It is our college—the best, the biggest, the only educational standard by which we are estimated.

Would not parents, members of our Christian Church, do well to consider these things in making up their minds about a college for their sons and daughters this fall—and for all time?

Elon College may not be the best college for everybody. It is the best college for our Christian boys and girls. There is none other to approach it or with which to compare it, from the Christian's point of view. Your home may not be the finest, most attractive, most luxurious, even the best-ordered home in the world; but for you, and to you, it is the best home in the world. It is yours; it is you. Here is the best home that you have made up till now. People judge you, and rightly, by that home. So your college. All that the home is to the individual, Elon College is to members of the Christian Church in the South. It is the best we have made up till now. And people will judge you, and rightly so, by your college. It is your college, even if you repudiate it by patronizing some other.

Some years ago the writer of these lines approached a prominent Methodist layman about sending his son to Elon. "I would love to do this," said the Methodist, "for I like your college. But my boy will and should be at home amongst his own, and I want him to meet and mingle in college with the future active and loyal and leading personalities of his own Church."

There is logic and sound sense in that. For the good of the whole, for the sake of the Church, in behalf of the son's and daughter's future loyalty and associations, we will forego any passing personal preference and patronize our own college. Thus loyal souls reason and are steadfast and true to their own. These and their kind are the present and future builders of the Church. Those boys and girls who enter Elon College this fall will be the men and women, for the most part, on whose shoulders the burden of the Christian Church will be home twenty years hence. For the sake of your Church and the divine mission God has sent us on, we should patronize our own Elon College.

FATHERHOOD AND BROTHERHOOD.

There is a widespread attempt today to organize the relationships between man and man on the basis of brotherhood. Human brotherhood is one of the catch-phrases of modern thought. We are told that the only stable national, industrial, and social organizations are those that are founded on the foundation of human brotherhood. We are told that we shall never have world peace, or industrial harmony, or permanent social development until all men have come to recognize the fact that they are brothers, and organize their lives according to fraternal principles.

It is not our purpose to question the beauty and strength of brotherhood. We are all agreed that it is a consummation devoutly to be wished. But is brotherhood the basic fundamental principle? Is there not another principle that precedes brotherhood, a principle upon which brotherhood is founded, a principle without which brotherhood is impossible? Can there be any brotherhood without fatherhood? When we attempt to erect the great edifice of human brotherhood and take no thought of divine fatherhood, are we not forgetting the foundation?

"For one is your Master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren." There is no such conception in Scripture as universal human brotherhood, except the universal human brotherhood of those who have, in Jesus Christ, been made children of the Heavenly Father. And before we can become children of the Heavenly Father, there must be a very decided change in our human natures. This change is so radical and so far-reaching that when Jesus would reveal its significance, he called it being born again. We have been putting forth tremendous efforts to teach men that they are brothers, and to make them treat each other as children. It is not surprising that we have not succeeded. We are trying to make men believe that they are something which they are not.

If the Bible teaches that all men are brethren we have not been able to discover it. The Bible does have a very positive teaching concerning all men, in the relation they sustain, the one to the other. But it is not that they are all brethren by any means. But you may say, the Bible teaches to feed your enemies, even that you must love your enemies. Granted. But he is an enemy just the same. The Bible still calls him an enemy, and an enemy he is going to remain until he has been caught by the spirit of the Master, transformed by His redeeming grace, and made a son of the Heavenly Father. Then, and only then, do you become brothers.

But you say, what are we going to do with the command, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," and with Christ's definition of neighbor as given in the story of the Good Samaritan. Does not that teach that all men are brethren? By no means. It merely teaches that all men are my neighbors, and that I am under obligation to do the neighborly thing toward them. It makes no difference whether he is a good or bad neighbor, if I am a Christian my duty is very explicitly defined by my Master. I am honor-bound, duty-bound, Christ-bound, to do the square thing by him no matter how he treats me.

That you say is a one-sided proposition. Certainly it is. That is the very point we are making. It is one-sided, and it is going to remain that way until he has accepted the same Christ, and acknowledged the same Master, and become the son of the same Heavenly Father. Then we have become brothers. We are no longer neighbors. We are more than that; we are bound together by the same ties, we are subject to the same laws, we are controlled by the same spirit. The obligations of brotherhood are equally binding on both sides. And that is the only workable foundation for human relationships.

When Jesus taught His disciples to pray, "Our Father, who art in heaven," He was giving a prayer to be prayed only by sanctified souls. When he said, "All ye are brethren," He was talking only to the redeemed. The only human brotherhood is Christian brotherhood. There can never be peace for the human family until all members of that family have acknowledged the authority of the Supreme Father. Humanity will never come to its highest development, either individually or collectively, until the controlling spirit shall be the love that was manifested in Jesus Christ. A world overshadowed with fear, suspicion, bitterness, and strife awaits the Christ Gospel we have been commissioned to preach. That, oh! Christians, is our challenge, and our task.

BOBBED-HAIR BANDITS.

The deplorable and depressing record of Celia Cooney, the original bobbed-hair bandit, is but a symptom of the increasingly prevalent deterioration of character on the part of American young women. There are other symptoms, too, such as the grossly sensuous dance, cigarette-smoking, gambling, profanity, and drinking. The social sin we are assured is increasing at an alarming rate among young women, emboldened in their mad pursuit of it by the knowledge they now possess of birth-control and sex hygiene. Young women resent chaperones, clamor for trial marriage, and exult in doing stunts that shock their elders.

Who is to blame for this situation? The opponents of woman suffrage find in the extension of the ballot the seed-cause of all our social ills as applied to young women. Others accuse the admission of women into business and the professions as the culpable source of our troubles.

The World War is very generally censured for them. The Church is scorned by a certain section of the people for failure to preach an acceptable gospel, a gospel that will charm the young from the sinuating ways of sin to the straight and narrow path of sober and righteous living.

There is no doubt a modicum of truth in all these allegations, but when we see that young men, as well as young women, are involved in the moral avalanche that has overtaken us, we must look to a common source for the origin of the miasma that infects the moral atmosphere of our national life. That common source is the breakdown of the American home, the seminary of our nation's greatness, her hope and also her fate.

The American home is fast becoming what a little boy recently described it as being, namely: "where we are born, sleep, and eat." Even that is too ideal for thousands of homes. Celia Cooney is accounted for when we know the breeding-place whence she came. Begotten by a drunken father, who consistently refused to work; nurtured by a mother illiterate and morally depraved; housed through her childhood days in a single, ill-lighted and smelly room that was the dormitory of seven others, absolutely cut off from Church and religious educational privileges. Ah, it is a gruesome catalogue of sinister influences that blasted her moral character before it was made. The bobbed-hair bandit never had a chance. She was doomed ere she was born.

Celia Cooney deserves the sentence she drew. Society must be protected against contamination from her kind. But what about the sentence deserved by those who made her chance to be an upright girl hopeless? You and I are to blame for those conditions. We are our brother's and our sister's keepers. God will not, cannot hold us blameless of the lives we blast through economic cupidity, through social neglect, through sheer indifference to the welfare of our brotherman.

We owe it to God, to our brotherman, to our own sense of justice and righteous living to support every measure that promises to lift the clouds of ignorance and godlessness, another name for immorality, from our land. We owe it to this same essential trinity of our daily experience to foster every movement that makes or tends to make such breeding-places as gave life and sin to Celia Cooney impossible in our social order.

Let us recognize our sins. Let us acknowledge our transgression against the laws of God and the obligations of brotherman. Let us, with contrite and broken hearts, confess our responsibility for the Celia Cooneys of our day and for the hovels that make her kind inevitable. And then let us bring forth fruits meet for repentance. May God open our eyes and stouten our hearts and enlighten our minds, that we may in His name and strength go forth to remedy not bobbed-hair—that will shortly grow out again—but the inexcusably sinful social conditions that render righteous living a hopeless enterprise in the frightfully numerous pagan homes of our so-called Christian country! And why not make the beginning right in our home community?

Vote for schools, support the Church and Sunday School, provide for week-day religious instruction and the daily vacation Bible school, build good roads, secure a wholesome social environment for children and youth through the Boy Scouts, the Camp Fire Girls, the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A., playgrounds and recreation and amusement centers with Christian environment. Survey your local situation. Discover your needs. Take measures to supply them. God may hear your wail of complaint or regret for the dreadful moral condition and degeneracy of youth. He will bless your positive steps to remedy and cure the same. Anybody can criticize. Few are willing to work for moral and spiritual betterment. Begin now. God needs you, and will bless you, and before you know it bobbed-hair bandits and youthful millionaire murderers and bland thieves will be transformed into sober and righteous servants of God. Come on. Let's go! Behold the field is white unto the harvest. Do your full duty to swell the ranks of the laborers for social uplift, for God.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

One wonders if all our pastors and other loyal, active souls are keeping their eyes open these days to the opportunity of increasing the circulation of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Yes, it is summer, and the dry season for the flow of cash in many quarters. Despite this fact, however, there are always some who are ready and willing to make a sacrifice and to save for the sake of their Church. There are numbers and numbers of our good homes in which THE CHRISTIAN SUN finds no place. In about 75 per cent of such homes the sole reason for the absence of THE SUN is that the pastor or some good friend of THE SUN has not urged its entrance there. When one gets another to subscribe and pay for THE CHRISTIAN SUN, one has done that other a lasting favor and a very great kindness.

One need not fear to request a neighbor to take THE CHRISTIAN SUN, for in that act one is not asking a favor of a neighbor; he is doing that neighbor a real favor by making the request. Why not do your neighbor or friend a lasting favor by urging upon him or her the necessity and the joy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN? THE SUN is a necessity for our Christian homes, and the necessity having been secured, becomes a real source of sustenance and of joy, as all necessities do.

The managing editor says that along now there is not coming into his office enough from new subscribers to pay postage on THE SUN. Only two ministers have sent in anything, renewals or new subscriptions, since the great Convention at Norfolk. This is not as it should be. Every week some should be sending in renewals or subscriptions, and can easily do so if proper attention is given the matter.

We are now entering and approaching the evangelistic season, when Church membership is increased and new homes are added to our Christian circle. Every one of these should be urged to take and read THE CHRISTIAN SUN. No new Church member has become a loyal and well-grounded and active Church member until he or she reads the Church paper. Many messages of Church polity and progress go through THE SUN'S columns every week. These vital messages are lost on all save those who take and read THE SUN. Help make these messages vital by getting your neighbor or your friend to subscribe for and read THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

LAYMEN IN THE CHURCH.

Leadership is a word often used in these days, and it has great value in Church as well as State; but "followship" is equally important in the work of the Church. The pastor is supposed to be the leader of the congregation, and the superintendent of the Sunday School. They must lead in conduct, liberality, faith, hope, and activity. The laymen should follow in all these respects, and the whole congregation should hold together. Moses led the Hebrew host through the wilderness, and the people followed. The people were not always satisfied; in fact, they complained not only against their leader, but against God. But in all that journey, they held together. Moses did not always have it pleasant; but he carried his troubles to God; he did not resign his position. He had the hardest experience of any leader except Jesus; but he made the greatest success of any leader except Jesus. Moses died; Jesus was crucified—but their leadership counts at this present time more than any past century.

Moses was a layman. No mortal hands of a human presbytery were ever laid upon his head; God laid the burden of leadership upon his heart, and He does the same today. Some of the outstanding Christian leaders of modern times have been laymen. Moody and Marion Lawrence may serve as examples. Moody, in the field of evangelism; Lawrence, in the field of Sunday Schools. The old idea of the clergy is as antiquated as king in government. The leader, whether minister or layman, is one of the Christian family, who may be called of God to leadership. A layman may see the burning bush and hear the voice of God for leadership as well as the call of God to preach the gospel. What the Christian Church needs is not only laymen leadership, but laymen "followship," marching together, working together, trusting together, and reducing the work of the Church to system. The laymen of the Church have reduced their business to system, and they can introduce that same kind of system into the work of the Church. The laymen in the Church are the Church—what they are, the Church is.

BETHLEHEM NOTES.

The board of trustees for Bethlehem College has seen fit in their deliberations and decisions to keep in their employ as financial secretary the writer. I desire herein and herewith and now to say that I appreciate more than I am able to express the confidence placed in me by the board of trustees, and also by the Church. I shall certainly do what I can to carry forward the greatest work of our denomination in the Far South. I regard Bethlehem as a part of our dear Church in this country, and we must see to it that Bethlehem goes!

Rev. S. L. Beougher, Ph. D., has been elected to the presidency of the college, and is already on the job, and everybody who has met him regards him as the right man in the right place. He is hustling for students, and thinks the prospect just fine. I wish everybody every where would just speak a good word for our college. Some one in almost every community of our Church will enter school some where this next fall, why not get them to Bethlehem!

We have before us an unending opportunity, as well as an unlimited one, to say and do for our school. We must finish our present building just as soon as we possibly can, and I think we can do so by the time our Chautauqua meets the 11th of August. Our building must be completed by that time. In order to do this, we must have a few hundred dollars in cash. I am, therefore, asking our brotherhood to please make an effort to help us a little just now. I know the summer season is always a dull season financially to the Southern farmer, but I pray that these words may fall on hearts able and ready to respond as liberally as is possible just now.

I trust many of our own and other people may attend our School of Methods in August and see what we are trying to do. Brethren, you will be surprised to see what has been done when you come. Let your contribution, large or small, come now, and when we have finished the first building, we will plan for greater buildings. The prospects are that we will need more room next term, and we must work and pray to be able to meet the demand. Will not our pastors preach one Bethlehem sermon during the month of July? Will you not pray for the success of our dear old Church and all she stands for?

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The cost of college education is more than it was in former years, but not as much as it seems to be. In fact, in many cases, it costs less to send young people to college than to keep them at home. There is no escape, in these days, from expense in caring for young people. The only fair way to estimate the cost of sending children to college is to figure out what it costs to keep them at home and then calculate the cost at college and find the difference. In some cases the cost would be more at home than in college. In other words, on the average, the cost of sending boys and girls to college is the difference between the cost at home and at college. It certainly does not cost what you pay at college to send sons and daughters off to school. Social life at home makes such demands upon young people's time and means, in these modern times, that, financially, it is often economy to send them to college; and this is especially true of girls.

The above is, no doubt, a correct view of college expense, and the chief reason parents feel and express for not sending sons and daughters to college is the expense. Another thing is true with reference to college education. It lays the foundation for special preparation in any field of life-work. Normal schools for the training of teachers deal largely with methods. Colleges deal with the fundamental in science, art, history, mathematics, language, logic; in other words, collegiate education is deeper, broader, more difficult, and makes possible a larger and more useful future. The history of education shows that college-trained men and women, in the long run, outstrip those who are trained in short-time schools. There is such a thing as getting into the real work of life too soon. Impatience on the part of parents and students is the ban of education. In nature, all quick growths decay very soon. Giant trees mature slowly, but they last long. "Make haste slowly" is not a bad motto. Years of preparation are not lost years. In the field of agriculture no time is lost and no crop is reduced by thorough preparation of the soil; and in building, it pays to lay a firm foundation. It is that part of the building that is out of sight that makes a permanent structure. There are said to be exceptions to all rules, and no doubt some people succeed better without education than others with education; but thorough collegiate training has the best chance to succeed. W. W. Staley.

ELON LETTER.

Several Churches are celebrating College Day during July. The Convention designated the three summer months as College Day period. It is hoped that every Church in our Southern Convention will celebrate College Day during this period. It should be an annual event with us, just like Children's Day or the revival.

The Church needs to give public witness to its faith in Christian education. The Church is the greatest educational institution we have. It aims to mold character in terms of the life Jesus lived and taught. The Christian college is but one of the Church's methods of achieving its aim and purpose. The denominational colleges are the power-houses of Christian leadership for the Church. She cannot make progress without trained and competent leadership. She cannot, therefore, make progress without her colleges.

It is not narrowness to say that the denominational colleges are the hope of the Christian progress of the world. Regret it however much we may, it is nevertheless a fact that the atmosphere of schools and colleges other than those of the Church is not conducive to the shaping of character in youth so that Christian leaders can or do result in any appreciable degree. The Christian colleges can and do teach religion as a normal constituent of the normal life. Other colleges cannot do so, and consequently we must look to the denominational colleges for our leadership in the Church, our leadership in public ministry and in private service.

This appeal is powerful with young people as well as with their Christian parents. Only the other day, I presented it to a fine young fellow, full of the red blood of youth. "I realize," he admitted, "that Elon must train our preachers." Then he thoughtfully added: "We can't have a college if only preachers go to it, and also we need workers besides preachers." Was this boy wrong?

Youth aspires to leadership. Contrary to the conviction of many, youth loves the Church. And especially does youth love our pastors. The pastor can do more to turn young people to our colleges than any other person. Why do so many of them refrain from using their influence for our colleges? To me it is inexplicable.

There are some pastors who always build up a clientele for Elon in every field they serve, and oftentimes when they change to another field the clientele disappears. It must be in their personal attitudes and efforts. It is a tribute to the influence of the man of God bent on influencing his people in the line of Christian duty.

With one of the most pronounced successes in this matter, I recently had a talk and made inquiry as to his procedure. I learned that he frequently refers to the college in his sermons and prayers, that in the homes of his people he always takes it for granted that every child will come to Elon, that he not only reports names of prospects to me, but pays personal visits till the decision to attend our college is reached; that he always celebrates College Day, and that he did this even before our convention started the custom.

When I asked him why he took such lively interest in the college, he laughingly replied that he was running a college at Elon for the benefit of his Church, and that I was in his employ. Then, seriously, he added: "Our Church cannot make progress without a Christian college-trained leadership in pulpit and pew."

College Day will serve admirably to set the people to thinking along these lines. Forward-looking pastors will not neglect so splendid an opportunity to serve God and His kingdom.

BETHLEHEM LETTER.

We are sending letters and blanks to the ministers of Alabama Conference and Georgia and Alabama Conference on which to report prospective students for Bethlehem College, Wadley, Ala., and may the interest they have in the college lead them to send us the names and addresses of the young people in their Churches and communities who should come to Bethlehem this fall. We must depend almost entirely upon our ministers to do this, and we feel it will be about the smallest thing they can do for the college, and that it will be a great pleasure for them to do so.

We are also sending letters and application blanks, to be followed up with the college bulletins to all prospective students. It is a pleasure to send this information, for it carries with it both a challenge and an opportunity. We are gratified with the enrollment of last year, but hope to be able to double it on September 1, 1924.

Most of our old students will be with us next year; they consider it not only an opportunity, but a privilege, to have such an institution right in their midst; and the names of new students are coming in every day. We are delighted to be able to send full information regarding the school; to call attention to the fact that the building will be completed in a short time; that we have added another year of college work, one regular teacher and two special teachers, a larger library and a better-equipped laboratory; that the academic department will receive full credit from the State, and that all students completing the full two years' work here will receive full credit in the institution to which they may desire to continue the work through special arrangements made with the institution without entrance examination. We are ready and willing to co-operate with all students to the limit of our ability, and will be glad to enroll them in either of our courses for which they are qualified.

We need to create a warmer sympathy and a deeper loyalty among our own Church people for Bethlehem College. With it we cannot fail, without it we cannot succeed. He who molds public sentiment goes deeper than he who enacts statutes or pronounces decisions. Lend us your ears while we say if Bethlehem College is ever put on the map and becomes and accomplishes what it should, it will be because the ministry and the laity alike in our Far Southland work; get behind the movement and push with all the power you can, physically, financially and spiritually. It is our school, and we must support it for the sake of our boys and girls. There is no need of our boys and girls going elsewhere for the last two years of academic work or the first two years of college work; they can let their bucket down right where they are—right at home— and receive a strong, practical education of high grade, surrounded by good Christian influences. Parents, decide to send your boys and girls to Bethlehem College, and they will be cared for well.

WHAT TO DO WITH A MILLION!

What would I do with a mlilion dollars? That is not the question I am setting out to answer. If I really had a million I might act just as foolishly as many another millionaire has acted. I used that word "foolishly" very thoughtfully. Jesus considered riches a great temptation from which but few possessors of wealth were likely to disentangle themselves. He called one man a fool. He said riches were deceitful. Surely the evidence all seems to be in favor of the certainty of Jesus' conclusion.

I know of no good reason why I might expect any greater display of wisdom on my part after being exposed to the temptations to which riches subject one than many others whom I know. I might hoard it for my children to quarrel over after I am gone. Others have! I might invest it so as to increase it, and lose it all. Others have done that. No, I am going to set myself a much easier task. I am going to tell how I think a million might be most profitably spent by a person with heaven-quickened vision.

Here in our work at Vanderveer Park, we need money, and need it badly. The need is insistent and persistent. But I am not likely to forget that, so it can wait a little while. The very first thing I am going to do, then, with that million which does not belong to me, is to give $15,000 to the new Christian Temple, in Norfolk, Va. Their new and wonderful temple is provided for within that much, and I want to see it all provided for, that they may turn their undivided attention to the great program they want to put on.

Would I turn my attention to Vanderveer Park next? No; I would ask Bro. Poythress if he and his people could use $15,000 to advantage in their proposed new building enterprise. Nor would I want to leave the vicinity of Norfolk, until I had had a conference with Bro. Garman to see if I could not induce him and his people to judiciously use $20,000 of that troublesome million. Of course it would have to be used in constructive work. Why give them more than South Norfolk or the Temple? Because their ability to secure for themselves is perhaps less.

Following this, I would take a trip to Atlanta, and look over the field there very carefully. I would endeavor to find not less than three strategic points within the city limits, where I would proceed to offer inducements to the Southern Christian Convention Home Mission Board to organize three Sunday Schools, and begin at once to get ready to organize as many Churches. To launch this work successfully, I would like to turn over to that board $50,000. I would trust to their wisdom to retain a portion of it to serve in part as a sustentation fund until they could reasonably expect such funds to come in through their regular channels as would be found necessary.

On my way North I would pause long enough to drop $15,000 in Richmond, suggesting that $5,000 go toward liquidating their debt, while they invested $10,000 in a new enterprise in that city.

By that time I would be straining at my leash so anxiously that nothing short of air service would take me to Dayton fast enough. Arrived there, I would ask Walnut Hills to take $20,000 before I lost it, and get to work at the earliest possible moment on their new plans for a permanent building.

From there, I'd go over to Merom, Ind., and ask President Alexander and his directors if they could use a $100,000 in their business. Whatever else they needed they would have to get busy and find the funds needed wherever they could. Then I'd hop over to Defiance, and see if they could use another $100,000. From there I would double back to Dayton, and tell Dr. Minton that I was getting tired of carrying around so much money with me, and if he would kindly consent to take some $50,000 off my hands I would be forever after under great obligation to him and the Foreign Mission Department.

Knowing how modest Dr. Burnett is, I suppose I would hesitate to make him an offer of any of this surplus trust fund, but I really believe I might get up courage to ask him in behalf of the General Convention to accept another $50,000. If Judge Whitelock happened to be anywhere around, I'd say, "Judge, if you're not too busy, there's a little matter I would like to talk with you about." Then I'd dangle $200,000 before him and ask him if he would be in favor of starting a daily Christian newspaper. If he wouldn't, I would give him $2.00 for the time I had taken, and walk out. If he took it, I would then be relieved of all but $365,000 less expenses in travel, etc. Of this sum I would just like to try an experiment with Dr. Thomas, by offering him $200,000 for our Church Extension Department. Then I would hurry home, and begin flinging dollars around here in Brooklyn and vicinity. Now, if you who read what I have written don't like the way I would think it wise to spend a million dollars, don't give it to me; please don't!

Brooklyn, N. Y. P. S. SAILER.

CHILDREN'S DAY.

June is the month for the celebration of Children's Day.

Has your Church already observed this important special day, and if not is it planning to do so during this month? If it is not possible for your Church to observe Children's Day in June, then be sure it is done as early as possible. This occasion will be of great significance for the local Church and the kingdom for two reasons.

First.—The children will be given special recognition, and this makes for a live Church and Sunday School.

Second.—The offering which should be taken at this time goes to the Board of Religious Education and is one of its principal means of carrying on the great work which it is doing. Make your offering liberal and send the same to C. H. Stephenson, treasurer, Raleigh, N. C.

Write Miss Pattie Coghill, secretary Board of Religious Education, for special literature that will make your Children's Day program interesting, educational and uplifting. Let's make this day a great success for the kingdom. We can. We will.

An Important Event.

All aboard for the annual Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention which will be at New Elam, N. C., July 15, 16, and 17.

This is to be the last State Convention, and for this reason should be the biggest and best. Next year, our State Convention will be subdivided into three Conventions—N. C. & Va.; Eastern N. C.; and Western N. C. It is hoped that all officers of all Conventions will be elected at or before the coming Convention. This is your last chance to attend your State Convention. Don't miss this opportunity of gaining inspiration, enlightenment, and social enjoyment.

If you are a Sunday School teacher come and urge your pupils to accompany you. Who knows what the result will be. Some of our greatest leaders received the inspiration which made them decide on Christian service as a life-profession in just such a Convention.

An attractive program is under construction and will be off the press in a few days. Be sure you elect a full delegation next Sunday. A word to the wise is sufficient. A capable entertainment committee will be there with a hearty welcome for you. The good people of New Elam are expecting a full delegation and are preparing plenty of good things to eat. Those who attend will be royally entertained. The people of New Elam are expecting you. Do not disappoint them.

All aboard for New Elam and a great Convention—come on! Let's go! Don't forget the date —July 15th, 16th, and 17th.

C. H. STEPHENSON,
President.

On June 4th, the ten-millionth Ford automobile was completed at the Ford factories. It took seven years to complete the first million Fords, but the last was completed in 132 working days. This means that the work has been wonderfully systematized. A million cars in 132 days means that the demand is enormous, that system in production has almost reached perfection.

On June 3rd, Albany, N. Y., celebrated its three hundredth anniversary with a great parade. This means that albany is an old city for the United States.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

NOTICE TO CAPTAINS OF M. & M.

There has been considerable, though unavoidable, delay in getting Men and Millions envelopes to the captains that desired them for our Churches. However, the delay has been cleared now, and the way is open to deliver envelopes promptly. We feel that many Churches can use the envelopes to great advantage, and should do so. They serve to keep the matter of paying the pledges constantly before the subscribers, and also permit easy payments because they are regular.

We trust the captains who are not using envelopes will make frequent announcements through their pastors or Sunday School superintendents about paying their pledges. This is the time of the year when many are due and when it is easiest for many to pay. The way to pay these pledges is to drive away at it constantly, and in that way the good thing will be done.

If captains who have money will send it in promptly it will be appreciated, as all the interests which depend on the income from this source need every penny of help that is possible. We sincerely trust the captains will not forget these important facts. The progress of the entire Church depends very largely upon the co-operation and activity of the captains, as well as the pastors.

MISSIONARY PROGRAM FOR JULY.

Woman's and Young People's Societies.

SUBJECT: "Christian Literature and Kingdom Extension."

DEVOTIONAL:

1. Prayer for a deeper consecration to God's work and a greater interest in God's children all over the world.
2. Song.
3. Scripture—Psalm 138.
4. Sentence prayers of praise and thanksgiving.

LESSON PERIOD: There, "Study to show thyself approved unto God."—2 Tim. 2:15.

1. Leader's Suggestions.—July is Christian literature month. Many of our women and young people will have time for reading this summer, either while on their vacations or during the leisure time at home. The woman's board has asked that each member of missionary societies read during the year at least two missionary books. The following list of the finest missionary books has been prepared by the president of the Christian Church Woman's Mission Board with the hope that many of these books will be read this summer:

For Adults and Young People: "Bells of the Blue Pagoda" (China), $1.75; "The Gospel of the Plow" (India), $1.25; "Wonders of Missions," $2.00; "When the East is in the West," $1.50; "The Quare Woman" (mountaineers), $1.50; "New Blood," $1.00; "Lure of the Leopard Skin," $1.50; "White Queen of Okoyong" (Mary Slessor), $1.25; "Pandita Ramabai," 60c; "John Williams," 60c; "Women and Stewardship," 25c; "Money the Acid Test," 75c "The Debt Eternal," 50c; "On the Upward Trail," 50c; "Captain Bickel of the Inland Seas," $2.00; "James Chalmers," 60c; "The Land of Saddle-Bags" (mountain work), $1.50.

For Children: "India Inklings," $1.50; "Next-Door Neighbors," $1.25; "African Adventures," 50c; "Taro," 40c; "The Honorable Crimson Tree," 50c; "Friends of Ours," 75c; "Jungle Tales," $1.50.

The above books may be ordered from the Christian Publishing Association, C. P. A. Building, Dayton, Ohio.

The mission study books for next year may be ordered from the same place. Perhaps you would like to order them now and make preparations for the mission study class this fall. The woman's and young people's book is called "Mind-Kwong, the City of Morning Light," and the children's book is "Chinese Lanterns."

2. Christian Literature for Children.—Because children learn to read while young, keep your Church periodicals before them. Read interesting sketches from them out loud to the boys and girls. Encourage them to read, because reading broadens the vision, develops character, brings them into closer sympathy and understanding of other people and nations. Give them literature which will help them in making decisions for life-work.

3. The Bible and Present-Day Literature.—Isa. 24:16: "Seek ye the book of the Lord and read."

The Bible is the greatest missionary book. It not only gives the plan of life and salvation, but teaches of God's great love for others, our neighbors and our brothers. Suggest to the society members that they read the first five books of the New Testament and mark all missionary references. They all contain great missionary messages. A great many books have recently been written, and are being written which make Bible reading more enjoyable and more real. There are many wonderful books for Christians to read, books that strengthen the devotional life, biographies of great missionaries and Christian heroes.

4. Christian Literature in Other Lands.—People in the foreign countries need better literature and are eager to read and learn. Good literature is one of the greatest evangelizing agencies, because it reaches more people than our missionaries can reach through their broken languages. It binds men closer together into a social solidarity such as must characterize the kingdom of God.

5. Debate.—Resolved, That it is better to send no literature to foreign countries than to send degrading literature.

6. Read Angie Crew's letter from Japan in a recent issue of the Herald of Gospel Liberty.

7. Tell about Yasucki Taizumi, our Japanese boy who went back to his native country last year to do Christian service. He was born in Tokyo at cherry-blossom time; his father a railroad man, and educated in the doctrine of Confucius; his mother a daughter of one of the noble families from the feudal age. Went to a mission high school because of convenience. Was not interested in Christianity, but liked the English hymns. Entered Central University in Tokyo, intending to study law. His interest in philosophy led him to the study of religion. Began attending our Naka Shibuya Christian Church, and later joined Dr. Woodworth's Bible class. After becoming a Christian, he went to school for a while and assisted Mr. Garman in the Church work. He was graduated from Defiance Christian College after spending two and a half of the happiest years of his life there. He went back last summer to a place in his homeland where he was much needed. He is your missionary.

8. Offering for literature fund.

Suggestions for Missionary Work of July.

1. Make a poster to be hung in the Church, telling about the "Christian Missionary." Have some one make a talk about it. Every member of the society and every home in the Church should subscribe to this paper. Order from the Christian Publishing Company, Dayton, Ohio. Price, 50 cents.

2. Buy some missionary books for the Sunday School library.

3. Allow other people to read your good books.

4. Make arrangements to send some member of your society to the Elon Chautauqua and School of Methods or to the Bethlehem Chautauqua. Mrs. Morrill will teach the mission class in both the schools, and she is one of the best workers we have in the entire Church.

5. Are you using the "Prayer Cycle" in your society? They will improve the devotional part of your meetings and deepen the devotional life of your members.

PATTIE COGHILL,
Secretary.

AN IMPORTANT MESSAGE—PASS IT ON.

The "Elon Chautauqua Family" is especially glad to know that this year there will be another summer school for Church workers at Bethlehem College. It is very fitting that, following the first year's session of the college, a week of the vacation period should be given to special work for the workers of all the Churches in Georgia and Alabama, and their friends from everywhere. The Bethlehem Chautauqua will follow that at Elon, opening Monday night, August 11th, and closing Sunday night, August 17th.

Plans are being made for a program which will interest every worker in every Church, Sunday School, Christian Endeavor Society, and Missionary Society. Rev. J. O. Atkinson, the well-known field secretary of the Southern Mission Board, will be there throughout the session. Miss Pattie Coghill will represent both the Mission Board and the Board of Religious Education. Mr. Hermon Eldredge and Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, both of Dayton, Ohio and workers with the Board of Christian Education of our Church, are to be present and take part on the program of this first Bethlehem Chautauqua. If arrangements can be made, Mrs. M. T. Morrill, of Defiance College, Ohio, and Rev. McD. Howsare, executive secretary of the Board of Evangelism of our Church, will both attend this session.

All classes will include work that is adapted to the rural Churches of this section, as well as the Churches in larger places. There will be special sessions each day for the children of Wadley and visitors. Rev. Jesse Dollar, of Elon College, is to assist throughout the week on the program and in recreation.

The Alabama Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention will meet at Wadley, in connection with the Chautauqua, on Saturday and Sunday, August 16th and 17th. Rev. J. H. Hughes is the president of this Convention, and expresses his deep interest in the whole gathering. Mr. J. W. Payne, Miss Tinie Mae Hunt, Rev. G. H. Veazey, Rev. E. M. Carter, Mr. Joe French and others have expressed their deep interest and confidence that this Chautauqua will mean much to the Churches and workers in Georgia and Alabama.

Is not this an important message, and one worth passing on? Register today with Miss Pattie Coghill, Elon College, N. C., if you are interested in seeing this Chautauqua be indeed a message of inspiration and encouragement and real help to many Churches and Church leaders.

LUCY M. ELDREDGE.

SONG BOOKS ADOPTED.

The Music Committee of the N. C. S. S. & C. E. Convention met with the Sunday School and Church at New Elam a few Sundays ago. After discussing the matter of music for the coming Convention, it was decided to use as the Convention song book "The Shining Way," published by the Showalter Company, of Dalton, Ga. The book can be had of the Alfred Williams Company, Raleigh, N. C., at 35 cents per copy. As many singers as can do so are urged to attend the Convention and help in the music. By doing this, real favor will be conferred upon the Convention, as well as the local Sunday School. The Convention song will be No. 65 in the above-mentioned book. GEORGE M. MCCULLERS.
McCuller's, N. C. Chairman Music Committee.

Chairman of Entertainment Committee.

OUR PLEDGES to Men and Millions are Sacred, Solemn and Binding.

These obligations were made through the Church to the Kingdom of God and to all that pertains to building up that Kingdom in the world, so far as our Christian Church is concerned. As Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has so pertinently pointed out: "A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations--'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42)--but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

Many are making great sacrifices to meet these obligations and pay these pledges. Every one who fails to do so not only produces paralysis in his own moral system, but to that extent paralyses the efforts and sacrifices that the faithful and the loyal make.

BEAR IN MIND MEN AND MILLIONS MEAN AND STAND FOR ALL THAT THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH MEANS AND STANDS FOR.

—REMEMBER—

that the fourth year ends April 30, 1924.

After that, we have only one more year in which to meet these obligations. Unless we put forth a mighty effort to pay some on these pledges during the last quarter of the fourth year, there is great danger that we will fail entirely, because of the bulk of our pledge looming up before us in a one-year period.

Paying SOMETHING by April 30, 1924, will make it easy to pay ALL by April 30, 1925. Where there is a will there is a way, and God always helps those who try to their capacity to help themselves.

MONDAY.

The Place of Faith in Prayer.

"Have faith in God."—Mark 11:22. "If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, remove hence . . . and it shall remove, and nothing shall be impossible unto you."—Matt. 17:20.

Faith is one of the greatest functions of the soul. As reason is to the mind, so is faith to the soul. The mind reasons, and the word "reason" is our term for that function of the mind. The soul "faith," and that is the reasoning function of the soul; the great difference being that faith, being of the soul, is in touch with the infinite, and functions where reason cannot go and interprets where reason knows nothing.

In a storm at sea, when the ship was going down and all hands had given up for lost, a little girl, the daughter of the captain, said: "Isn't God upon the sea as well as on land." That was a faith that saved the situation. Elisha told the widow, though she could see no farther, have faith in God and He would supply the needs, and He did. Let us be such exponents of prayer as this. Have faith and trust Him. "He doeth all things well to those that love and serve Him."

Prayer.—Our Father, teach us how to forget ourselves, and when we pray how to extend the soul beyond the limits of earth, to God, and touch Thee with our supplications. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

TUESDAY.

Give the Other Fellow a Chance to Tell What He Knows.

It is easy to get into the habit of talking about yourself and the things in which you are most interested. You have known persons who never carry on a conversatoin long without turning it to one of their hobbies, and you know that you soon tire of them. Your friends would get tired of you if you followed such a course; and, now that you think of it, aren't you as bad as those of whom you have grown so tired? Give the other fellow a chance to talk, is a pretty good rule. If you listen and learn, it ought to satisfy you. At least, before you turn the conversation, you might listen until he has given what he knows about certain things.

If you could learn the fact about the man in a crowd who says the least, you would find, in a majority of instances, that the silent ones are the most successful in their undertakings. The man who sits in a corner of the smoking compartment and says just enough to get the other men talking is getting information of possible value to him. Yet dont' be foolish and talk too much about private matters in the smoker. (Copyright, 1924, International Feature Service, Inc.)

Prayer.—Our Father, we bow on our knees unto Thee, that Thou mayest grant us according to Thy riches, that we may be strengthened in the inner man, that Thou mayest dwell in us, that we may know the love of God, and may be filled with His fullness. In His name we ask it. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

Happiness Through Meekness.

"Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth."—Matt. 5:5.

Meekness is that quality of spirit which floods the soul with happiness. It is not something given to us suddenly, but something which we patiently learn. Jesus said, "Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart." We can never be truly happy unless we are meek, for the reason that happiness carries with it a consciousness of service rendered, and we cannot serve unless we are meek. Meekness carries with it the idea of patience, gentleness, knowledge. A wild ox is no service to his master (unless klIled), but the meek, gentle, well-broken one plows the field and bears many burdens. While teaching the lesson on meekness, Jesus compared Himself to a well-broken ox and said: "Learn of me and you will find rest." He taught that what might be supposed and regarded as burdens would become blessings, and open up fountains of happiness. So let us learn to be meek and to approach our tasks like the Master, without fretting and complaining, and we shall learn that the greatest degree of happiness may be found by meekly bearing the heaviest burdens.

Prayer.—Our Father, we would learn at the feet of Jesus. Forgive our impatience and fretting. Our spirits are sore because we lacked His counsel and wisdom. So teach us that our burdens may become blessings. In His name. Amen.

THURSDAY.

Transformation.

"Be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind."—Rom. 12:2.

It is amazing what an immense amount of time and pains and money some people will spend in order to change their appearance. For instance, their wrinkles! Or their gray hair! Or those disturbing lines which deepen about the eyes! They will go to this or that specialist to have some transformation effected. They don't know how it is to be done, but somehow it must be done, for old age, with its spoiling fingers, must be driven away.

But there is another way of transformation, and it is heaven's way. It does not begin with material things. Indeed, material things play no part in the magic influence. The transformation begins in the mind.

"Be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind." It begins its wonderful work of rejuvenation by completely altering the world of thought, and imagination, and ideal, and fancy, and dream. It transforms your thoughts of God, and your thoughts of yourself, and your thoughts of others, and your thoughts about everything. The effect is as if we were to change all the furniture in a room, and the pictures and books, and even the bric-a-brac. Desires and aspirations, and judgments—all changed into something which shares the life and likeness of God!

Prayer.—Our Father, so turn our minds toward Thee and heavenly things each day that our ideals, imaginations, fancies and dreams, desires, aspirations and judgments, may share the glory of the true life and at last the likeness of God. In His name we ask it. Amen.

FRIDAY.

Checking Up on Yourself.

"What lack I yet?"—Matt. 19:20.

I heard a story the other day that is appropo. A colored man walked into a drug store and said to the proprietor:

"Boss, I wants to speak to Colonel Robelin; can I use your telephone, sir?" he requested.

"Certainly," said the proprietor; "help yourself."

The darky proceeded to the phone, and the following was heard:

"Is this Colonel Robelin?" . . . "Uas, sir." . . . "Well, Colonel, I'm a colored man. I heard the other day that you wanted a colored man to work for you, to be house man and gardner, etc.; I's a man of some experience, and I thought I would like to work for you if I could, sir." . . . "What's that, sir?" . . . "You say you got a man." . . . "Yas, sir." . . . "And is he satisfactory?" . . . "Yas, sir." . . . "Well, I thank you just the same, sir." . . . "Good-by, sir."

As he left the telephone, the druggist said: "I want a man to work for me. I'll give you a job."

"Boss, I don't want no job," said he.

"You don't want a job! Why, what's the matter with you? Didn't you just ask the Colonel for a job?" said the druggist.

"Yas, sir; but I don't want no job. I wuks for the Colonel, and I wus jes checking up on myself to see if I wus giving satisfaction."

Our Father, speak to us in terms of Thy word and the works of Jesus, and put flight to every wrong, complete every short-coming, and inspire us to strive to see that nothing is lacking in us. Amen.

SATURDAY.

The Eye and the Heart.

"Mine eye affecteth mine heart."—Lamentations 3:49-58.

The book of Lamentations was written by a man who saw the ruin of Jerusalem with his own eyes, and what he saw affected his soul so that he dipped his pen in tears. The eye has a powerful influence on the heart, and it is said the impressions through the eye are many times faster than through the ear. If we could see the results of war in Europe, it would affect the heart, and make us pacifists. To see millions of crosses, and maimed bodies, undernourished children, blind and groping youths, ruined cities and fair lands ravaged, would so affect the heart that we would all work and pray for a warless world.

Prayer.—Oh! Lord, reveal to us the glory of Thy kingdom, quicken our spirits, sweeten our hearts, lighten our loads, smoothe our way, and we will do our best. Amen.

SUNDAY.

Why Go to Church?

There are two first very personal and human reasons, says Mr. C. E. J., of the Christian Work, why we should go to Church. One is to get away from self, and the other is to get closer to folks—two very essential things to a well-balanced soul.

Why do we have to go to Church to do this? Can it not be done elsewhere? The resorts, picnics, etc., furnish ample opportunity for this. These things do not furnish this fellowship completely. The Church is the only ground of common humanity. It is the only place where we meet because we are human beings, and differences are or may be forgotten, and where every one may be called the children of God. In the house of the Lord, we may forget class, position, wealth and poverty, age and sex, and become fellow-mortals; we all become needy creatures and think of things in common; we all may become thoughtful and meditate on duties and obligations to one another and to the human race; where we may think of fellow-troubles in the pilgrimage of life and sympathize; where we all may bow together before the Maker and be reminded of His goodness and mercy; be made to realize that we have obligations to one another, and how best to discharge them. The place of worship and prayer humanizes us, mellows us, quickens our spirits, sweetens our hearts, lightens our load, smoothes the way and brightens the sky.

Pray that the Lord may help us to be all this.

THIS PAGE IS FOR THE CHILDREN.

WHAT SHALL BE THE NAME?

Dear little Friends of THE SUN:

Just one more week left to send in your name for the contest. I am just as anxious as you to see who wins. Now, as this is the last time I'll write to you before the contest closes, I want to urge each one who has not sent in a name to do so at once—and, my! you don't know how proud I am of all the names you have sent, and how I adore getting letters from such dear girls and boys as belong to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. There is just one thing, though: why not get some other boy or girl to take THE SUN? Why not tell your little friends about our new page and the stories and games and contests? The more boys and girls in the contests, the more fun it will be.

Oh! yes—there is to be another big contest real soon, so watch out every one!

Hurry as fast as you can with your name for this page. I want about ten more children to send in names. So help me out, little folks.

Your page editor,

DARK PONY.

Once there was a pony.
His name was Dark.
He took boys and girls to Sleepytown.
One night a boy stopped him.
The boy's name was Noddy.
Noddy said:
"Take me down To Sleepytown."
Noddy jumped upon Dark Pony.
Away they went galloping, galloping, galloping.
Soon they came to a little girl.
The girl's name was Niddy.
Niddy said:
"'Let me go, too;
Take me with you."
Dark Pony stopped galloping.
Noddy said: "We will take you."
Niddy jumped up behind Noddy.
"Go, go! Dark Pony," said she.
Away they went galloping, galloping, galloping.
Soon they came to a White Dog.
The Dog said:
"Bow, wow, wow!
Take me now."
Dark Pony stopped galloping.
Noddy jumped down to get the Dog;
Then he jumped upon the pony.
"Go, go! Dark Pony," he said.
Away they went galloping, galloping, galloping.
Soon they came to a Black Cat.
The Cat said:
"Mew, mew, mew;
Take me, too."
Dark Pony Stopped galloping.
Niddy jumped down to get the Cat;
Then she jumped upon the pony.
She took the Cat with her.
"Go, go! Dark Pony," she said.
Away they went galloping, galloping, galloping.
By and by they came to a barn.
They saw a Red Cock there.
The Red Cock said:
"Cock-adoodle-doo;
Take me too."
Dark Pony stopped galloping.
Niddy said: "Come, Red Cock,
You may sit behind me."
The Red Cock flew upon behind Niddy.
"Go, go! Dark Pony," said Niddy.
Away they went galloping, galloping, galloping.
Soon they came to the woods.
They saw a Gray Squirrel there.
The Squirrel said:
"Take me, too,
Along with you."
Niddy said: "Yes, Gray Squirrel,
We will take you;
Sit by the Red Cock."
The Squirrel sat by the Red Cock.
"Go, go! Dark Pony," said Niddy.
Away they went galloping, galloping, galloping.
They went galloping on and on.
How happy they all were!
They sang, and sang, and sang.
By and by, Dark Pony stopped—
He had come to Sleepytown.
All the eyes were shut.
Niddy and Noddy and White Dog,
And Black Cat, and Red Cock,
And Gray Squirrel were all
Fast asleep.

ORIGINAL WORK FROM OUR OWN LITTLE FOLKS.

Henderson, N. C., June 20, 1924.

Dear Miss Moffitt:

I am so glad the children are going to have a page in THE CHRISTIAN SUN all our own. I especially like the stories. I am sending in a name for the contest. I hope we will like THE SUN better now.

Sincerely,
CONRAD COGHILL.

Kind Hearts and Simple Faith.

However it be, it seems to me
'Tis only noble to be good!
Kind hearts are more than coronets,
And simple faith than Norman blood.

GUSTIVIOUS GETS A LETTER.

Dere gus tavious—

I will now endevur to rite and answer your long and tedius letter of last week. I am not verry tall, as you thought, but I am fat and rather short for my age, with a few freckles, which i got frum taking after father—mother thinks so; but I can shure fight, an' so you see bein' fat shure don't keep me from bein' strong. Mother said you ort to come up to New Jersey and see us. I could take you over the river to see New York City. Every night I can see a million lights over there, and they shine down on the water of The Hudson river and make it look black. I went to wanne Makers store with Mother yesterd'y, an' while we wus there I saw a whole room full of birds, and there was a cage in the room that had some green birds in it and they did not have any bills. Yes, sir-ree! You ort to come on up here, Gus, as we are cousins, and I forgot to say they had lizzards and goldfish in the same room with the birds.

Do you have grass on your yard? I do not; they's only one millionnairs home in New York City that has a lawn all around it—that is Andrew Carnegies manshun. and I can not play on that; they won't let me—so come up, Gus.

Your loving cousin,
PETERSON FLETCHER MACDONNELL.

OUR ORPHANAGE.

Oh, just let me tell you something about the children who live there. One day your editor went to see the "orphans," and just for fun, you know, we begun to play—all of us played. How we did love it, too. Four little tiny girls, about six years old, laughed and romped and sang so long that they were all out of breath. Then some one told them a nice Peter Rabbit story. They couldn't wait to hear another one, and so it went on for an hour. Oh! what fun we had.

Their "mother," the matron, and Mr. Johnston, their "father," keeps plenty of good clean clothes and food for them. And they are such happy little folks, too. And, do you know, they have as good manners as if they each one had been living in a home—same as you and me. They know how to divide their ribbons and sashes and handkerchiefs—and they make good grades in high school, too. About fifteen high school "orphans" belonged to the junior music club—and don't be surprised if they some time sing for you over the radio! Most all of the girls are talented in music and are allowed to develop that talent all the time.

Oh! I love 'em all so much; and they must be happy, for they smile a lot and sing a lot, and play—when they sew up all the baby dresses and all the little boy overalls. The girls can sew beautifully. Oh, yes, they make all their own clothes and the costumes they use in all their programs at school are made by each one taking part in the program.

Just let me say one more thing about our orphanage girls and boys. (I mus'nt let them see all this, for they will get all puffed up with pride) but they are loyal to their orphanage home; they don't mind saying: "I'll never tell Mr. Johnston a lit, I'll tell him the truth, for he is so good to us." Oh, how do I know? Because your editor heard that very remark from three high school orphans not long ago—just last month. Yes, I love them. So do you if you will stop and remember that they belong to you.

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT.

THE FAIRY FROLIC.

By the moon we sport and play,
With the night begins our day;
As we frisk, the dew doth fall—
Trip it, little urchins all!
Lightly as the little bee,
Two by two, and three by three:
And about go we, and about go we!

Subject: "The Boyhood of Jesus."

Golden Text: "Jesus advanced in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and with men." Luke 2:39.

Lesson: Luke 2:40-52.

Devotional Reading: Psalm 119:9-16.

Reference Material: Matt. 2:1-23; Luke 2:39.

The Boy Jesus.

What an appealing combination! For is there anything more interesting than a growing boy? And could there possibly be anything with more power of appeal than the boyhood of Jesus—He who became and always will be the world's Perfect Man? One's heart beats just a little faster, and his imagination is fired just a little more, as he turns to the records to seek for information in regard to this most interesting period in the life of time's most interesting personality—Jesus Christ, the Son of God. What a lesson to teach to boys and girls—and to men and women!

Jesus spent his boyhood in the city of Nazareth. The city lay on a hillside sloping to the southeast, and just back of it, rising to a height of fifteen hundred feet above sea level, there was a hill, which commanded a marvelous view of the historic scenes of Central Palestine. From a vantage point on this hill one could see points that teemed with historic associations and events. It is quite likely that the boy Jesus spent many hours here, viewing the picturesque and significant world spread before his vision.

Jesus was one of rather a large family, at least four other brothers and at least two sisters. The names of his brothers alone are given—James, Joses, Judas, and Simeon. His home was probably one of the typical Hebrew homes—square, built of brick, with a dirt floor and a single door, with very modest and sparse furniture. It was probably within this same house that Joseph and his sons plied their trade as carpenters. It was more than likely, too, that it was in this humble home that Jesus first got His conceptions of Fatherhood, brotherhood, and many other ideas that later colored His teachings.

Jesus evidently developed normally and naturally. There is no evidence that he was a "prodigy" or even a "genius." I like to think of Him as a "regular boy," living a normal life and entering whole-heartedly into life as he found it in the humble Galilean village. He played with the other boys, and He certainly must have been a lover of nature and the out-of-doors, for His teachings are embodied in these figures. He must have been a leader, too, even as a boy. The fact that He was such a Master of men later indicates that.

Jssus was an all-'round boy. He "advanced in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and men." His parents may have been humble, and even poor, but Jesus was quick to learn, and He had a sound educational basis for His lifework, even though His parents did not know the measure of that lifework. He was especially well-trained in the Scriptures, as is evidenced by His frequent and masterly use of them. He was also a close observer and student of life as He found it, so "He knew what was in the heart of men." His work was, of course, another educational factor. And perhaps primary in His life was the training and influence of His mother, Mary. We cannot explain the life and work of Jesus adequately if we leave her out of account.

Hand in hand with His growth in wisdom went His growth physically, socially and spiritually. He was in all probability a strong, red-blooded boy, and in early life built a foundation of health, and laid up a reserve of energy that enabled Him to "pack" so much of life and intense living in so brief a compass of time. He also was a favorite with His companions, and it requires no wild flight of the imagination to picture Him as a moving spirit in the youthful life of Nazareth. And above all He advanced spiritually. During all these years of boyhood and youth there was unfolding and developing those finer qualities of mind and heart that later made Him the full revelation of God, and the supreme spiritual leader of the human race. In all these years there was, along these lines, that development and growth that was embodied in the Master's words, "first the blade, then the ear, then the full-grown corn in the ear."

The lesson for today deals with the significant incident in the life of Jesus—the visit to the temple. The teacher will do well to give the lesson careful study and to present its great truths in an attractive way. Some of these truths are as follows:

1. Life at its best is foursquare.

2. Religion has a place in the life of a growing boy or girl.

3. One of the best ways for parents to train their children in the way of religion is to set the example themselves.

4. Parents often lose boys and girls and do not know it.

5. Even a boy finds religion interesting when he finds some one to talk sympathetically and understandingly with him about it.

6. God speaks to boys and girls in terms that they can understand.

7. We find Jesus just where we lost Him.

8. A child should be in subjection to his parents.

9. Parental subjection should be based on reason and love, not force.

10. Jesus knows how to help us because He lived our life.

11. Great men are usually the product of hard work, and not genius or youthful prodigy.

12. Mothers keep many things in their hearts which the world—nor their children—knows nothing about.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

By William T. Scott.

July 13, 1924.

Topic: "Abolish War! Why? How?"

Scripture Lesson: Isa. 2:1-4.

Daily Readings: July 7, The vision.—Micah 4:1-5. July 8, War inhuman.—Luke 21:20-26. July 9, Suffering and sorrow.—Isa. 3:1-5, 25, 26. July 10, Peace by good will.—Luke 2:8-14. July 11, Peace in Christ.—Eph. 2:17. July 12, Our hope.—Ps. 46:9-11.

"To have peace, we must prepare for war," some one has said. But the fact is, to have peace we must prepare for peace. Armies and navies have proven themselves hostile to any peace plan. If nations do not want to fight, let them put up their guns, which are nothing less than an open challenge for the war god to become active again.

Peace comes only when God (Love) is exalted. War elevates man—peace always elevates God. National greed, an enemy to peace, must be suppressed before we shall see peace. The individual of the nation is the source, after all, for war or peace. Therefore, the Church has a place to fulfill in preparing the world for peace, by reaching the individuals. There must be a consistent program for peace. The home must teach it, the schools must teach it, and the Church must prepare these teachers by giving to them the love of God for their hearts. Where there is the love of God in the hearts of enough individuals, there will result a national and universal love that is able, and will, blot out war.

What is accomplished by war, after all? Is the world any better off today than it was in the days of early 1914? Is the world any nearer a union of brotherhood? Economically, is the world any better off than it was before the European holocaust?

What part has Christian Endeavor in abolishing war? It was the Christian Endeavorers who started the slogan: "A Warless World." What can C. E. do to help make that a reality? Every Endeavorer should make it the rule of his life to uplift the Christ who alone can bring peace to the individual life. Thus by a combining of the individual hope and prayer for peace there will be a united hope and prayer that is bound to yield us victory in the end.

Suggestions and Questions.

What can America do to advance universal peace?

How can we help to create international good will?

Should we support an international court of justice? Why? The society might plan a debate on the issue of the League of Nations and allied plans for peace.

What stand should Christians take on the "outworn" phrase, "It is a righteous war?"

Let this motto be placed on a blackboard or placard and used for the meeting:

*P*ray
*E*arnestly
*A*ll
*C*hristians
*E*verywhere.

What was the most influencial factor in the destruction of civilization of the past—Egypt, Babylon, Persia, Rome and even Germany?

Is there a need for us to fear such a thing will befall our own free America?

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

Our little folks still win prizes. It seems they have been in a winning humor this spring. They won a number of prizes offered in the graded school which have already been mentioned. Several of our girls have been in Mrs. Riche's music class this spring, and Swannoah Weatherspoon won one of the prizes she offered to her class. We feel very happy that our children have been standing at the head of their classes this year.

We are happy that we are still passing mileposts in our financial report for this year. Our grand total for this year amounts to $10,322.26. We are climbing on up toward half our goal for this year. We want to insist that all Sunday Schools and Churches join in on the monthly offerings and help us care for our large family of one hundred and five children.

We realize that there is much fruit in this country this year; plenty and to spare. Now, dear friends, will you be so kind as to fill a few cans for your Christian Orphanage. Fruit is one thing all the children enjoy. They could eat fruit three times each day the year round. If we can get fruit we would like to can quite a bit ourselves.

Don't forget us when you are enjoying so much good fruit this year. One dozen cans would not be a big sacrifice on your part, but it would be a great blessing to us if a good many of our good women would put up a dozen cans for us. I believe they will, because they have never failed to do their part.

The following has been sent in since our last report: Mrs. J. A. Williams, Franklin, Va., 1 box clothing; Mrs. M. S. McNeal, Hobson, Va., 4 dresses; Virginia Jenkins, Driver, Va., 1 dress; Mrs. Barrett, 4 dresses; Rosemont Church, Va., 1 box clothing for Mabel Andrews.

THE HILL HOUSE ORPHANAGE.

It was my good fortune during my visit to the New Jersey Conference to visit our new Orphanage at Carversville, Pa. "The Hill House," as it is called by the residents of the place, is one of the most beautiful spots I have ever seen. Overlooking a wide expanse of surrounding country, shaded by trees, and with an enormous lawn where the children can run and play, it is a wonderful home we have provided for these saddest of little wards of the Church.

The old house needs a tremendous amount of work done to it still, although Rev. L. F. Johnson and his wife have accomplished wonders already, and I am hoping that many other Churches will undertake the responsibility and the pleasure of preparing and furnishing a room for the occupancy of some of the least of these for whom we should provide. Since the building was once used as a school, the children are not packed together in dormitories, but two or four in a room, thus enabling the child to have some of the pleasures of "mine" and "thine" which is often so sadly, even if necessarily, lost in institutions.

Good fortune attend the Hillside House and its eighteen children now within its care.

On Sunday afternoon, May 25th, it was my good pleasure to visit our newest outpost of work in the city of Brooklyn. Here in Hyde Park, one of the new settlements, we have a splendid Sunday School meeting in a home, but doing fine work. The suburb is growing as fast as brick, mortar and boards can be put together, and it seems a strategic place for the founding of a new Church, which shall pay for itself in service over and over again in the years to come.

The value of such a work may be readily seen when we consider the work done by Rev. E. B. Flory and his corps of workers in the new Riverdale (Dayton) Christian Church. This Church was undertaken by the Miami Conference and the Dayton Council of Christian Churches. Starting from nothing at all in October, 1923, it had over two hundred members in June, 1924, with a Sunday School, which had outgrown its quarters in the temporary structure erected even before that structure was completed.

About sixty of the present membership were recruited from other Christian Churches of the town who had moved out to the Riverdale section, but the rest are members who have been secured by the "hand-picking" method, one by one. It took faith, prayer, determination, unlimited work, and money, but it is already paying great dividends. It is my hope our new Hyde Park School may be equally successful in the days to come, and that other Churches also may take courage and, in other sections of our work, "go and do likewise."

MRS. F. E. BULLOCK.

HOW DEBTS ARE INCURRED.

It is a question whether a wise policy has been pursued. There is no such thing as a permanent road; highways costing from $20,000 to $60,000 a mile have been laid where intelligent investigation would have shown them unnecessary. A road properly drained and rolled would answer the purpose in at least half of the cases, and the cost would have ranged from a few hundred dollars to $4,000 a mile, depending on the locality. Traffic on a great majority of the roads does not warrant $35,000-a-mile paving.

Upkeep of a paved road is one of the permanent items in a State budget. The amount is not small and the taxpayers, either directly or indirectly, are being called upon for ever-increasing sums.

About ten years ago, when the paved road craze first hit one of the Southern Ohio counties, a small stretch of one of the main traffic highways was improved. The upkeep cost has totaled $55,000 a mile and the public, while repairs were being made, has been deprived of the use of large sections of it at intervals.

Roads paved three and four years ago are now crumbling in many cases. In other instances they hold up fairly well.

There is no argument against paved roads for heavy traffic, but a careful investigation would show them unnecessary in hundreds of cases.

It is a practice in many States to issue bonds to pay for roads—bonds maturing in from twenty to fifty years. Long before the first bond comes due, the road improved needs repairs; and interest charges must be met. Before the debt is paid, the road has been rebuilt.

Take a most conservative example: A stretch of road six miles long is to be paved for $200,000. Bonds for twenty years at 4 per cent are issued, the first batch of $20,000 maturing in ten years. By the time the bonds are paid, the road will have cost $316,000. But if there is any part of the original work left at the end of twenty years, it will be surprising. The chances are, judging from some present-day roads, that the upkeep will be close to half a million dollars in addition.

Ohio's road maintenance bill exceeds $5,000,000 a year.

After the war, many States, in fact all of them, were eager to show their appreciation of the boys who took the great chance. Many of them acted on the impulse and voted a bonus. The States' debt, due to the bonus, is $207,000,000.

Lack of a plan of amortization was the cause of $118,000,000 of the liability in 1922. Officials evidently have found more pleasure in spending money than in paying debts. The easiest way for a debt to be paid is to issue bonds to pay it. Why should they worry? Let their successors do that.

Less than $17,000,000 of the outstanding bonds represents investments in educational institutions.

In South Dakota, the per capita exceeds seventy-four dollars, but the bonds have been issued to advance funds to farmers.—Selected.

PICTURES SENT BY WIRE.

Various attempts have been made to transmit pictures by wire, and many inventors are working on the problem, but the American Telephone and Telegraph Company has been the first to demonstrate a method which is virtually ready to be put on a commercial basis, though the results are far from perfect. By a new electrical process, fifteen pictures were transmitted from Cleveland to New York over a telephone wire, the actual sending requiring less than five minutes.

Before the dawn of the motor-car age, a passing motorist picked up a farmer who had never before seen an automobile. The farmer was duly impressed and delighted. To impress him still more, the motorist put his foot on the accelerator, and for six or seven miles they tore along like the wind. Then something went wrong with the steering gear, and they ran into a tree. The farmer and motorist alighted unhurt on a bank of moss. The car was not damaged. "That was fine," said the farmer, as he got up. "We sartinly went the pace. Tell me this, though: how do you stop her when there ain't no trees?"—The Baptist.

IN MEMORIAM.

"Sunset and evening star,
And one clear call for me;
And may there be no moaning of the bar
When I put out at sea."

God in His all-wise providence saw proper to remove from our Sunday School of the First Christian Church, Richmond, Va., on June 27, 1924, our much-loved co-worker, Mrs. Mary Holmes, age 24, wife of Wilbur Frost Holmes.

As a small tribute to her beautiful character, we offer the following:

We, "seeing through a glass darkly," cannot fathom the mysterious way of an infinite God in removing from our midst our friend in full strength of her young womanhood, but while we deplore her death, we bow in humble submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well.

We record our appreciation of her Christian character and faithful service to the Sunday School, and sorrow fills our hearts at the passing of her kindly, helpful spirit, but we cherish her memory.

When God called her home she left eyes full of tears, home lonely because she comes no more, kind memories from those who knew her. The world is poorer for her passing, but the "laborer's task is o'er," and she gains life everlasting.

To her devoted husband and little son who so deeply mourn the loss of wife and mother, and to other relatives we tender our sincere sympathies and Christian affections, and commend them to the Divine Healer and Comforter.

We request that a copy of this tribute be placed upon the records of this Sunday School, a copy sent to the members of the family, and a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

HOLMES.

Mrs. Mary Holmes, wife of W. F. Holmes, died in Sibley Hospital, Washington, D. C., following an operation for peritonitis. She was 24 years old and leaves her husband, one son, four years old, father, mother and four sisters and one brother to mourn her departure. In early life she joined the Spring Hill Christian Church, and in her Sunday School and Church there and in her godly home she learned those deep lessons of piety that made her religion a joy and service for the Master a pleasure. When the First Christian Church of Richmond was organized, she became one of the charter members. She took a class in the Sunday School and was one of the most active and earnest workers in all phases of our Church life. Her life was short, as we count time, but in those brief years she did more than many who attain their three-score years and ten. Her sudden death was a great shock to our Church, where she will be greatly missed.

The funeral services were conducted on Sunday afternoon, June 29th, by the writer, assisted by Rev. W. B. Fuller, and the remains laid to rest in the adjoining cemetery beneath a mound of flowers which were but a feeble expression of the high esteem in which she was held by her large circle of acquaintances.

May god bless and comfort the bereaved. W. T. WALTERS.

WOMBLE.

Bernice, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Womble, died at Sanford Hospital after an operation for appendicitis Friday morning, May 30, 1924, at 1:30.

Bernice would have been fifteen years old had she lived until August; she was a member of the Methodist Church at Moncure, a bright young girl, and said she loved Jesus and wanted to live for Him. Bernice was a smart student in her school work; had passed the ninth grade. She was the leader of her class. Bernice was a loving child, and always wanted to do her part. She was kind to all. She never complained, but was always ready to help with whatever task came. She attended Sunday School regularly and was secretary of her class. She always carried a smile and a kind word for every one. The funeral was preached at the Presbyterian Church at Haywood by Rev. R. L. Williamson, pastor of the Christian Church.

She leaves three brothers—Jennings, Glenn, and J. L., Jr., and father and mother to mourn. We cannot understand why she was taken from us, but some day we will understand and see her face to face in heaven, the place prepared for them that love the Lord. She was loved by all who knew her. Our deepest sympathy goes to the bereaved family. May God's blessing comfort the family.

MRS. S. V. HOLT.

MR. SAM DAVIS ENGAGED FOR EVANGELISTIC WORK.

The Southern Christian Convention Mission Board has engaged Mr. and Mrs. Sam Davis for work in evangelistic meetings. Engagements and dates will be arranged for them by Dr. G. O. Lankford and Mrs. W. H. Carroll, of Burlington, N. C. All who desire the services of Mr. and Mrs. Davis should correspond with the committee, who will give prompt attention to all inquiries. Address Rev. G. O. Lankford, Burlington, N. C.

REYNOLDS.

On June 9th, Mr. Verlin Reynolds reached life's last mile-post and laid down the last burden, at the age of 82. He had been a member of the Friends Church for forty-five years. Though a new-comer in the community, and among comparative strangers, the hands that laid his body to rest and those who attended the funeral were prompted by sympathy and respect for the departed veteran. May the five sons who remain find comfort in God's promises. Interment was in Poplar Branch Cemetery.

R. L. WILLIAMSON.

WOMBLE.

Miss Bernice Womble, the fourteen-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Womble, was called to be with Jesus on May 30th. About a year ago she accepted Christ as her Saviour, and many bear testimony to her sweet Christian spirit and helpful influence, which will continue to help them in the upward way.

Besides her parents are three brothers—Jennings, Glen and J. L., Jr.—besides many relatives and friends, who weep, but "not as those who have no hope." Interment was in Haywood Cemetery, near Moncure.

God's blessings on the bereaved.

R. L. WILLIAMSON.

Why Drugs Fail

Many chronic diseases fail to respond to drug treatment, even in the hands of the best physicians, whereas acute diseases usually respond readily. When a disease has become chronic, drugs often seem to do as much harm as they do good, for the system rebels against them. It is just this class of cases which derive the greatest benefit from drinking Shivar, America's best stomach, liver and kidney Water. If you suffer with chronic dyspepsia, indigestion, sick headache, rheumatism, kidney or liver disease, uric poisoning or other curable conditions due to impure blood, do not hesitate to accept the Spring's liberal offer as printed below. Their records show that only two in a hundred, on the average, have reported "no benefit." This is a wonderful record from a truly wonderful Spring. Sign the following letter:

Shivar Springs,
Box 16-H, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. IM MEMORIAM.

Mr. W. W. Spain was born in Mecklenburg County, Va., on the 23d day of December, 1856, and died at his home at Palmer Springs, Va., the 7th of June, 1924, aged 68 years 5 months and 15 days. He was married to Pattie A. Atkins March 26, 1882. To this union were born six children, one of which preceded him to the spirit land several years ago.

For the last few years of his life, he had been a great sufferer, never knowing what it was to be without pain. By the grace of God he bore his afflictions with great patience. All that the family, kind friends and physician could do for him seemed to be in vain. His time had come and his soul was ready and willing to take its flight back to God who gave it.

His remains were laid to rest in Mt. Auburn Cemetery, June 8th, the Church of which he was a member for many years. The burial services were conducted by Rev. W. M. Eure, of the M. E. Church, in the presence of many friends and loved ones who gathered to pay their last tribute of respect.

He leaves to mourn his loss his wife, three sons and two daughters, three brothers, seven grandchildren and a host of loved ones and friends.

Farewell, dear Father, sweet thy rest,
Weary with years and worn with pain;
Farewell, till in some happy place
We shall behold thy face again.
'Tis ours to miss thee all our years,
And tender memories of thee keep
Thine in the Lord to rest, for so
He giveth His beloved sleep.

HUFFMAN.

Miss Huffman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Walter Huffman, who live near Stanley, Va., died early Tuesday morning, June 17, 1924, at Rockingham Memorial Hospital, Harrisonburg, Va. She was thirty years old, and had been a consistent member of Leaksville Christian Church for about seventeen years. Her pure, Christian character was one of rare beauty, and her quiet, unassuming life was spent in untiring, loyal devotion to her parents, to her two sisters, and to her Church and to God. She lived and died as a Christian, triumphant in her faith in Christ.

The funeral was conducted and the interment made at Leaksville on Wednesday afternoon, June 18th. The writer, assisted by Rev. A. W. Andes, officiated.

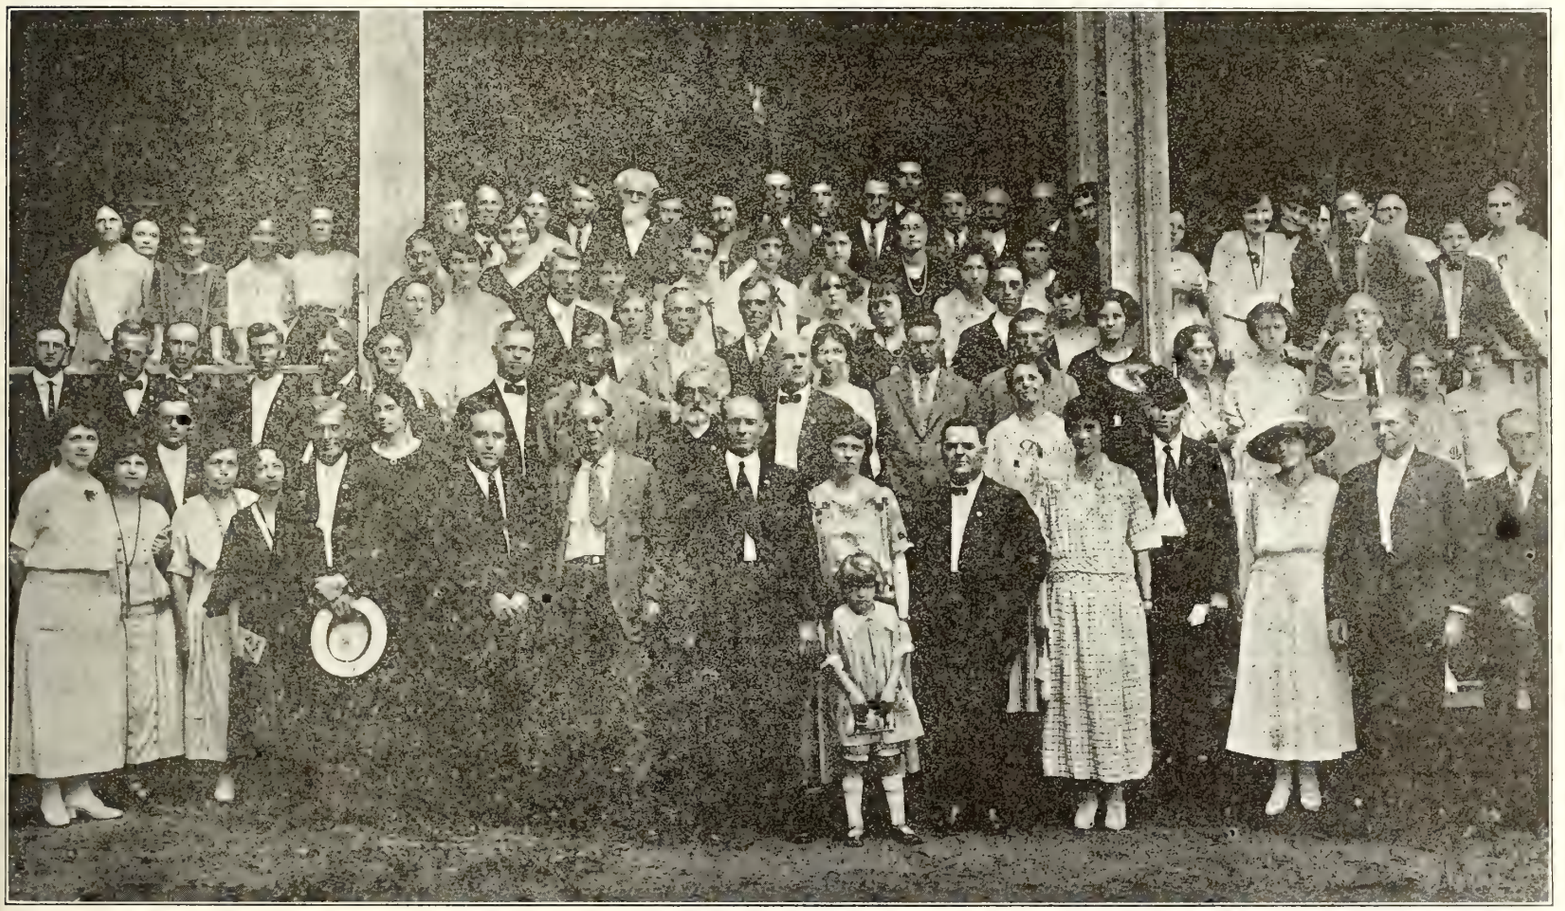
THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY



GROUP OF ELON CHAUTAUQUA.

By Rev. S. M. Lynam.

A Proposed Treaty.—

Under the leadership of Dr. James T. Shotwell, professor of history at Columbia University, who was a member of the American delegation to the Paris peace conference, a treaty to outlaw war has been drafted. Dr. Shotwell got the idea of such a treaty from many prominent Europeans, and was assisted by a number of the leading minds of America in his work. The treaty is not all that it might be, but it is a laudable effort in the right direction. It is true, however, that we can never legalize peace into reality. It must come through the Church as it shall Christianize the thinking of all the people.

Methodists Relent.—

When the Methodist General Conference approved the pronouncement of John Wesley, declaring that "As to all opinions which do not strike at the root of Christianity, we think and let think," and when the conference substituted for the question put to candidates for Church membership, "Do you receive and profess the Christian faith as contained in the New Testament of our Lord Jesus Christ?" for "Do you believe in the doctrines of the Holy Scriptures as set forth in the articles of religion of the Methodist Episcopal Church?" they were taking a long step forward. Little by little the Church is shaking itself free from outworn theology, and is adapting itself for the new tasks which now confront it. It is seeking today to give to its people a usable faith for a work-a-day world.

Justice Needed.—

Evidence has been brought out at last which shows that the riot which occurred at Centralia, Wash., on Armistice Day, 1919, was the fault of the American Legion, and not the I. W. W. It has now been proved that the legion paraders attacked the I. W. W. hall, and that the I. W. W. men fired in defense of their lives. The movement to raise a fund for a memorial for the ex-soldiers who lost their lives in the riot came to naught, rightly. The State of Washington has in Walla Walla prison eight men serving forty-year sentences for murder. It should do justice, and release these I. W. W. men who are innocent of any crime. It is easy these days to lay blame upon Socialists and I. W. W.'s, and the American Legion took advantage of this fact. For it, the legion is culpable, and those who led the attack of the hall at Centralia should suffer, and not the men who fought for their lives.

Justice should be done, and criminal propaganda such as the legion distributed should not be allowed to bias judgment.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Chautauqua! Chautauqua! Chautauqua! Read this week's SUN and you will know its meaning, and its purpose.

If one is in doubt about what the Church is trying to do through its Chautauqua, let one read this issue of THE SUN all through.

We hope you will like our Chautauqua number of THE SUN well enough to read it through —and then tell others about Chautauqua.

It is regrettable that we do not have the faces of all who are to teach and preach at the Chautauqua to present in this issue of THE SUN. But those we have or could get we present.

Chautauqua attendants at Elon and at Bethlehem are fortunate in the prospect of having Rev. McD. Howsare to teach courses in evangelism. Dr. Howsare is at home in this field, and his labors have thus far been attended with marked results.

Mrs. Alice V. Morrill is to be one of the teachers at Elon, and also at Bethlehem Chautauqua. This is welcome news indeed. Mrs. Morrill has messages that are weighty and worth while, and presents them in a manner to be received and deeply appreciated by all who are fortunate enough to hear her.

We call attention to a notice elsewhere from Rev. J. L. Foster, Waverly, Va. Bro. Foster has served at Waverly as pastor for the past twelve years, and now deems it wise to make a change. Any Churches needing a pastor would do well to write him at once, as he is open for pastoral engagement. He is one of our successful and wide-awake pastors, and puts energy and enthusiasm into all his work.

Those of us who were fortunate enough to hear Dean Enders at Virginia Beach Chautauqua some years ago will certainly rejoice that he is to be at the Elon Chautauqua this year. He is a man of marked personal piety and power, a scholar and a thinker whose Bible talks are wonderfully illuminating and spiritually uplifting. The builders of our program this year are certainly fortunate in the prospect and promise of Dr. Enders' coming.

Pleasant Ridge Church, Randolph County, has voted to have a missionary rally the fifth Sunday in August and to invite all the Churches of the Randolph-Montgomery district to send delegates for the occasion. The rally for this district was to have been held at Ramseur in the spring, but was rained out. But Rev. T. J. Green, who is deeply interested and who is pastor at Pleasant Ridge, is anxious that the rally be held in his field. The program will be announced later.

Rev. H. Brisco Hall, pastor of Palm Street Church, Greensboro, writes June 30th: "Yesterday we had 184 in our Sunday School. This is the highest mark yet, but we are aiming at 200. There were 45 in our Men's Bible Class, room nearly full. We had good attention; it is an incentive to earnest effort and to do one's level best." Bro. Hall is meeting with enthusiastic response in the Palm Street Church, where he is doing fine work and rapidly building up our good cause there. We congratulate the happy people and faithful pastor.

How can the leaders and teachers know how to approach our people unless they keep in touch with the thought and feeling of our people as expressed in THE CHRISTIAN SUN? Of course, teachers are expected to have something worthy of presentation, but it is necessary for the teacher to know the thought of those to be taught.

Has your Church, your Sunday School, your Christian Endeavor Society, your Missionary Society appointed a delegate or chosen some of their members to attend the Chautauqua at Elon or at Bethlehem? If not, why not? It will pay if the proper persons are chosen, even if the body so electing and sending bears the expense of the one or ones sent.

We are advised that Rev. R. A. Whitten will retire from the pastoral charge of Rose Hill, Columbus, Ga., about September 1st. Some of our Georgia and Alabama pastorates should certainly make sure of Bro. Whitten's services the coming year. He is one of our most energetic and consecrated pastors of the Far South, and should be kept in full-time service as preacher and pastor.

Rev. S. L. Beougher closed his pastorate with the Graham and Providence Churches last Sunday, and is to move with his family this week to Wadley, Ala., where he begins work as president of Bethlehem College. Bro. Beougher is well equipped for his new field of service and carries into it scholarship, zeal, loyalty and enthusiasm. Bethlehem is to be congratulated on securing him as its president.

INVITATION.

Come! Listen! Live!

Come where? To Elon Chautauqua, July 28th, and spend that week.

Listen to what? Bible study and lectures by those who know. Here you will learn how to improve your Sunday School and thus be able to more nearly approach standardization.

How live? You will live in a spiritual atmosphere while here. You will drink at the fountain of life and go out prepared to respond to the Church's need of you.

Won't you come?

MRS. J. W. PATTON.

GREETING.

Greeting to all our Chautauqua family—those who have been with us in the past, those who will be with us this year, and those who are planning to come next year.

We are studying your needs and trying to plan our program to meet those needs. We are considering your comfort and pleasure, and doing all we can to make your stay with us pleasant. Mrs. Kirtland is to have charge of the boarding department again this year, which means good meals. The happy hour is to be under the direction of Miss Pattie Coghill. You cannot help but catch some of her spirit of joy and optimism.

We have tried to strengthen and make more practical our courses of study. Three-unit courses are offered, and a certificate will be awarded every one attending 80 per cent of the sessions.

The evening programs promise to be especially interesting.

Now, all together—pastors, superintendents, teachers, C. E. presidents, and everybody interested, old and young—come and enjoy a week of Christian fellowship, and at the same time get much that will help you in your work.

We bid you welcome—thrice welcome—to the 1924 Chautauqua! W. T. WALTERS,
President.

COMMITTEE MEETING.

The Committee on Education of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference will meet on July 22, 1924, at Bethlehem Church, near Suffolk, during the Sunday School Convention. All candidates for the ministry and licentiates who have any business with the committee will please meet us at that time or write the chairman of the committee what their plans are for the future.

W. W. STALEY (Chairman).

PROTRACTED MEETING.

Franklinton, N. C., June 29, 1924.

DEAR DR. ATKINSON:

I preached here this A. M., and went out to Mt. Carmel to conduct funeral services of Bro. Demene, at 2 P. M. The protracted meeting at Pope's Chapel will begin the fourth Sunday in July; two sermons on Sunday, 11 A. M. and 8 P. M. No dinner at the Church. During the week we will have preaching every day at 2 P. M. and 8 P. M. No meals at the Church. Will notify you later in regard to the protracted meetings at Mt. Auburn and Franklinton. If you find that you can drop in on us at any or all of these meetings, do so without fail.

NOTICE.

The North Carolina Christian Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention will meet with New Elam Church July 15 to 17, 1924. The Church is located three miles from Merry Oaks, N. C. Delegates and visitors coming by train will purchase tickets to Merry Oaks. This is on the Raleigh-Hamlet branch of the Seaboard Air Line. Trains leave Raleigh at 8:45 A. M. and 4:10 P. M., arriving at Merry Oaks at 9:33 A. M. and 5:01 P. M. Trains from the South arrive at Merry Oaks 10:08 A. M. and 3:35 P. M. Those who desire entertainment over night will please notify Mr. W. M. Goodwin, New Hill, N. C., R. F. D. No. 2. Those who are coming by train, notify Mr. Goodwin, giving date and time of arrival. The first session will be held at 8 o'clock Tuesday evening. Supper will be served at the Church Tuesday evening.

STANLEY C. HARRELL,
General Secretary.

NOTICE.

Notice is hereby given that, pursuant to the action taken by the North Carolina Christian Conference in its recent session at Wake Chapel, the executive committee of the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference will, at the approaching session of the North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at New Elam Church, July 15th to 17th, call together the delegates from the respective Churches of said Conference and reorganize the Sunday School Convention of the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference, electing officers, appointing committees, and making necessary arrangements for time and place of meeting of the Convention in 1925. All actions taken in the proposed meeting at New Elam will be referred to the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference at its next session for ratification and approval.

CHAUTAUQUA AND EDUCATION.

For a long time we of the Far South section of our work have looked for an institution like unto Bethlehem College. We have had our dreams and visions, but the misty future has not permitted the dawning of a full realization. As the years come and go, its pages are passing which gradually reveal an idea of the place the institution is to fill among us. It comes because of the Church, and to fulfill the mission of the Church in the educational interest of its people.

The local Church is imbibing the inspiration. It is looking more and more upon the possibilities of others. And beside our own, stands the sister denominations represented in the section. The community spirit is a unit. The institution is spoken of as "ours" and with untiring zeal the problems are met by all.

We are looking anxiously to the opening of the first session of the Chautauqua or Summer School. There is a desire to know better how to meet the duties of the increasing demand upon us. From the Chautauqua we are expecting to acquire some of this knowledge and inspiration.

We have witnessed the closing of a most successful session of the literary work. Its closing exercises at commencement were of a high order; it was the first session. The inspiration of the past and the prospects of the future cause us to look with fondest expectations to its future years. So with the Chautauqua. While we are not hoping as guests, in one sense of the word, we are glad to take our place among those who come for better work and effective. We are expecting many of the leaders of Churches to come. Let us make this an introduction of the real purpose back of the movement and in the hearts of the Board of Christian Education. E. M. CARTER.

MONUMENT FUND.

Previously acknowledged	$6.00
Dr. R. S. Stephens, Dover, Del.	3.00
Total	$9.00

In transmitting his gift to the fund, Dr. Stephens writes: "When I read the letter in THE CHRISTIAN SUN about the Rev. James O'Kelly's grave, I felt sad to think it had been neglected so long. I wish I was able to make my check for $30.00 instead of $3.00. I hope you will soon receive enough replies to complete the amount needed."

Is it not a little singular that the first contribution to this fund came from Alabama, the second from Georgia, and now the third from Delaware? We are wondering if the people in North Carolina and in Virginia, where the monuments are to be established, and where the anxiety and historic concern of the people should be greatest, are indifferent to this vital matter, or are they waiting to see what those at a far distance will do? The checks should begin to come thick and fast for this fund, because it certainly is a matter that should be near and dear to every Christian heart. J. O. ATKINSON,

Treasurer Committee on Memorial Fund.

NOTICE.

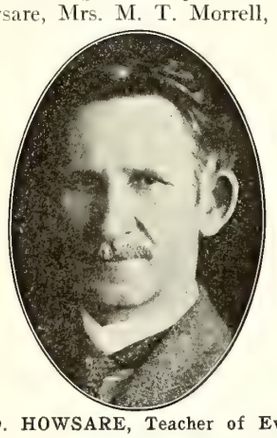
To the Christian Churches that are looking for a pastor:

I am leaving the Christian pastorate of Waverly, Va., after twelve years' service. The Conference year closes the last of October, 1924. I would be pleased to correspond with committees on supply or Church secretaries looking to pastoral relations. Very sincerely,

Waverly, Va. JOS. L. FOSTER.

OPPORTUNITY KNOCKS AT OUR DOOR.

Never before in the history of our Southern Conferences has there come such a rare and gracious opportunity for the study of the problems which have confronted us in our Church, Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work as we will have in the Chautauqua and School of Methods, which will be held at Bethlehem College August 11-17, 1924. It is said that the success of any school depends largely upon its teachers, but where can we find a better teaching faculty than we have in Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Hermon Eldredge, Miss Lucy Eldredge, Rev. Jesse Dollar, Rev. McD. Howsare, Mrs. M. T. Morrell, and Miss



REV. McD. HOWSARE, Teacher of Evangelism.

Pattie Coghill. These are outstanding characters in the work of the Christian Church. The program promises to be well adapted to the needs of the busy pastor, the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor worker, and none can well afford to miss it. The aim of this school is to train for Christian leadership. We have the trained teachers; may we have the folks that need the training?

The Chautauqua idea grew out of the calling of a conference of Sunday School workers by Bishop John H. Vincent, at the camp-meeting grounds, on the shore of Lake Chautauqua, N. Y., in 1874, and it has grown in popularity and usefulness, designed to reach every village and hamlet in the United States. Roosevelt has called it "the most American thing in America," and our chautauqua and School of Methods is the most Christian thing in America, and should be patronized by all within reach of it.

We are expecting a large enrollment, we are hoping for the best; but this will not bring true success. Only a careful planning of every detail and hard work will result in true success. Why should we not do our best, since the time in which we live calls for special effort to bring about a better Christian spirit, better religious training and education, Christian nurture and evangelization of our youth. Our summer school at Bethlehem College, Wadley, Ala., offers this opportunity. We hope to see you at the Chautauqua. Don't disappoint us. S. L. BEOUGHER,

President Bethlehem College.

REOPENING SERVICES AT SANFORD.

The people of the Sanford Christian Church are beginning to realize the truth in the old adage "There is no place like home." Last summer we were out of our Church several months, repairing the building, adding Sunday School rooms and a heating plant. In a few months after we got back in the building we had a fire which practically destroyed the building and equipment. Our little band at once rallied its forces, and with the aid of the other denominations in the town and friends, we have rebuilt and equipped the building, ready for the opening service July 13th.

The Sunday School has prepared a special program for Sunday morning, and is making a special effort to have every member present at that time. The opening service for the Church will be Sunday evening, at which time we are endeavoring to have every member of the Church present. The Church hopes to make this a "red-letter" day in its history, and go back into our better and nicer Church with a greater zeal to do better and more efficient work in advancing the kingdom than we have ever done.

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Davis will be with us for the opening services and remain for the following week to conduct the music for a series of evangelistic meetings, led by the Evangelistic Clubs of the town.

Pastor Williamson and his good wife are doing a splendid work in keeping this little flock together under the handicaps he has labored since he came here. In each case when we were out of the Church building, the school board of the town graciously offered us the use of the high school, which is near our Church, to hold services in. This was a good substitute, but we have found out that there is no place like home.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE CHAUTAUQUA.

There are many Chautauquas this summer. They are the order of the day, and are worth while. However, there are only two for CHRISTIAN SUN readers in the South. One is at Elon College for us of Virginia and North Carolina; one at Bethlehem College, Wadley, Ala., for us of Georgia and Alabama. These are ours! They are the best, and the only ones, we of THE SUN family should consider. In this issue, these Chautauquas are viewed from many angles and by competent writers. But, after all has been written and said, there will be much left for each reader to fill in and add to for himself. Not half has been told, or can be told, in any speech or paper about the blessing and benefits, advantages and opportunities presented at and through a Chautauqua.

Last year, at Elon, where so many great and good things were being said and done, we found ourselves wishing again and again for those who were not here, that they too might share the benefits that those present were getting.

First of all, every Church should urge its pastor to come, and see that his expenses are paid to come. It will well repay our Churches to do this. The pastor will get from the Chautauqua and carry back to his people that which is worth far more than the cost of his coming and his keep while here.

Then, secondly, some officer of each Church should be elected to attend; a deacon, or the secretary or treasurer or some one who will attend on behalf of the Church and then give the Church the benefit of what was learned at Chautauqua.

Likewise, of the Sunday School, Christian Endeavor, missionary societies and each auxiliary of the Church. It will pay these organizations large dividends to have some of their number, as many as possible, present at and learning from the Chautauqua.

SUN readers should bear in mind two facts:

First, the Chautauquas are held for the benefit of the Church, all the Churches; but only those Churches can be benefitted whose representatives attend.

Second, there are competent and able and devout men and women teachers at the Chautauqua who will make all the programs well worth hearing.

MISSIONS IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

There are three good reasons why every Christian Sunday School should have something about missions in the school once a month, and on that Sunday take the offering for missions. The first reason is that our Southern Christian Convention, representing all our Churches and Sunday Schools, and all the Sunday School Conventions of the South, have adopted this plan and urged again and again that every school adopt this. We should certainly teach our young people to be loyal to their Church, to their Conference and to their Convention. Our wisest heads and noblest hearts meet in these Conventions and give prayerful consideration and much discussion to the best method to be employed by schools. When our Conventions have spoken through our delegates, it certainly is becoming in the local schools to follow the way of wisdom and adopt the plans worked out by the Convention. The first reason, then, for having missions in the Sunday School and take a monthly offering in each school is that of loyalty and consecration to our Church and the cause we represent.

The second reason is that it helps the school to adopt such a plan. Most of our leading schools have tried out the plan and have found it helpful. In a few schools, they regard "Missionary Sunday" as the best Sunday of the month. There has been a standing offer for a long time that if any school will take one offering a month for missions and one offering a month for the Orphanage, and then retain the other two offerings a month for current expenses, and does not find at the end of the year a sufficient amount in hand to pay current expenses, then the mission secretary and the superintendent of the Orphanage will make up the deficit. Almost invariably the Sunday Schools which have tried the plan have found that they realize more from the two Sundays a month they keep than they used to realize from keeping all that they collected. We certainly should teach in the Sunday Schools to give as much to others as we keep for ourselves. Our schools need the great moral and spiritual help that this plan brings. It says to the children, "Seek to share with others the pleasure that you yourself enjoy." No school can fail to profit by adopting this plan.

The third reason is that the future growth and power of the Church depends in a very large measure upon whether our schools do this or not. No Church can grow until it becomes missionary, and no Church can become missionary until its children and young people have become acquainted with missionary needs and missionary obligations. Many of our older people are indifferent to missions, and it is too late to reach them for missionary activity now. Our young people are our hope, and they are in the Sunday Schools. Children are more susceptible to the missionary appeal than grown-ups are. The only reason why we are sending out so few missionaries to the home and foreign fields is simply because we have not taught missions in the Sunday Schools. It is reported that the Methodist Episcopal Church, North, has more missionaries in more parts of the earth than any other Protestant denomination of America. There can only be one reason for this.

More than fifty years ago, this Church put it in its discipline that every Sunday School must be a missionary society. Until every one of our Sunday Schools come to be missionary societies we are going to have slow growth and few missionary volunteers. I say again that the future growth and power of the Christion Church very largely depends on whether we adopt the plan of giving one offering a month to missions and studying missions at least once a month in our schools. Here is our plain duty as well as our solemn obligation. It is the effectual door through which our schools may enter to a room of larger service and greater achievement in our Master's name.

MAKE THE CHAUTAUQUA A MECCA.

Wouldn't it be great to have 75 preachers of the Southern Christian Convention together for a week—working in the class-room together, discussing their problems in conference or personally one with another, meeting in the same dining-room and having those days of fellowship together? Add to these, 150 Sunday School superintendents and Church officials, men who are leading in the lay work of the Church—spending a week together, studying Church problems and Church methods, exchanging ideas and getting acquainted with each other. Add to these, 300 of our most progressive Sunday School teachers, each better equipping herself for her important task by special study in her own line and through the contrast with others getting a larger view of her mission and learning new methods for the prosecution of her work.

When to these we add 50 Christian Endeavorers and 50 representatives from our Woman's Missionary Societies, each of whom has enjoyed the association of all the groups and taken a special course of study in their own fields of service, and we must not omit the hosts of young people who need the larger vision of the Church and the kingdom and who would return to their homes and Churches inspired for service.

Is all this a day-dream or an air castle, or is it a possibility? This is the aim, the purpose, the hope, the goal and the prayer of the management of the Elon Chautauqua. We would make it the mecca of the Southern Christian Convention.

W. T. WALTERS,

APPRECIATION OF 1923 CHAUTAUQUA.

When I went to Chautauqua last year, on a moment's notice, I had no idea what a splendid treat was in store for me. Rev. Edwin B. Flory, who was then our pastor, took three of our young girls, who assist in our primary department, and me through the country in his car. We had a most delightful trip from the very start. We arrived at Elon Monday afternoon, in time to be among the first guests received. We almost felt ourselves hostesses, because we helped to greet those who came later.

There was inspiration in the first service, and every hour gave us something to enjoy. Our classes were interesting and helpful. I attended regularly and felt that each instructor left with us something of real value.

Particularly do I remember Mrs. Morrill's class and our study book, "The Leaven in Japan." She made the lessons attractive, and every woman who attended that class should have gone back to her home society prepared to have made her experience there an asset to her own society.

Dr. Shelton Smith and Dr. W. A. Harper had the class in stewardship. Their instruction opened interesting avenues of thought, and some day I hope to have an opportunity to put into practice some of the things suggested there.

The lecture period was a real treat, and the splendid evening programs were very much enjoyed. I have not mentioned the "Happy Hour," as most of us called it. It was the one hour when everybody met together and had lots of good, wholesome fun. We also had another happy hour. After the day's program was completed, we gathered on the back porch for our watermelon feasts. This was not on the program, but was a nightly affair, and such fun we did have!

Our dining-room experience was most delightful. The meals were splendid, and the service most excellent. The program put over in the dining-room at the table kept everybody guessing what was coming next. It was the surprise part of our daily program.

If I had it in my power, I would send at least five persons from every Church in the Eastern Virginia Conference to Chautauqua this summer, and if I were financially able I would pay the expenses to encourage them to go, believing that they would so thoroughly enjoy their experience that they would want to go back again and carry friends with them. Our Churches should be greatly encouraged by a new inspiration among its workers, and we should make our Chautauqua a great thing for our denomination.

Berkley, Va. ELIZABETH P. BRYANT.

CHAUTAUQUA AND SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

Every year, in our Chautauqua and School of Methods, special provision has been made to meet the needs of the great force of workers that are doing such valiant service in the work of the kingdom—the Sunday School leaders. This year is no exception to this plan, and those who are arranging the program are to be congratulated on what they have to offer for this year along this line.

First, there is that of Church School administration, and Sunday School officers who can avail themselves of this course will be fortunate. It will be taught by Dr. W. A. Harper, who needs no recommendation as a teacher.

Second, there will be a course especially recommended for young people, taught by Rev. J. H. Lightbourne. He endeared himself to the young people last year. The textbook to be used is "Community Forces in Religious Education," a title which bespeaks interest and worth-while study. He should have a large number of young people enrolled in this class.

Third, there will be a class on children's work, conducted by Rev. E. B. Flory, and this should appeal to all engaged in the children's department of our Sunday Schools. Mr. Flory has had large experience, and comes to us with the last word as regards this department.

Let all of our schools play to avail themselves of the advantages offered by having our workers attend our Chautauqua and School of Methods at Elon College July 28th to August 3d.

MRS. C. H. ROWLAND.

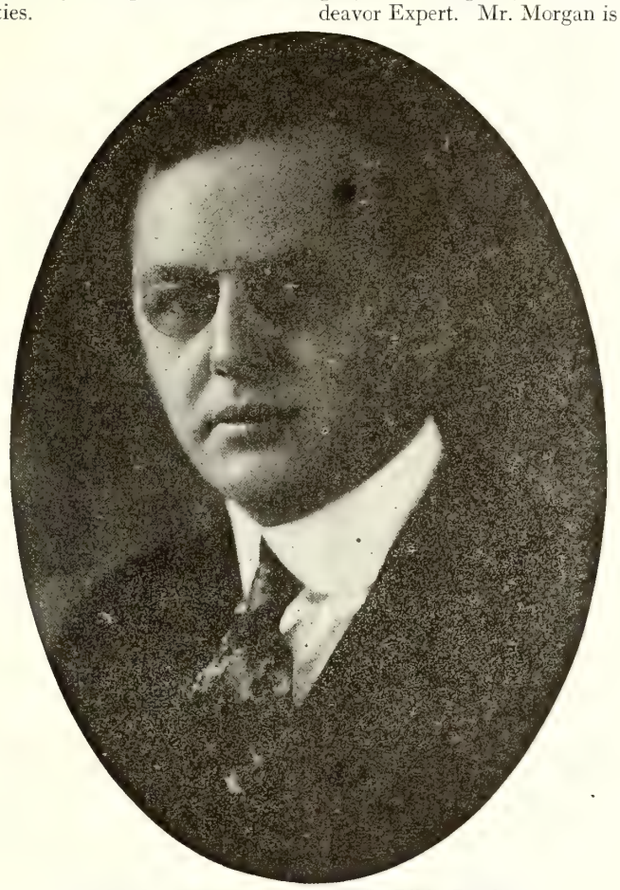
THE BOYS AND GIRLS AT ELON.

Nobody looks forward to the Elon Chautauqua and School of Methods with more eager delight than the boys and girls of Elon, and the boys and girls who may come with their parents to the gathering. They know that part of the program is planned just for them, and they are on hand to enjoy every minute of that time.

This year there will be a "J. O. Y." Club, which every boy and girl from nine to twelve years of age may join, and a "H. & S." Club which is for younger boys and girls. Come and find out all the things these clubs will do. There will also be special features for the kindergarten folks.

Each morning of Chautauqua week, beginning when the regular classes begin, Tuesday morning, and continuing through Saturday, there will be sessions for the boys and girls. Trained workers will be in charge, and the daily program includes worship, Bible, missionary stories, songs, handwork and games. And what boy or girl does not like to sing and play, to hear stories and make things?

The sessions for the boys and girls are planned with two main purposes in view. The first is to give the children a real share in the program of the week, which will bring them new truths and much joy. The second is to demonstrate to Church workers the possibilities of the daily vacation Bible school and of week-day religious instruction, and to lead many to begin such work in their own communities.



REV. STANLEY C. HARRELL, Bible Teacher.

Visiting boys and girls will enjoy becoming acquainted with Elon College, and counting up the years until they will be going there to school. They will all want to hear what Mrs. Hyatte will tell them about junior Christian Endeavor. They will enjoy the afternoons and the evenings on the campus, when everybody will sing together.

Fathers and mothers may come to Elon this summer assured of the fact that the program is planned, remembering the boys and girls, and that there is much there for them.

The boys and girls of Wadley and visitors will enjoy a like program at Bethlehem College from August 11th to 17th, for there the boys and girls will also meet every morning for the Bible stories and songs and games, and the other features which the Elon boys and girls will enjoy just a little earlier in the summer.

Dayton, Ohio. LUCY M. ELDREDGE.

C. E. AT CHAUTAUQUA.

The importance of Christian Endeavor is not to be overestimated. When the local society properly functions, the spiritual and social life of the Church with which it is connected constantly improves. Rightly organized, in charge of consecrated workers, it adds to the general efficiency of all branches of Church activities. It stimulates the religious life of the community, attracts young people and leads into the kingdom countless numbers.

But it must be a live organization, must be composed of young men and women with vision, must inform itself concerning the needs of the Church and the community. In other words, its members must be consecrated, alert, well-informed and tireless in their efforts for the cause of the Master and the good of humanity.

Among the many interesting subjects to be studied at the Elon Chautauqua of 1923, I found the Christian Endeavor to be most interesting. Each one in a class of fifteen taught by Mr. Morgan, from Virginia, received the Christian Endeavor Expert. Mr. Morgan is a wonderful teacher, and I sincerely hope that in the 1924 Chautauqua we may have even twice that number in the class.

OUR ANNUAL CHAUTAUQUA.

I am wondering if you have made your arrangements to attend our Summer School, or the Chautauqua, at Elon College, July 28th to August 3d! If not, don't you think it is high time that you were considering this matter seriously? Especially, if you really want to enjoy your vacation socially, spiritually, and financially.

Judging from the tentative program, a good time is awaiting all who attend. It is a good idea to have two or more from every Church to attend the entire session. I doubt if you could possibly make a better investment. Try it out, and I feel sure it will add to the building up of your Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society as nothing else could do.

You pastors and superintendents want to get busy right now! Sign up; then line up for a great time at Elon.

C. H. STEPHENSON.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Chautauqua is a small city on Lake Chautauqua, in the southwest extremity of New York State. It is a celebrated summer resort, made famous by the "Chautauqua Assembly" founded there by Bishop John H. Vincent and Lewis Miller, in 1874, fifty years ago. The assembly is now known as the "Chautauqua Institution," whose distinctive mission is "to direct the reading habits of people who have received the best training in the best institutons, and desire to pursue after-school courses; and for those who have not had collegiate training, but desire to get the college students' outlook upon the world and life. The system comprehends a four years' course of reading and study to be pursued under officers of the institution, and really leads up to a diploma. On the tenth anniversary of the circle's organization, 200,000 persons, scattered through all parts of the world, belonged to the association. It has developed into a wonderful institution.

The movement has led to the establishment of hundreds of "Chautauquas" throughout the country, to the establishment of summer schools in American universities and colleges, and correspondence schools. Fifty years of such a history has added greatly to the culture of the people, and that broader outlook so characteristic of American progress in the finer ideals and practices of twentieth-century life. The Chautauqua idea is no longer an experiment, but a success in all parts of our country. The founders of great institutions make contributions to human progress that cannot be measured in one generation.

Our Chautauqua will open at Elon College, N. C., on July 28th, and close on August 3, 1924; that is, it will open on Monday after the fourth Sunday in July and close on the first Sunday in August. When the program appears in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, all the members of the Church in the Southern Christian Convention should read it, consider the opportunity it offers to pastors, Sunday School officers and teachers, Christian Endeavor leaders, and all interested in the work of the kingdom and the efficiency of Church activities. The Chautauqua leaders will provide a worthwhile program; the college will provide ample accommodation at minimum cost, and the teachers will do their best without pay.

The atmosphere will be wholesome, recreational hours will be enjoyable, and the week will be inspiring along religious and educational lines. Every Church and Sunday School should be represented. It would even pay Churches and Sunday Schools to provide for the expenses of delegates chosen to attend, learn, and return with new willingness to serve, and increased information for service. We have been too backward in striving after thorough preparation for Church work. Remember July 28th—and be present.

W. W. STALEY.

ELON LETTER.

Herbert Spencer lived to ripe old age and produced until the end. He said the best vacation is a change of work and scene. In his case, the philosophy he advocated certainly worked.

The mind and body need what we call a vacation, a change of work and scene. Vacation time is not lost time. We always return to our routine work from a vacation, no matter how brief, renewed in mind and body. We soon accomplish more work than we would had we remained constantly at our post of duty.

It is customary for business houses and offices to give a week's vacation, oftentimes more, to their employees. They find it pays. When life was rural, with long stretches of rest and daily change of detail, vacations were not so necessary; but in the highly specialized social order of our time, the best results come from the practice.

One of the best and most helpful ways to spend a vacation is to attend the summer school of religious education of our Church at Elon or at Bethlehem. At Elon, the date this year is July 28th to August 3d, and at Bethlehem it is August 11th to 17th.

Our Chautauqua, or summer school, offers a complete change of environment and an enlarged field of interest. Comfortable physical surroundings, wholesome food, splendid fellowship, inspiring lectures and addresses, real classes for the serious and practical consideration of the best methods of work in local Churches, Christian sport and recreation, songs that touch the heart and inspire to noble achievement, the warm handclasp of old friends, and the equally warm handclasp of new friends—these are some of the real attractions of our summer schools.

And when we return to our homes, we come not much depleted in purse as is the case so frequently when we go to the resorts, where vacations are made possible by the desire for profit. A friend recently "vacated" in Florida. He laconically told me that Florida, as he saw it, was famous for two things—oranges and tourists, and that both of them got skinned. You won't find it that way at our summer schools. They are not conducted for material profit. They are maintained for physical, social, mental, and spiritual profit, the four characteristics of the full-rounded life, and in these directions they most admirably succeed.

Leadership training is fundamental in our needs as a Church. Our summer schools are a most fruitful source of such training. Daily vacation Bible schools are springing up all over our Church this summer, because last year our workers at Elon saw the good to be accomplished by such schools. The employment of all-time workers in the local Churches as directors of religious education was also strongly urged, and at least three Churches have recently added these really necessary pastoral assistants in the modern-day Church. Such achievements should lead a host of our young people as well as our present leaders, to these schools for leadership training and character development this summer.

A CHRISTIAN EDUCATION PILGRIMAGE.

BY HERMON ELDREDGE.

I. THE START.

[Foreword.—Mr. Hermon Eldrege has been sent by the Christian Church as its representative to the World's Sunday School Convention in Glasgow, Scotland. He has chosen to add to that journey a "Pilgrimage to the Shrines of Religious Freedom" in Europe, and has joined an university extension tour party, under the leadership of Dr. Walter S. Athearn, of Boston University, and will visit the scenes of the lives and labors of the great pioneers of religious liberty in Europe, including the homes of Wycliff, the Wesleys, John Knox, Fox, Whitefield, Calvin, Zwingli, Cromwell, Robinson and the Pilgrim Fathers, and other leaders and the homes of the poets and writers who have contributed to Christian thought, such as Wordsworth, Milton, Gray, Erasmus and the Oxford, Cambridge and Edinburgh University leaders. Mr. Eldredge has agreed to write for THE SUN a weekly letter on his travels, of which the following is the first.—EDITOR.]

Our train was just entering Canada, near Montreal, where I was to sail on the S. S. Doric for Liverpool the next day. The Canadian customs officer had just examined our baggage contraband, and three of us were engaged in conversation which developed that one was a devout Catholic and was educated for a priest; one a free-thinker, and one a field secretary and editor of the Christian Church.

I had just made a remark about something that Drummond had written, and the young Catholic (who had been entertaining us with his escapades in a Catholic seminary) took it that I meant Drummond, a Canadian baseball writer. We had a good laugh at the mix-up, and since we had gotten to such good-fellowship, I suddenly turned to him and said: "I hope you will not be offended, but I would like to know how you square up your stories of "wine, women and song" with your devotion to your Church. You know, I am a Protestant and a Y. M. C. A. man, and you are a Catholic and have been extolling the K. of C.—how do you mix your fast living with your religion?"

He flew up in the air for a minute, but my free-thinker companion insisted that my question was a fair one, and that he too would like to hear its answer.

"Well," said the young almost-priest, "if a fellow goes to Church and to confession for his sins and takes the sacraments, he can have his 'fling' in the world if he wants it, and nobody is the worse for it."

This was my first lesson in religious liberty on a ten-thousand-mile search!

And coming into old Montreal, with its near-million population and its mixture of booze and intense religious life, I am inclined to believe that our young train friend is not alone in the conviction he expressed. I do not believe I ever saw so much "religion" and smelled and saw the effects of so much booze in a single twenty-four hours in my life as I have seen today. I have seen the religion because I have looked for it, but I have come in contact with the booze because it looked after me, it seemed.

I suppose, and I know, that first it strikes one in the face coming here from prohibition U. S. A. to beer-ridden Montreal. I actually smelled beer in the air within five minutes after I left the train. And then to see again the endless rows and signs of saloons, such as we used to have, and to have it served openly on the hotel dining-room table and a "wine list" pushed into my hands by a waiter—well, it was sickening, and one meal there was enough; and it was in the Queen's Hotel at that, one of the finest hotels in Canada. I know I never thanked God so heartily in my life for prohibition in the United States as I have today.

Religion.

But as to the religion of such a city!

Montreal is called the strongest Catholic city on the North American Continent. I was in one Catholic Church today (Notre Dame), which will seat over ten thousand people. My guide told me sixteen thousand, but I counted and figured out that his story was that of an overzealous adherent of the faith.

But it was by all odds the greatest Church edifice I ever saw, and I do not expect to see a greater until I cross the sea. Its decorations and images, and candles, and stations of the cross, and stained-glass windows were gorgeously wonderful (although somewhat aged and musty), and in striking contrast with its plain, bare wood floor, which would hardly compare favorably with the average American kitchen floor, but it was worn and roughened with the feet and the knees of believers. One was forced to an attitude of combined admiration and pity at their reverential attitude and with a devout desire that such a spirit of reverence might be seen more in our Protestant Churches.

And then great St. James Cathedral and its worshiping thousands is one of the sights of this great Canadian metropolis. St. James is built a replica of St. Peter's, in Rome. I know little of St. Peter's, except from illustrations; but if it is St. James on a larger scale, it is surely a miracle of architecture. Worshiping crowds silently came and went here, too, paying absolutely no attention to each other, but all intent on their devotions or candles or prayers or confessions, and not recognizing and not even looking at a stranger within their gates, and turning not to the right hand nor to the left, and seemed to impress me with an atmosphere of "the King's business demands concentration."

There are many fine Protestant Churches in the city, but in size comparisons they are small indeed. But two things impressed me greatly about the contrast between Protestant Churches and Catholic, besides the difference in size. First, the Catholic Churches were open to worshipers all day long, and they still come and go as I write, while the Protestant Churches are practically closed up tight. One of them was open for prayer, but I saw no one enter or leave. And then another contrast was that the Protestant Churches are murh more luxuriously furnished in the pews (cushions, carpets, carvings, and the like), while the Catholic furnishings are around the altars and in the statuary and lights and decorations, while the pews for the worshipers and the floors seem bare indeed in comparison. I am only reciting a fact, and am not expressing an opinion, but I have something to think and wonder about, and maybe after I have seen more and studied more deeply I can answer my own questioning attitude in a better way.

Montreal is largely a French city, and in large sections of it only French (a poor sort) is spoken. The French Catholic parochial schools foster this until the children do not learn the English as they do in our American public schools. In most of the city the tradesmen's signs and wares are advertised in both English and French, and one sees signs everywhere of this sort: "Chambries a Louer —Rooms to Let," or "Le Bieres and Porter—Beer and Porter," which is a sort of mongrel French, to say the best of it. But I can understand better now than ever before how the Canadian soldiers got along easier and more quickly in France than our boys. The language was not so foreign to them.

I went down into the French quarter this afternoon and walked the narrow, dirty streets and saw poor, unkept houses and yards so greatly in contrast with their magnificent Churches, and I wondered again at them as to how they are kept doing it. It is surely devotion to their Church, and cannot all be accounted for on the ground of fear and authority, which we so lightly answer the question with when put up to us. I saw hundreds, if not thousands, of children march from their parochial schools at 3 P. M. to their Churches. I watched them and studied their faces and attitudes, and they were just happy children, in spite of plain, and sometimes even ragged, clothes—seemingly just as happy as any equal bunch of Protestant children leaving public school, and they were adding their Church life to their student life. I am again not expressing opinions about it all, but I am telling facts as I see them.

But, after all, does it not prove to us again that the child is plastic in the hands of its leaders, and if we want a new America, and if we want the kingdom of God to come on earth, as our Master taught us to pray, we will have to remember the children?

It is near midnight as I close this first day of my pilgrimage. I sail at 10 A. M. tomorrow, and if God wills, I will send you my next letter from Liverpool.

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE.

THE APPEAL FOR MARKERS.

The Chautauqua and School of Methods is year by year growing in interest and enthusiasm. The sessions have stimulated faith and zeal for the work which the Churches, Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies have to perform—by arranging courses of study to meet the needs of the various departments, and by giving us teachers who have led, and will continue to lead, us into a knowledge which brings vision and feeds faith.

The appeal for trained workers is urgent, and we believe that our people will be responsive.

We are grateful to these good schools for their liberal offerings to our mission cause. We trust that this number shall greatly increase, as funds are so much needed now to carry forward our missionary work at home in Carroll County, Va., and abroad in Japan. We are happy at what these wide-awake schools are now doing.

THE RECREATIONAL SIDE OF THE ELON SUMMER SCHOOL.

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

"All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," and Jill a dull girl, even if Jack is a grown-up boy, or Jill a grown-up girl. And the same principle obtains if Jack is a preacher or Jill a teacher, in middle-life or old age. Play is one of God's ways of keeping His children from becoming dull, or old, before their time, and he who has not learned to play has not learned one of the great lessons of life. On the other hand, he who has learned to play has learned something that will pay large dividends in his own life and makes him a blessing to others. I might add that the preacher or teacher who can teach boys and girls to play in the finest sense has made a direct contribution to the character-development of that boy or girl. And the Church which is providing wholesome recreation facilities for its young people is helping to establish the kingdom of God in the hearts of men and women.

It was because the leaders of the summer school recognized the value of, and the necessity for, play that they have made provision for it in the schedule. According to that schedule, the afternoons will be given over to play and recreation. If the recreation is well organized, and if the members of the summer school enter into the spirit of the thing, this feature of the program can be made well worth while. It is my duty, as well as my privilege, to see that the former is done; it is the duty of the members to see that the latter is done. In other words, I am going to provide what I hope will be a program of wholesome recreation. But no program, however good or well planned, will mean anything unless the individual members of the group for which it is planned enter wholeheartedly into that program. I call upon all who come, then, to co-operate with me in this feature. I herewith suggest a few things which will help:

1. Lay aside any false dignity or formality before you come on the campus. Life for the most of us has enough of the serious in it. The week at the summer school ought to be a time when we get a little respite from the exacting demands of our lives. And except for the study periods in the morning, we ought to make the most of our opportunities to relax, and to re-create our bodies, minds, and spirits. Come, therefore, with the avowed purpose to enter whole-heartedly into the recreational features of the program.

2. Bring any athletic or sporting goods which you may have, such as baseball gloves, bats, etc., tennis rackets, bathing suits, hiking shoes—anything that can be used in games and recreation.

3. Write me freely and frankly about any special features which you would like to see embodied in the recreational program. I will appreciate any suggestion, and I will try to embody them in the program.

All together—let's go!

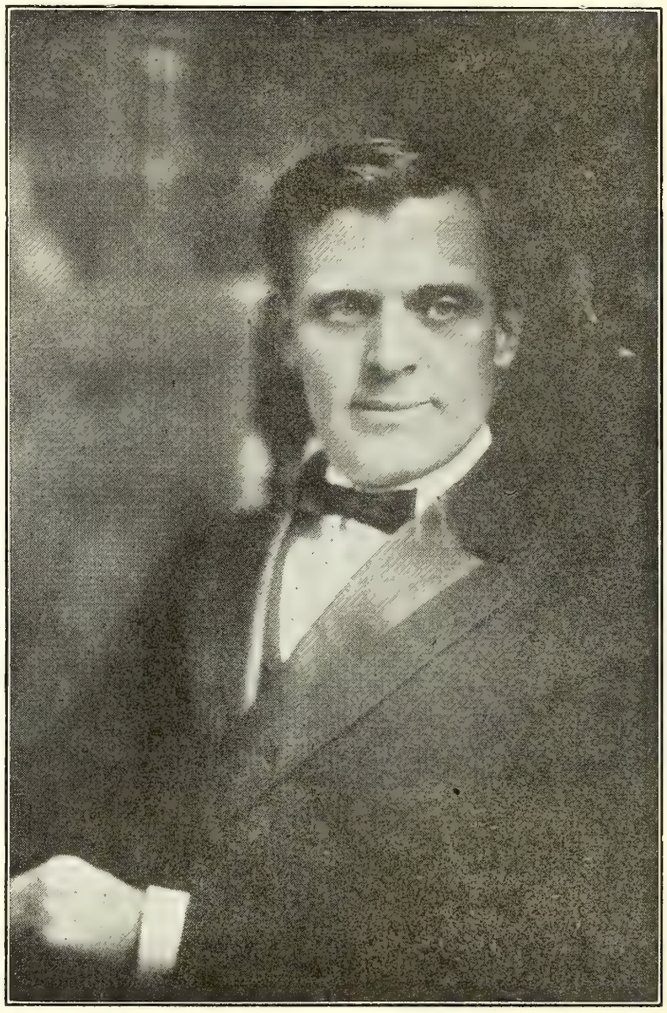
SEEING IS KNOWING.

We are delighted that the Chautauqua will be held at Elon College again this year. It is always a joy for the people of Elon to have meetings of this kind held here. It gives us the pleasure of mingling with our Church folks, and then, too, it gives the visitors an opportunty to see the progress our denomination is making in its college and in its Orphanage work. When our people visit these institutions, which are theirs, they see for themselves, and can better realize what our Church is doing.

Dr. Harper can go to a Church and tell people what the college is doing and the buildings that are under construction, but he cannot give the impression a visitor will get if he comes and beholds these magnificent buildings in all their grandeur and beauty. It is worth a trip to Elon to see the five beautiful buildings nearly completed.



DR. J. O. ATKINSON, Teacher.

"Uncle Charley" can visit Churches and tell our Church people about the Orphanage, its one hundred and five children, its two nice brick buildings, its modern barn, its nice herd of Holstein and Jersey cows, its pigs, chickens and many other things; but he cannot give you the impression you will get if you will visit the Orphanage and see the beautiful little children and all the other things we have here that will interest you.

Come to the Chautauqua, visit our institutions and see what you are doing as an individual and as a denomination. We want to extend to you a hearty welcome.

SONG BOOKS ADOPTED.

The Music Committee of the N. C. S. S. & C. E. Convention met with the Sunday School and Church at New Elam a few Sundays ago. After discussing the matter of music for the coming Convention, it was decided to use as the Convention song book "The Shining Way," published by the Showalter Company, of Dalton, Ga. The book can be had of the Alfred Williams Company, Raleigh, N. C., at 35 cents per copy. As many singers as can do so are urged to attend the Convention and help in the music. By doing this, real favor will be conferred upon the Convention, as well as the local Sunday School. The Convention song will be No. 65 in the above-mentioned book.

GEORGE M. MCCULLERS.

Chairman of Entertainment Committee.

OUR PLEDGES to Men and Millions are Sacred, Solemn and Binding.

These obligations were made through the Church to the Kingdom of God and to all that pertains to building up that Kingdom in the world, so far as our Christian Church is concerned. As Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has so pertinently pointed out: "A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations—'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42)—but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

Many are making great sacrifices to meet these obligations and pay these pledges. Every one who fails to do so not only produces paralysis in his own moral system, but to that extent paralyses the efforts and sacrifices that the faithful and the loyal make.

BEAR IN MIND MEN AND MILLIONS MEAN AND STAND FOR ALL THAT THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH MEANS AND STANDS FOR.

—REMEMBER—

that the fourth year ends April 30, 1924.

After that, we have only one more year in which to meet these obligations. Unless we put forth a mighty effort to pay some on these pledges during the last quarter of the fourth year, there is great danger that we will fail entirely, because of the bulk of our pledge looming up before us in a one-year period.

Paying SOMETHING by April 30, 1924, will make it easy to pay ALL by April 30, 1925. Where there is a will there is a way, and God always helps those who try to their capacity to help themselves.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

"Pray without ceasing."—1 Thess. 5:17.

Prayer is the supreme law of the spiritual order. Man as an exponent of God by creation is endowed with a personality which is soul and which is that something about him which transcends the laws of nature; yea, the material universe. It is expressed in love, thought, ideals, sacrifices, hopes, faith, mercy, charity, courtesy, etc. And prayer functions in all these as a direct result of Christian consciousness. The moment one becomes conscious of God, he is impelled to pray. The soul goes out to its God and worships and longs for its God's blessings. In the material and godless world, there is no prayer; but in the spiritual world it is most natural. And it manifests itself like a child does to its mother. It runs to her with all its love, its ideals, its needs, all its desires. The mother listens and responds as her love dictates. "Except ye become as little children, ye shall in no wise enter the kingdom of heaven."

Prayer.—Our Father, help us to be like a child. Each day this week as we face the petty rounds of irritation, concerns and duties, help us to be true, and give us strength, courage, faith and trust complete. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

TUESDAY.

LIVE UP TO THE FAITH OF THE CHILDREN.

Lesson: Matt. 18:1-6 (read aloud).

"Whoso shall cause one of these little ones to stumble, it is profitable for him that a great millstone should be hung about his neck, and that he should be sunk in the debths of the sea."—Vs. 6.

One of the reasons why so many children are not more impressed with religion is that their parents, who may profess to be Christians, so frequently in their homes, violate the principles of Christianity.

It stands to reason that a child whose parents pretend to the world that they are Christians, and who quarrel and talk in a derogatory manner about their neighbors, say mean things about those they dislike, expressing that dislike frequently, and who fail to treat their children in a Christian manner, will have little faith in Christianity.

If a child loses faith in Christianity, in Christians in general, because of his parents who pretend to be what he can see they are not, it will take a great deal to make a Christian out of that little one.

Children make comparisons and are practically keen in judgment. Young children are prone to think that if their parents are not true to the standard they pretend to be loyal to, then none is true. It is a truly awful thing to destroy the faith of a little child. A man who turns his eyes to God in prayer and the next moment exclaims in anger at a noise which disturbs him, makes just the opposite impression from the one he seeks to put over. (Copyright, 1924, International Feature Service.)

Prayer.—Our Father, hear our prayer. Forgive us of all our sins. Send Thy spirit to make intercession for us and to endow our souls, so that our words, thoughts and actions may be a supreme example unto our children. May we live a tranquil and godly life. In His name we ask it. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

HAPPINESS THROUGH SORROW.

"Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted."—Matt. 5:4.

Sorrow may be the channel through which our greatest happiness may flow. Tears have a mission in the world. Sorrow prepares the heart, like a farmer prepares the field, that good seed may be sown. Sorrow is all right when God is driving the harrow. A life, like a field, must be prepared if it yields the ripe fruits of happiness. The difference between the joys of a saint and a sinner is illustrated in the difference of the quality of strawberries that grow wild and those grown in a well-kept garden. Sorrow is one of the plows among the farming tools of God. God is a farmer, and the heart is His field. As sugar is sweeter after we have tasted vinegar, so happiness is sweeter after we have tasted the sorrow. Those who have inherited great wealth cannot appreciate it as those can and do who accumulate riches through the blessings of work and poverty. So God prepares us to be happy through sorrow. That we may forever drink the cup of joy because of sins forgiven, He first gives us the bitter cup of repentance. The Church needs a baptism of sorrow for a lost world. If we had this, there would be fulfilled the saying that is written: "He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him."

Prayer.—Our Father, we pray that sin may be seen to be sinful. Continue the Spirit until men shall mourn and repent. Let the Church see the world till she weeps and repents and loves. We pray in Jesus' name. Amen.—T. E. White.

THURSDAY.

TWICE BORN.

"So is every one that is born of the Spirit."—John 3:5-8.

A man I know was a skeptic, or at least he thought he was. When cornered in an argument, he would take refuge in: "Prove it now! Just give me a demonstration!" And in spite of all his doubts, he was one of the most lovable fellows who ever lived.

As we walked along, the old subject came up: "How can a man be born again?" My friend contended that it was not demonstrable, but "just a petty conceit of the mystics." There had been a great storm the night before, and a number of large trees were uprooted in the park. We stopped to look at a splendid giant oak we had often admired, but which had yielded to the blast. "I wonder what happened to him?" said I. "Happened!" cried my friend; "why it's easy to see what happened—last night's wind brought him to earth." "How do you know this?" I asked. And then he said: "Because no other agency could have produced this result."

We turned in at the factory gate. A fine-looking man, a little past middle life, was directing some men. As he smiled a welcome, my friend asked: "Who is that man?" I gave him the name of one who five years before had been the town drunkard, a wife-beater, and a man whose very breath was profane. My friend could hardly curb his astonishment. "Reformed!" said he. "No," I replied; "reborn." And then he used the same words he had used a few minutes before in the park: "No other agency could have produced this result." And as we walked along, he repeated, like one who was grasping a truth for the first time: "But canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit."—Rev. I. D. Lyttle.

Prayer.—(By one of the parents) That we may experience the change of heart which is the work of the Holy Spirit.

FRIDAY.

TRUE GREATNESS.

"He who would be greatest among you, let him be your servant."—Matt. 18:1-4. V. 23.

The mother of Zebedee's children went to the Saviour and asked for a position for her two boys, that they might be with Him in His kingdom. But the Saviour told her that there was a price to be paid for position, and that was service. That is the rule of life. If you want to be happy, help somebody.

One has said: "The secret of happiness is: memorize something beautiful every day; look for something beautiful every day, and help somebody every day."

Prayer.—Our Father, give us the true spirit of service. Help us to conquer our selfishness, and to reach out in helpfulness to others, even as we ourselves have been helped of Thee. In His name we ask it. Amen.

SATURDAY.

FOLKS WITH MERELY LAMPS.

"Our lamps are gone out."—Matt. 25:8-13. V. 8.

Who are these with merely lamps? Churchmen: having the form of godliness, but denying the power thereof; believing in the standard of Christian conduct, but their piety ends there; having no passion for the kingdom and for stainless souls; forgetting the function of consecration and spiritual culture, purity of motive and vital relations with the Father; trying to be good without God. They like justice, mercy, compassion and everything good, but in no way do they connect these things with God. Such a life does not plumb the depths of the soul, does not unveil the secrets of God, does not embrace worshipful feelings, does not even look up to God. It is an attractive lamp with the oil going out, its flame expiring at the solemn hour when Jesus comes.

Prayer.—Our Father, be with us lest we perish. Help us to touch the real powers of God and drink of the true fountains of life, and not miss the mark. In nothing let us live apart from Thee. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE DAY OF THE CHURCH.

"THE SABBATH WAS MADE FOR MAN."—Mark 2:27.

Today is both God's and man's day. Let us lay aside our work and walk with our heavenly companion. Let us do this regularly, putting it down as an essential feature in our schedule and in our lives, and serve Him thus with cheerfulness and longings for His companionship.

Unless we do make it a regular thing in our plans, it will be a fight for us to do so, and if we have to fight ourselves into it, we shall lose, for no one is strong enough to survive an ordeal of that kind. A thing which is not done easily is in danger of not being done at all.

Let us once decide that going to Church deserves a fixed place in our schedule and the battle is won, and the habit will be actually a part of our lives. Let us not think of it as something extra; if so, it will become a burden, and voluntary burdens are sure to be discarded.

We go to our business whether we feel like it or not; because it is necessary, and we give that the right of way over everything else. Let us put Church down the same way, and all obstacles and difficulties will disappear.

Prayer.—Our Father, teach us Thy will and what Thou hast for us to do this day. Forgive us of what we have lacked in the past, and for all our mistakes. Sanctify us, our homes, our Sabbaths, our business and our all, and so let Thy heaven begin in us. For Jesus' sake. Amen.

Kiddies' Korner

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT, Editor.

"KIDDIES' KORNER."

Dear Little Sunbeams:

Yes! This is the name of your new page! And, oh, my! it has certainly been hard to choose a name from this contest, since the contest has been just so very good that I could hardly decide which was best. But all of you are such dear children that I am sure you will be good loosers, and so I am not afraid to tell you that the winner of the contest is Dorothy Helfenstein, Dover, Del., and the name she sent was "Kiddies' Korner." Don't you like it? I knew you would, and I hope you will all think I have been fair.

Now, I'm sorry, but you can't get away without a little scolding. Some of the poems you sent in were copied. Just remember that the most interesting work is your own work. There! that's all the scolding you will get this time; I hope you don't mind much.

Your editor has a big surprise for you next week. Oh! just you wait till you see it. I'll tell you this much: it's about a big contest—but, sh-sh-sh, I'll let you wait and see, for it's a secret—something that you will like to take out under a big tree and—sh! I'm about to tell. Wait till next week.

Good-by, little Sunbeams, your contest has been great! The next one will be even better.

YOUR EDITOR.

THE LITTLE PIG.

Once there was a Little Pig.
He lived with his mother in a pen.
One day he saw his four little feet.
"Wee-wee, Mother," he said,
"See my four little feet;
What can I do with them?"
She said: "You can run with them."
The little Pig ran, and ran;
He ran 'round and 'round the pen.
One day he found his two little eyes.
"Wee-wee, Mother," he said,
"See my two little eyes;
What can I do with them?"
She said: "You can see with them."
The Little Pig looked, and looked—
He saw the Cow;
He saw the Sheep.
One day he found his two little ears.
"Wee-wee, Mother," he said,
"See my two little ears;
What can I do with them?"
She said: "You can hear with them."
He heard the Dog say "Bow-wow,"
He heard the Cat say "Mew-mew,"
He heard the Cow say "Moo-moo,"
He heard the Sheep say "Baa-baa."
One day he found his one little nose.
"Wee-wee, Mother," he said,
"See my one little nose?
What can I do with it?"
She said: "You can smell with it;
Can you smell your dinner?"
The Little Pig wanted his dinner.
He could not smell it.
"Wee-wee-wee," he said.
Soon he found his one little mouth.
"Wee-wee, Mother," he said,
"See my one little mouth?
What can I do with it?"
She said: "You can eat with it;
You can eat your dinner."
The Little Pig wanted his dinner.
He could not find it.
"Wee-wee-wee," he said.
Soon a girl came to the pen.
She had something for Piggy.
Can you guess what it was?
The girl said: "Come Piggy,
Come Piggy, come;
I have something for you.
It is something good to eat."
What did the Little Pig hear with his two little ears?
What did the Little Pig see with his two little eyes?
What did the Little Pig do with his four little feet?
What did the Little Pig smell with his one little nose?
Guess what the Little Pig did with his one little mouth!

THOUGHTS.

When a little child is naughty
And is cross with everything,
Then his thoughts are changed to hornets
That go flying off to sting.
When a little child is happy,
Then his loving thoughts, I think,
Are turned to floating butterflies,
All white, and gold, and pink.

THE BOASTING BOY.

I knew a boy in our town, whose name was Billy Hood.
He had a sword all made of tin, a musket made of wood;
His drum would always let you know when Bill Hood was coming,
For all the neighbors used to say: "I wish he'd stop that drumming."

Now, very brave this Billy was—at least, so Billy thought;
And he was not afraid—not he—of anything that fought.
"With this good sword and gun," said he, "I'll fight until I die:
Let man or beast come on! Who fears? Not Billy Hood! Not I!"

But, ah! one day this Billy went where six old Geese were straying,
And on his noisy drum began somewhat too loudly playing.
An old Goose chased him from the field; and Billy screamed, ran
Till on the kitchen floor he sank—that valiant little man!

THE SECRET IN THE BAG.

"Ray," said Mrs. Coon to her son, "I wish you would take this basket of honey over to Farmer Bear's for me. I think that he will enjoy it."

"Yes, mother," said Ray.

"You must hurry, because I am afraid that the Fox children are playing in Farmer Bear's woods, and, if they see you, they will be sure to try to take the basket away from you."

"But I won't let them," said Ray in a very important manner.

He got to his feet, took the basket of honey, and started off briskly toward Farmer Bear's house. He had not gone far when he came on a sweet young apple lying in his path.

"Well," said Ray as he stooped to pick it up; "I certainly am in luck this morning." And he was so pleased at finding the apple that he forgot all about hurrying, and walked over to the brook to wash the apple.

It tasted even better than it had looked, and when Ray started on again, he was thoroughly happy. He was singing a gay little tune and dancing a merry little dance when he came to the bridge that led across the brook. There he stopped short, for at the other end of the bridge stood the two Fox boys.

"Hello!" said Rusty Fox; "what is that you have?"

"A basket," said Ray.

"What's in it?" asked Reddy Fox.

Ray Coon made no reply, but started to walk across the bridge.

"This is a toll bridge," said Rusty. "You can't cross it until you pay toll, and the toll is to tell us what is in your basket."

"If you won't tell," added Reddy, "let us look inside."

"No," answered Ray. But he did not know how he was going to get across the bridge if the Fox boys did not want him to, but he looked up and down the stream, and all at once he caught sight of a row of stones that formed little stepping-stones right across the brook.

Ray turned round and walked slowly along the side of the stream, looking neither to right nor left and trying to appear to have no definite plan in his mind. But the Fox boys were as quick as he, and they had eyes just as sharp as his. They too had seen the stepping-stones, and when Ray reached them there were Rusty and Reddy waiting for him.

"You have to pay toll here too!" they said, and laughed at poor Ray Coon's distress.

"What is all this noise about?" said a deep voice that came from behind the bushes. "I do not like to hear such a racket in my woods."

And out of the bushes stepped Farmer Bear, carrying a big bag in his hand.

The Fox boys began to whine.

Ray walked across the stepping-stones to Farmer Bear and held out his basket. "Here is some honey that my mother sent you, sir," he said.

"My!" cried Farmer Bear; "I have just been wishing for some nice fresh honey. I shall take it to the house at once. You come with me, Ray. You may ride upon my shoulder."

Reddy Fox and Rusty Fox looked sad indeed, but Farmer Bear smiled at them and said kindly: "I think that I shall leave this bag here for you to watch. It has a secret in it, so take care that no one looks inside until I get back."

"Yes, sir," said Reddy Fox. "Yes, sir," said Rusty Fox; "we will take care of it for you."

But no sooner had Farmer Bear and Ray Coon gone out of sight than the little Foxes began to wonder what the secret in the bag could be. They began to poke it and punch it on all sides, but they could not find out, and they were more curious than ever.

"O let's open it," said Reddy; "I'm not afraid."

"I'm not afraid either," said Rusty; "let's do it."

They lost no time in untying the string in the top of the bag and looking inside. And they lost no time in jerking their heads back either, for the secret was a wasp's nest, with about ten thousand buzzing, stinging wasps! They flew out of the bag in swarms and began to sting the Fox boys.

You should have seen Rusty and Reddy Fox hop about and squeal and jump into the brook and out again and run round as fast as they could and turn somersaults and stand on their heads. You might have thought that it was funny to see them. Some one certainly must have thought so, because some one laughed behind the bushes—first in a very deep voice and then in a little wee voice. It is not for me to say who that some one was, but I think that he must have known about the secret in the bag. The Fox boys knew too—but they did not think that it was funny—*G. H. INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

By H. S. Hardcastle.

LESSON III—JULY 20, 1924.

Subject: "The Baptism of Jesus."

Golden Text: "Thou art my beloved Son, in Thee I am well pleased."—Mark 1:11.

Lesson: Mark 1:1-11.

Devotional Reading: Isa. 42:1-4.

Reference Material: Matt. 3:1-17; Luke 3:1-22; John 1:19-34.

A strange figure suddenly loomed across the horizon of Jewish life. It was the figure of a bronzed, rather spare and gaunt, man. He had come out of the deserts where he had been from the days of his early youth, and he was clad in the garb of a dweller of the waste-places. His garment was of camel-hair; his girdle of leather; his food, locusts and wild honey. He was an unknown man from an obscure place, and from the merely human point of view, his day and people had no justification for expecting anything of him. And yet in a short time this obscure, gaunt man had the people hanging on his words, and left his impression in an indelible way on the history of the world. For he was none other than John the Baptist, the one who made ready "the way of the Lord." There is only one way to account for it—he was "a man sent from God."

John came with a new message. He declared that a new world-order was about to be inaugurated, and he called upon the people of his day to "repent" or "to change their minds." Before ever they could enter into the new order, they would have to undergo a radical change in their thinking and in their conduct. It mattered not that they were the so-called religious leaders of their day, there must be a deep-rooted and fundamental change in their lives. And this change must find expression in outward conduct. They were "to bring forth works meet for repentance."

As a symbol of this inner change, John resorted to baptism. In fact, this rite loomed so large in John's methods that he was known as the "Baptizer" or the "Baptist." And yet it is not at all likely that John was the originator of the idea of baptism, for the Jews had long had the ideas and customs of washings and cleansings, which naturally found their expression in connection with water. But John did give new emphasis or rather new meaning to this rite, and since his day the rite of baptism has been intimately associated with the Christian religion and life.

John's appearance and his methods attracted a great deal of attention, and crowds resorted to him. His intense earnestness, deep convictions, and power made a deep and profound impression upon the people, and many of them were baptized by him. His movement grew in numbers and in significance.

And then another figure loomed up on the horizon. He, too, had come out of comparative obscurity. In fact, it had been some eighteen or twenty years since we have had any record of his public appearance. But these years had not been years of inactivity, and there had been growing and deepening in the mind of this young man (for he was a young man) the conviction that God had sent him into the world on a special mission. This young man had undoubtedly followed John's movement with a great deal of interest, and he saw in it the promise of the divine work to which he had been called. Here in germ, were the spiritual ideas and principles which God would have the world to know, and gradually and inevitably the conviction was deepened in that great heart that it was through him that this revelation was to be made.

Accordingly, he presented himself to John for baptism. He had, of course, no sin to repent of. But he did see in the movement sponsored by John an evidence of the manifestation of God's spirit, and he wanted to give his approval to that idea, and himself to it. In spite of John's remonstrances, Jesus insisted that he be baptized, and John acquiesced. Thus, in a definite and public way, Jesus committed himself to God's program. And he received God's approval and acceptance in a definite and convincing way. For Jesus at least, there came the consciousness of His Messiahship in a fuller, more vital way.

A Few Suggestions and Lessons.

1. A man with a real message always gets a hearing.
2. Fearless declaration of the gospel truth always finds its way into the hearts of men.
3. Plain living helps high thinking.
4. Baptism is but the outward symbol of an inner experience.
5. The primary thing in the Christian life is the baptism of the Holy Spirit.
6. The heavens are opened unto those who are fully consecrated to do God's will.
7. He who does God's will always has God's approbation.
8. Jesus came not to destroy the law, but to fulfill the law.
9. The minister of Jesus Christ should always recognize his true relation to Christ.

Thou Shalt Love Thy Neighbor as Thyself.

Topic: "Being a Good Neighbor."—Luke 10:30-37.

Daily Readings: July 14, Bad neighbors—Gen. 26:11-22. July 15, A good neighbor—Job 29:1-16. July 16, Sharing a vision—Acts 10:24-27. July 17, Elijah's neighbor—1 Kings 17:8-16. July 18, The law of neighborliness—Matt. 7-12. July 19, Christian neighborliness—Rom. 15:1-7.

"I'd like to be a neighbor in the good old-fashioned way,
Finding much to do for others, but not overmuch to say;
I like to read the papers, but I do not yearn to see
What the journal of the morning has been moved to say of me.
In the silence and shadows, I would live my life and die,
And depend for fond remembrance on some grateful passers-by.

"I guess I wasn't fashioned for the brilliant things of earth;
Wasn't gifted much with talent or designed for special worth,
But was just sent here to potter with life's little odds and ends
And keep a simple corner where the stirring highway bends—
And if folks should chance to linger, worn and weary, through the day,
To do some needed service and to cheer them on their way."

—Edgar A. Gust, in The Neighborly Man.

If the daily readings will be taken and studied carefully, an ideal meeting may be had. So many times we think of our neighbor the one who lives next-door to us, or the one whom we may desire to call our friend. Often the spirit of selfishness enters into people, and they forget every one except those who do them special favors.

Christ summed up the law, and gave us the Golden Rule which will always guide us right if we obey—"Love thy neighbor as thyself."

Our topic last Sunday—"Abolish War! How?"—may be very appropriately applied here by saying that real neighborly love does not promote war, but rather seeks always to have peace.

Jesus was the champion neighbor. Even those who hated Him and His race had to respect Him because of his neighborliness. The Samaritan woman brought others to Him after He gave her a lesson in neighborliness.

Questions for the Meeting. . . .

Who is our neighbor? What do we owe him?
Who gave us our strength? Money? Health?
How can we help our neighbor?
Why should the strong bear the burdens of the weak? How? When?
Had you rather be strong and help the weak, or be weak and be helped? Why?
Tell the story of the Good Samaritan?
Tell how Elijah helped the poor foreign widow.
How may we be good neighbors? Better? Best?

A great crowd of people gathered around a man one night as he lay hurt seriously by an automobile. Some one of the crowd said: "It's only a foreigner." The crowd began to scatter, leaving the helpless fellow for the ambulance. Was Christ in that crowd? Was there a good neighbor there?

WHAT THE CHAUTAUQUA MEANS TO US.

The Chautauqua means more to us than any other religious institute. It brings us in personal contact with the greatest and noblest leaders of our denomination. It broadens our views and trains our young people, as well as the older ones, for Christian leadership; and also gives us a greater missionary zeal which is so much needed among our young people.

A slot-machine for changing dimes, quarters and half-dollars has been adopted by the New York City street car company to displace the twelve hundred persons now occupied in changing money at the entrances to New York's subways. Bad coins are held and no change dropped.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

I want to ask you two questions. First, have you made your will? Second, did you remember the Christian Orphanage?

I received a letter some time ago from a law firm in the State of New York, informing me that a good lady had recently died and had remembered the Christian Orphanage in her will to the amount of one thousand dollars. This good woman had heard of the Christian Orphanage, but had never visited this institution; but she had a love in her heart for the little children that prompted her to give a thousand dollars to help support them here. It was a kind and noble deed, and one which God will bless.

It is a mighty nice thing to do, when you sit down to write that important document, to remember your Orphanage at Elon College, N. C. If God has richly blessed you in this world's goods, why not give enough to build a building, and thereby build for yourself a lasting monument. I often think if I had money I would have lots of pleasure in giving it away. I would build buildings for little fatherless children and endow them so I would know for ages to come the little fatherless ones would come and be cared for and trained and educated to go out in life and be able to do the task that might be theirs.

Suppose you leave enough to build a building and endow it, and the building cares for fifty children at a time, just think in a few years from the time its doors are opened young boys and girls will finish their course and go out in the battle of life armored with the training you have given them to call you blessed. It would be a living monument and not a shaft of speechless stone. You would not be dead, but living, in the lives of the little children. If you can't leave enough for a building, leave the orphanage what you feel in your heart you want to leave it. If you would rather help us while living, that is a fine idea—then you have the pleasure of seeing the fruits of your giving in this life.

The truth is: we need another building to care for thirty-five children. This building will cost something like thirty thousand dollars completed and furnished. I would be very happy indeed to receive a letter some morning in my mail telling me to build; that the funds were on the way. That would be a happy day in our Orphanage work.

THE SUMMER SCHOOLS OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The summer-school idea of education and inspiration is a great one in the Christian Church. It has spread so rapidly within the past few years that our summer schools are reaching our constituency from the extreme North through the Far South, and from the East to the West. The large number of people attending our summer schools this year should mean a greater and better work in the future. It should mean enlarged visions, more wholesome fellowship among the workers, more interest in every department of the Church, a greater determination to extend our cause, and a challenge to us as a Church. The Christian Church is comparatively small, and we are reaching for educational purposes, this year, a large number of that group which must certainly mean a Church better prepared to render service.

Our people need to draw apart from other activities for a week each year, and think in terms of the Church and its opportunities; they need the inspiration whch comes from such a gathering; they need the instruction and the rich fellowship. The leaders of our Church—those who have labored so hard to become experts in their various departments for the sake of service—will be the faculty members in our summer schools, and our people need to learn and grow from their rich experiences.

The Palmer School, Albany, Mo., May 28th to June 6th, was the first of the summer schools this year and was a success from the first day, when eighty people registered. The Defiance School for Pastors, July 8th to 17th, will mean a better-prepared, more enlightened and more interested ministry for the Conferences of our Central Convention.

When the large group at Elon, July 28th to August 3d, are enjoying such a delightful period of fellowship, study and recreation, the Christian Church folk of our Eastern Conference will be enjoying a similar school at Craigville, Mass. Craigville is planning this year for some distinctive young people's work, gving several days to a Young People's Conference in connection with the summer school.

The Church has done a big thing in adding two new schools this summer—Kirton Hall, Keswick, Ont., in the Far North, and Bethlehem, Wadley, Ala., in the Far South. Kirton Hall is doing a wonderful work for our Churches in Canada, and our Churches there have furnished and are furnishing a large number of ministers, both for the work there and the work in the States. Bethlehem College is the realization of a great dream of the Georgia and Alabama people, something toward which they have worked for a number of years. It has closed its first school session and is now offering to the entire membership of the Churches of the two Conferences the greatest opportunity it has ever had.

The Christian Church has much to be thankful for, and because of the great opportunity it has, it should "carry on," doing the best and biggest work of its history.

BETHLEHEM CHAUTAUQUA AND SCHOOL OF METHODS.

On Monday night, August 11th, the first session of the Bethlehem Chautauqua and School of Methods, Wadley, Ala., will be held. The Chautauqua will last through the following Sunday night, August 17th. It is very fitting that Bethlehem should hold such a session this year, following its first year as a college, and through the work of the week make a very fine contribution to the work of the whole Church in the Far South.

The Bethlehem Chautauqua offers a very fine opportunity for our people in Georgia and Alabama to become acquainted with the college and with the work of the Christian Church. All of the courses will be adapted to the needs of the pastors and Churches in this section. Workers from other parts of the South may well register for the Bethlehem Chautauqua, share in its beginning and know this institution which is to mean so much to the cause of Christ and the Christian Church in the Far South.

ing at a minimum cost to workers in Georgia and Alabama.

On August 16th and 17th, the Alabama Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention will meet at Wadley, in connection with the Chautauqua, and the various members of the faculty will be on the program.

There is much interest among the members of the Christian Church in the Far South in this gathering, and it promises to mean very much to the life of the Church, even as Elon does to the work in North Carolina and Virginia. It is time now to register for this first session and help to make it a great beginning.

Dayton, Ohio. MISS LUCY ELDREDGE.

OUR CHAUTAUQUA.

Bethlehem Chautauqua and School of Methods is a new enterprise for the Southern Christian Church. Our people have never had such an opportunity presented before, but we are interested ren, and require him to come for your benefit as well as his.

Such teachers as Eldredge, Howsare, Atkinson, Mrs. Morrill, Miss Eldredge, Miss Coghill and perhaps others will discuss vital questions to the Church of the living God. I am profoundly grateful to Antioch Church for the feeling they are manifesting toward me as their pastor. Even in my absence they have discussed the question of my attendance at Chautauqua, and it is their revival meeting time, too. It will not be a time of idleness, but a time when all can study and enjoy themselves together.

Dear brethren of the Alabama and Georgia and Alabama Conferences, see to it that your pastor comes. Let all the ministry come; let the Sunday School teachers and officers come; let the laymen and the rank and file of the Church come; let whosoever will come and enjoy the rest and learn of Him who said I am meek and lowly in heart, for in all our duties we seek to glorify His name. G. D. HUNT.

MISS LUCY ELDREDGE, Children's Department Teacher.

MISS PATTIE COGHILL, General Secretary.

Each morning the program will open with morning devotions, led by different members of the faculty. There will be classes in Bible study for pastors and for laymen. Classes in Sunday School work, Christian Endeavor, and missionary society are attracting much interest. Each day there will be a lecture by some member of the faculty on the work of the whole Church, including missions, Christian education, evangelism, publications, and other phases of the work. There will be planned recreation and special sessions for the boys and girls. The meetings at night will be evangelistic, and will be under the direction of Rev. McD. Howsare, executive secretary of the department of evangelism of the Christian Church. Other members of the faculty will be Mr. Hermon Eldredge and Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, of Dayton, Ohio; Rev. Jesse Dollar, of Elon College; Mrs. M. T. Morrill, of Defiance College, Ohio; Miss Pattie L. Goghill, of Elon College, and possibly others.

Arrangements have been made for entertaining all who wish to stay at Wadley. The cost of board has been placed at $5.00, and the registration fee for the week is only 50 cents. This school is a real opportunity for Christian trainin the movement and expect to make it go. First, it is one of the blessings that came to us with the college. We shall be brought face to face with some of the best religious teachers of the South, and also of our General Convention. Such subjects will be discussed and taught as we are the most directly interested in. It is a matter of education and of recreation—a period for rest and study. Surely every wide-awake pastor will desire to attend, and every licentiate will need to attend for the training and experience he will get. All our Sunday School superintendents and teachers will be sure to attend. You will need a bountiful supply of enthusiasm to help you get through the dull months, and here is the place to get it. I wish I could know just how much our dear old Church has lost in time past by having no plan, nothing definite to acquire. The time is at hand when we must feed the "flock over the which the Holy Ghost has made us overseers." If we do this we must have food.

Our Chautauqua will meet at Bethlehem College, Wadley, Ala., August 11, 1924, and continue in session until August 18th. Every Church should see that their pastor attends. It will not only pay the pastor, but it will pay the Church. Give your hard-worked pastor a week off, breth-

NOTICE.

The Eastern Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention will meet at Bethlehem Christian Church, three miles west of Suffolk, on the concrete road, July 22d and 23d. All delegates and visitors coming by public conveyance will come to Suffolk and take the bus from Nansemond Hotel block out to Bethlehem.

The Edgerton Bus Company will run buses to the Church on those days, and the Suffolk Courtland Bus Line passes the Church each trip and will take passengers. All delegates and visitors wishing entertainment for the night will please notify the entertainment committee at their earliest convenience or immediately upon arrival at the Church.

EAVES.

On June 23, 1924, an angel visited the home of Bro. and Sister G. W. Eaves and plucked a beautiful flower, in the form of their youngest daughter, Maddy Clyde. She was born December 16, 1920, making her stay on earth three years, six months and seven days. She had a complication of diseases, ending with toxine meningetis. They had ten doctors to see her, and all was done that could be to restore her to health, but God saw best to call her home. Her suffering was more than can be expressed, and we are made to exclaim: if our God will allow the pure in heart to suffer like this, how will the ungodly and the wicked appear? All of her suffering was in this life, and she was unconscious of anything for the last five days. She did not speak or make any noise until just before the spirit departed, when she began to fight hard. This was a demonstration of God's mighty power, and we believe He had a great motive in causing this to come about.

May the little brown-eyed girl's suffering and death be the means of drawing us all nearer to God and His service. We are told that God takes the weak to confound the mighty, and if this weak little life gone out from us can be the means of winning some soul for the better life, all will be well. We are reminded of what Jesus said about little children—(Mark 10:14) "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Little Clyde leaves father, mother, two brothers, one sister, her grandparents and a large number of other relatives and friends to mourn their loss.

The funeral was conducted by Rev. J. E. Franks, and the little body was laid to rest in the cemetery at Liberty Vance. The floral offering was beautiful, and as she begged to go to her home where the little children and pretty flowers were, we are satisfied that she is there, free from all toil and care.

He whose own heart was broken knows how to heal broken hearts. His grace is sufficient for all the bereaved ones.

ENGLISH.

Floyd English, the little baby boy of John T. English and Josephine English, came to his death, on Thursday, June 26th, in a very unusual way. While out in the field with his mother, near where his father was at work, the dogs jumped a rabbit, the rabbit and the dogs running towards the child, frightening him to death. Floyd would have been five years old July 5th, but God saw fit to take him. Floyd was young in years, but had won his way to the heart of his father, mother, brothers, sisters and friends.

We cannot at this time understand this unusual death, but we know God is too loving to be unkind and too wise to make mistake, so we should bow in humble submission to His will, and resolve that where the child cannot come to us, we will, through Christ, go to him.

The pastor being away, the funeral service was conducted by Rev. Geo. Pankey, pastor of Beaver Dam Baptist Church. The father, mother and children have my sympathy and prayers.

PARKS.

Bro. T. W. Parks, of Hallison, N. C., died suddenly on June 25, 1924, at the age of 69. He had been a member since early in life of Parks Cross Roads Christian Church, at which place his body was laid to rest the 26th of June. The burial was conducted by Rev. Cleve Cummings, assisted by his pastor and Revs. Wright and Hill. He leaves to mourn their loss one son, Tracey Parks, of Hallison, and one daughter, Mrs. Powell Canada, of Carthage, children of his first wife, who was Maggie Green. After her decease, he was married to Miss Lydia Wordsworth, who still survives. He has also two sisters living, three grand-children, and many other relatives. He was active and faithful to his Church and its enterprises until death.

May the Lord comfort the bereaved hearts of his loved ones.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By Rev. S. M. Lynam.

Causes for Discontent.—

Statistics show that the things which the farmer must buy were, in 1923, 86 per cent higher than in 1914, and it is also shown that he receives only an increase of 31 per cent per acre more for his crops. This balanced means that the farmer is receiving only 71 per cent as much for his crops today as in 1914. These figures tell without further comment why the farmers of America are not content with things as they are. They are rightly demanding that the government do something to remedy this deplorable condition.

General Smuts Defeated.—

General Jan Christian Smuts, the Premier of the Union of South Africa, was defeated in the recent elections. He is the last of those who led during the war or at the Paris peace conference, with the single exception of President Masaryk. General Smuts has been much more prominent in the rest of the world than in his own country. He has shared the fate of Woodrow Wilson, and for much the same reasons. War makes heroes for an hour, but they are soon forgot. To achieve greatness in peace is much more difficult, but more permanent and far worthier.

Seeing Results.—

For a number of years, the Baptist Church of Wichita, Kansas, has supported a missionary in Porto Rico. Under the ministry of their missionary, a boy was converted some years ago. He decided to give himself to the ministry and was educated in the States. A few weeks ago, Francisco B. Colon, the converted boy, was ordained by the Wichita Church, and is now preaching to the fifteen hundred Mexicans of that city.

The Wichita people have seen visible results of their missionary efforts. It is not frequently that this is true, but the results come, nevertheless, and they are results which pay great dividends to the Church making the effort.

Labor Conscription.—

Bulgaria has adopted a system of conscription of labor. About twenty-three thousand men have been drafted for work on roads, bridges and railroads. It is always questionable when governments ignore the rights of common men, but it would be good if something could be done to give employment to the hundreds of thousands of men now walking the streets in our own land. The government must deal with the problem of the unemployed ultimately as much as the Church. A minimum wage, too, must be established, and this the Church will largely be instrumental in securing. Religion, to appeal, today must be intensely practical, and must deal with cold facts and figures, and not with platitudes.

The Far East Follows.—

On June 5th, the first electrocution of a prisoner in the Far East took place at Manila. In the matter of execution, the Far East follows the West. It is regrettable that we Westerners have not given those people something better than methods of death to imitate. The date of capital punishment must soon draw to a close. It is not the business of society to take vengeance on criminals. In a Christian society, it is the business of government to help and to reform; but it is the Christian's duty to make criminals an unknown element. If we could live such lives for those who will follow us to draw good from, then this would be indeed a happy world.

England Proves a Gentleman.—

By the pact of London made among England, France and Italy in 1915, England agreed to give Italy Jubaland in recompense for any German African territory which England might acquire as a result of the war. Following the treaty of Paris, Italy held the Dodecanese Islands, in the Aegean Sea, which England wished to go to Greece, and for that cause England refused to grant the demands of Italy made in accord with the London treaty. Mussolini insisted that the two things were separate and that the Dodecanese had nothing to do with Jubaland. Ramsay MacDonald, England's Labor Premier, believing that the Mussolini government was right, has given the Jubaland to Italy. It amounts to about fifty thousand miles square of territory.

In the keeping of its agreement, England has proved a gentleman. When international relations are put upon a foundation like that recognized by the English Premier, there will be little difficulty in keeping international good will alive in the world.

Thinking Toward Peace.—

At the annual student conference at Silver Bay, Lake George, N. Y., 85 per cent of those attending the conference voted for the entrance of the United States into the world court, 80 per cent for entrance into the League of Nations, 95 per cent signified that they favored international action to outlaw war, and 70 per cent voted that, in event of another war, those who were conscientiously opposed to fighting should be permitted publicly to declare their position. The conference was held under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A., and the votes were taken after a four-day deliberation on world affairs.

This means that the younger generation are thinking toward world peace, and if the Christian Church can keep the young people thinking toward peace it must inevitably be a reality. In event of the next war, there will be many who will refuse to fight, and the Church can make them in such a vast majority that no nation can afford to declare war. It is in the clarifying of the world's thinking that we have hope, and only a right perception of the Prince of Peace can clarify that thinking. He has laid down principles for world relations which must obtain if there is to be peace. When we have discovered and applied these principles of Jesus, then we will have peace.

Democrats Nominate Davis.—

The Democratic Convention came to a close on July 9th, after more than two weeks of stormy sailing in an effort to nominate a candidate for the presidency of the United States. At the close of the convention it nominated John W. Davis, of West Virginia for President, and Charles W. Bryan, of Nebraska, as Vice-President. McAdoo and Alfred E. Smith held out until the 103d ballot, but they realized earlier that the bosses had lost control of the convention. John W. Davis is indeed the convention's nominee, and not the choice of the political bosses. The Democratic Convention was a history-making meeting, and it shows that the sense of decency and fair play is still strong in the plain people. They refused longer to be tyrannized over by bosses, and spoke their minds. This revolution, for it was a revolution, speaks well for the nation, and it was the effort of the plain people of America to make themselves heard which carried the convention to a record-breaking balloting contest.

John W. Davis is one of the nation's most prominent lawyers. He was born in 1873. He is a member of the Episcopal Church. He was graduated from Washington and Lee University at the age of nineteen, and took his law degree three years later. The college called him to a law professorship, where he remained for one year. He then returned to the plac of his birth, Clarksburg, W. Va., and became the law partner of his father. He was chosen to represent his district in the House of Delegates for one term, and he refused to enter a political career. In 1910, he was sent to Congress, became, by appointment, Solicitor-General in 1913, was sent to Berne to negotiate the exchange of prisoners with Germany, and while there was appointed by President Wilson as successor to Walter Hines Page as ambassador to England. He was nominated at the Democratic Convention four years ago, but lost the nomination of his party. On his return home in 1921, he resumed his law practice in New York City. In his public and private life, there is nothing for which he may be censured, it is said, and the Democrats feel that his nomination presages success for the party. His running-mate, Charles W. Bryan, is at present Governor of Nebraska, and is a brother of William Jennings Bryan.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Dr. W. W. Staley and Rev. H. S. Hardcastle motored up from Suffolk to Richmond on Monday. We were glad to see them.

The Chautauqua affords a fine opportunity, at a small cost, to pastors, superintendents and teachers to get inspiration and preparation for larger and better service.

The outlook for the Chautauqua is very encouraging. From all reports, the attendance will be the largest in the history of the institution and will probably double that of last year.

Writes a member of Mount Olivet, Greene County, Va.: "We are well pleased with Bro. A. R. Flowers as our pastor. The longer he stays, the better we like him. He has reached more people than any one we have had for years."

It will be a grave pity if your Sunday School, Christian Endeavor Society, Missionary Society and Church are not represented in the Chautauqua at Elon College, July 28th to August 3d, or at Bethlehem College, Wadley, Ala., August 11th to 17th.

Rev. B. J. Earp, pastor of the Newport News Christian Church, has been attending the All-South Christian Endeavor Convention in Richmond. The members of the Richmond Church enjoyed a fine sermon from Bro. Earp on Sunday morning.

Misses Lucy M. Eldredge and Pattie L. Coghill, secretaries of the Christian Church, the former of Dayton, Ohio, and the latter of Elon College, N. C., made a visit to THE CHRISTIAN SUN office this week. They were delegates to the All-South Christian Endeavor Convention.

Dr. W. T. Walters, pastor of First Christian Church, Richmond, Va., is taking the summer course at the Union Theological Seminary in New York City. He also reports Dr. R. C. Helfenstein, pastor of the Dover Church (Del.), and Dr. L. E. Smith, pastor of Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., in attendance.

At the All-South Christian Endeavor Convention, which was held in Richmond July 10-14, 1924, Mr. W. H. Baker was elected president of the Virginia State Christian Endeavor Union. Mr. Baker is an active worker in the Christian Endeavor and is a member of the Newport News Christian Church.

Dr. W. A. Harper was the speaker at the 11 o'clock service of the Raleigh Christian Church Sunday, July 6th, and reports a growing, hopeful, active congregation. His report is that the pastor, Dr. W. D. Parry, and his people are moving mightily and unitedly in the building of a house of worship that will be a credit to the capital city of this State as well as of the Christian denomination.

Long's Chapel, Alamance County, N. C., had a home-coming day and an all-day service Sunday, July 6th. This Church has recently been made over with material alterations, enlargement and paint and reseating, which make it really a new and beautiful house of worship. Rev. J. F. Apple, Elon College, N. C., is the happy and beloved pastor. Long's is now one of our most attractive country Churches.

The officers of the Virginia State Convention of Christian Endeavorers for the next year are W. H. Baker, of Newport News, president; Tracy Lloyd, of Roanoke, first vice-president; R. G. Burnet, of Charlottesville, second vice-president; Glenn Young, of Staunton, treasurer, and Mrs. L. Thayer, of Norfolk, secretary.

Rev. Roy C. Helfenstein, D. D., of Dover, Del., and Rev. McD. Howsare, of Dayton, Ohio, attended, as guests of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, the Northfield, Mass., Conference on Evangelism, June 24-26. We note with pardonable pride that both were on the program, Dr. Helfenstein on the theme "The Pastor's Part in a Modern Program of Evangelism," and Dr. Howsare led the devotionals of Thursday's session. Our Church was fortunate and blessed in being so ably and well represented at this great Conference.

July is the final month of the quarter of payment of Men and Millions. All pastors and captains should announce the same in the Churches and ask all who can do so to make some payment this month on their pledge, and at the end of the month all payments should be sent in promptly to Executive Secretary C. D. Johnston, to be credited to the Churches, or sent to J. O. Atkinson, mission secretary, to be credited to the individual. It would be fine indeed if this announcement could be made in all Churches and it would certainly help a most worthy and meritorious cause.

Bro. H. B. Hall, the hustling pastor of Palm Street Church, Greensboro, writes June 27th: "Palm Street is beginning to wake up more than ever, and the situation is getting more encouraging all the time. This is a large field, full of opportunity and usefulness. The people are greatly interested in the renovation of the Church building, and, of their own free will, have cleaned the walls of the auditorium, after working all day in the mills in the heat of last week. I had not even mentioned it to them, and they were well started on their work before I knew it; they wanted to surprise me. I assure you that it was a sweet surprise. Now we are planning to take care of the windows, gutters, roof and plastering in the class-rooms.

Last Wednesday we, as a family, were most cordially invited to join the First Church in their annual picnic at the Guilford College grounds. We all had a fine time, a fine day, and all had enough and to spare. Dr. Rowland makes a splendid host and yoke-fellow in the Master's service. The more I see him and know of him, the more I am drawn to him. When we came home from the picnic our prayer meeting was in full swing and thirty-three were present. It was conducted by a young man aged twenty. The Lord is richly blessing."

Under date of July 8th, Rev. C. D. Hunt, Wadley, Ala., gives items of Church news in his activity as follows:

"Rev. H. M. Gray and I are in a revival of at least two weeks' duration at Langsdale, Ala. The outlook is hopeful.

"The Georgia and Alabama Sunday School Convention at Oak Grove, June 28th and 29th, was a great Convention and well attended.

"We are trying to finish our building at Bethlehem by the time our Chautauqua meets. We are looking forward to the Chautauqua with anticipations of great profit and benefit.

"We had a fine meeting in North Alabama the second Sunday in June. Evidently our Church has made a great investment in that country, and we have a work we are proud of. I wish our people could see and realize what we are doing there.

"The board of trustees of Bethlehem have elected me to continue as financial secretary for the college. This calls for a good part of my time and will necessitate my giving up a majority of my Churches. We must make some arrangements for our new and very promising work at Roanoke, Ala. This point should have a pastor giving much of his time to carrying it forward. The Church there must have more time, better service and some assistance from the outside in order to go forward and meet our opportunity there."

COMMITTEE MEETING.

The Committee on Education of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference will meet on July 22, 1924, at Bethlehem Church, near Suffolk, during the Sunday School Convention. All candidates for the ministry and licentiates who have any business with the committee will please meet us at that time or write the chairman of the committee what their plans are for the future.

W. W. STALEY (Chairman).
I. W. JOHNSON.
J. L. FOSTER.

AUTOMOBILES—ROADS—CHAUTAUQUA.

With the large number of automobiles throughout the country and in practically every community, and with the splendid roads in North Carolina and many sections of Virginia, it is possible to get an automobile load from almost every Christian Church in those two States to attend the Chautauqua at Elon College, July 28th to August 3d. It would mean so much to our Sunday School work if the superintendent and three or four teachers from each school would make up a carload and go. The expense of the trip would be very little. Parents wishing to take their children in this way may do so, and if they will write the secretary in advance, large rooms will be reserved for them as far as possible.

W. T. WALTERS,
President Chautauqua.

MEMORIAL FUND.

Previously acknowledged	$ 9.00
J. F. Hilliard, Wise, N. C.	1.00
Total	$10.00

The Southern Convention at Norfolk, in May, decided to erect monuments at two historic spots, long neglected by us Christians. One is to be at the site of Old Lebanon Church, Surry County, Va., where all party and sectarian names were discarded by our Church ancestors and the name Christian only was adopted.

The other is the late resting-place of Rev. Jas. O'Kelly, near O'Kelly's Chapel, Durham County, N. C. We should have $2,000 with which to erect suitable markers. What will you give?

COMMITTEE ON MONUMENT.

(Judge J. F. West, chairman, Waverly, Va.; Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, secretary, Durham, N. C.; W. E. McClenny, Suffolk, Va.; J. O. Atkinson, treasurer, Elon College, N. C.)

P. S.: Bro. Hilliard, in remitting, writes: "I fully agree with what Bro. T. J. Holland writes. We ought not to have any trouble in raising required amounts for a cause so worthy." All donations should be sent the treasurer, and will be acknowledged through THE SUN.

J. O. ATKINSON,
Elon College, N. C. Treasurer.

FROM PALM STREET CHURCH.

On Monday evening, May 12th, we began our special meetings, assisted by Dr. C. H. Rowland, pastor of First Christian Church, Greensboro, N. C., who was with us for nearly two weeks. The rainy weather on several nights considerably lessened our congregations in numbers only, but not in interest, for every message was intensely practical, pointed, and convincing, and brought gratifying results.

There were six conversions, and others reconsecrated themselves to definite service. It was a time of uplift and blessing. Three have joined on confession, and others are expected soon to join, beside several transfers.

On the whole, the Church has been greatly benefited, interest has been quickened, and attendance increased, and the entire work has received an impetus which is very encouraging. The attendance at Sunday School on June 29th was 184, our highest mark so far, and we are hoping soon to reach the 200 mark, which is our aim.

Dr. Rowland is a real brother in the Lord, a fine yoke-fellow and comrade in service. May God abundantly bless him and his most loyal wife in their "work of faith, and labor and love" in the Master's vineyard. H. Briscoe Hall.

TO SEE OR NOT TO SEE.

As the opening date of the Chautauqua and School of Methods at Elon College approaches, we face the question, "To see or not to see?" It offers an opportunity to ministers and lay workers not offered elsewhere. It is a place to see visitors in their relations to the whole sphere of Christian activity.

Dr. Charles W. Eliot remarked the other day that there are more failures in the pulpit today than ever before, and pointed out that the cause was lack of education. It matters little how many degrees one holds, if one does not constantly grow one becomes uneducated. The Chautauqua is a place to grow.

"I make it a rule of my life to read some each day, to spend some time in the open with nature, and to rub elbows with my fellows eoch day," a prominent educator declares. We can have our books in our studies, we can meet God in nature everywhere; but no where else at once can we find the fellowship, the intimate contact with so many prominent figures of the Christian Church as at Chautauqua.

"To see or not to see," that is the question. Shall we seek the vision which Chautauqua has for us this year, and bring better messages to our people because of the fellowship and vision which we have found at Chautauqua?

OFFERS PRIZE FOR ESSAY.

A prize of one hundred dollars for the best article on the subject of the importance of federation and co-operation among the Churches is offered by Mr. E. H. Seward, a Virginia layman, who believes that the movement for Christian co-operation needs much wider popular interpretation throughout the rank and file of the Churches. This offer is made by Mr. Seward for the purpose of securing the best available statements for distribution concerning the reasons for larger unity.

The conditions of the contest, as announced by Mr. Seward, are as follows:

"In order to secure a symposium and a comprehensive compendium of the best reasons for federation and co-operation of the Churches, I will give the author of the best article on this subject a prize of one hundred dollars. The award is to be determined by a committee to be appointed by the Federal Council of the Churches. All articles must be submitted to the Federal Council of Churches, 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York, not later than December 1, 1924. The articles should not exceed 300 words in length.

"All articles submitted will be available for the use of the Federal Council, and a synopsis of the winning article is to be published in the Federal Council Bulletin."

DARDEN.

Miss Alice M. Darden, daughter of the late Dempsey L. Darden and Alice Skinner Darden, was born March 23, 1874, and died May 30, 1924, age 50 years 2 months and 6 days. She is survived by a stepmother, Mrs. E. S. Darden, Holland, Va.; three sisters—Mrs. E. L. Gray, Waverly, Va.; Mrs. J. K. Jones, Holland, Va.; Mrs. C. W. Parker, Portsmouth, Va.—and one brother, Mr. W. S. Darden, Arlington, Va.
